Mr. BRADY. I ask, Mr. President, to have inserted as a part of my remarks the views of the minority of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, signed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] and myself, on section 12 of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY, H. R. 4961, SENATE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY, ON NEW SECTION 12 (SUBSTITUTE FOR OLD SECTION 14).

On calendar day, June 22, H. R. 4961 was read twice and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The chairman of the committee appointed a subcommittee of seven to consider the bill and recommend amendments. On June 27, at a full meeting of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, after due consideration of H. R. 4961, it rejected what is known as the prohibition amendment recommended by the subcommittee and adopted House amendment forbidding the manufacture of foodstuffs into intoxicating liquors, in substance, with an exception of wine making from fruits; and another House amendment authorizing the President to commandeer distilled liquors for war purposes was made mandatory. These are sections 14 and 14a in House act—12 and 13 in Senate revision as reported in the bill now before the Senate for consideration.

On July 1 another meeting of the Agricultural Committee was called and the committee was asked to reconsider that action adopting sections 12 and 13. The same was reconsidered and a section known as section 12 was adopted, permitting the manufacture of wines and giving the President power to authorize the manufacture of beer, authority being given in subsection (b), which reads as follows:

"Whenever the President shall find that limitation, regulation, or prohibition of the use of foods, food materials, or feeds in the production of vinous, malt, or fermented liquors, or that reduction of the alcoholic content of any such liquors is essential, in order to assure an adequate and continuous supply of food or feed, he is authorized, from time to time, to prescribe and give public notice of the extent of the limitation, regulation, prohibition, or reduction so necessitated. Whenever such notice shall have been given and shall remain unrevoked, no person shall, after a reasonable time, which shall be prescribed in such notice, use any foods, food materials, or feeds in the production of such vinous, malt, or fermented liquors except in accordance with the limitations, regulations, and prohibitions prescribed in such notice, or to produce any such liquors having an alcoholic content in excess of the amount prescribed therefor in such notice. When the question arises as to whether any particular product is suitable for food or feed, the question shall be determined by the President, and his determination shall be conclusive for the purposes of this section."

The minority adhere to the previous amendments, which was at best a compromise made for the sole purpose of assisting in the speedy passage of the bill and with the hope that at a later date the committee might report a bill creating effective prohibition. We give notice that we will move to strike out sections 14 and 14a, House bill, and insert the same amendment as reported June 27, except such minor corrections in the language of the amendment. The amendment to be offered will read as follows:

"SEC. 12. That from and after 30 days from the date of the approval of this act no person shall use any foods, food materials, or feeds in the production of alcoholic liquors except for governmental, industrial, scientific, medicinal, sacramental, or other nonbeverage purposes. Any person who willfully violates this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both: Provided, That whenever the President shall find it necessary to conserve perishable fruits he is empowered to permit during the year 1917 only the use of such perishable fruits in the manufacture of vinous liquors; and when the question arises as to whether any particular fruit is perishable or nonperishable the President is authorized to determine that question, and his determination shall be conclusive for the purposes of this act: Provided further, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall be charged with the administration of this section, and he is authorized, with the approval of the President, to require the taking out of such permits, the keeping of such records, the execution of such bonds, and the observance of such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the execution of the same."

JAMES H. BRADY,
A. J. GRONNA.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have just examined the pending amendment. It seems to me that the first part of the amendment relating to the importation of distilled liquors is clearly going beyond the power of the Senate. That is provided for in the revenue bill now pending, which contains a provision prohibiting the importation into the United States of distilled liquors of any kind. That is where the provision should be—in the bill to raise revenue, which has come from the House. But I do not think, in connection with this bill, the Senate can originate revenue legislation, and the matter is entirely taken care of, as I have said, in the revenue bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, does the Senator from Massachusetts make a point of order?

Mr. LODGE. I can not make a point of order on the Constitution.

Mr. CUMMINS. But it sounded very much as though the Senator were making a point of order.

Mr. LODGE. I merely wished to call attention to the fact that we were exercising the power of originating revenue legislation, and I do not think under the Constitution the Senate can do that. I know that it is rather old-fashioned to refer to the Constitution, but the House is apt to stand upon its rights in that matter.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the House ought to stand on its rights; but this is not an amendment for raising revenue.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa has spoken once.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts for information. I have understood, from the arguments of many Senators here of long experience and great ability, that the Constitution has been suspended by the declaration of war.

Mr. LODGE. That is a possible view.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am opposed to the amendment known as the Chamberlain amendment. I am opposed to it, because I am not in favor of placing the responsibility upon the President of determining a matter which we ought to determine ourselves. The Congress of the United States knows whether or not it wants to conserve the food of this country by stopping the manufacture of beer and wines. If it wants to do that, it ought to do it, and it ought not to impose a burden of that character upon the President of the United States, who already has sufficient duties to perform, even though the President may have been in favor of having a duty of this kind placed upon him, as would appear from the original bill as introduced in the House of Representatives, which provided for placing this whole power, not only with reference to wines and beer but also with reference to distilled liquors, upon his shoulders.

Mr. President, I am opposed to the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I am opposed to it, because it does not attempt to prohibit the manufacture of foodstuffs into wine and beer. I am in favor of the House provision. I am in favor of it unamended, if it can not be amended in certain particulars. I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa to the original text of the House bill. I hope that it will be adopted. It may be that the revenue bill has a provision in it prohibiting the importation of distilled liquors, but we do not know what will be the fate of that provision on that measure. This amendment is not an amendment raising revenue, and I doubt very much whether it is subject to the constitutional objection which has been raised.

The amendment also provides that distilled liquors in bond shall not be taken out and used for beverage purposes. That ought to please the honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who made such a great speech a few days ago in behalf of the manufacturers of beer out of the foodstuffs of the country in this time of stress and sorrow. He was fearful that if we prohibited that we would drive men to drinking distilled liquor or whisky. Now, Mr. President, we want to meet that very serious objection of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts by prohibiting the use of distilled liquors for beverage purposes; and I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Iowa will have his support.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the constitutional prohibition in regard to revenue bills is that they must originate in the House of Representatives. This bill did originate in the House of Representatives. Moreover, this is not a bill to raise revenue, nor is the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa an amendment intended to raise revenue. It is a prohibitory amendment pure and simple. There is not even an incidental revenue in it.

I make these remarks because the Senator from Iowa had spoken once, and was not free to support his own amendment, and I think there can be no doubt that the amendment is perfectly constitutional.

Mr. GORE. This is a regulation of commerce, and obviously constitutional.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Iowa with regard to the purposes of his amendment. I did not hear his remarks in explanation of it. I was called out, and while I suppose he made an explanation of the purposes of his amendment, I did not hear it.

Just what object has the Senator in mind to accomplish by the amendment which forbids the withdrawal of distilled spirits in bond during the period of the war?

Mr. CUMMINS. The purpose is to limit the amount of spirits that can be consumed during the period of the war. I would rather fight the war sober than otherwise.

Mr. STONE. That is a frank statement. I understand, then, stating it in a somewhat different way but in substance the same, that the Senator's purpose is not to decrease or diminish revenue, nor is it to conserve the production and distribution of foods or foodstuffs. It is not to accomplish anything of that kind, but just simply to put upon this bill an amendment which in its essence—aye, in its declared and inevitable purpose—is to forbid the withdrawal from bond of distilled liquors for consumption during the period of the war. The Senator proposes that, notwithstanding the fact, with which he must be familiar—I would not suppose that any Senator here could be more familiar with that fact—that it would involve a loss during the war of a revenue amounting to approximately $250,000,000, which would have to be made up in some way, either by the levy of additional taxes directly on the people in some form to be collected during the current fiscal year, or by the issuing of interest-bearing nontaxable bonds. Now, there is the proposition presented by this amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the question as to whether the use of foodstuffs should be permitted in the manufacture of beer is a question of conservation. There are other reasons, I concede, sufficient to impel me, at least, to vote against such permission; but I want now for a few moments to consider it entirely and solely as a conservation proposition. As a conservation proposition it is closely related to the problem of winning this war.

In round numbers there are about 50,000,000 bushels of barley, 15,000,000 bushels of corn, and 2,000,000 bushels of rice used every year in the manufacture of beer. Mr. President, we are engaged in a war that we all want to win. We are all willing to make all kinds of sacrifices in order that we may win. The widow must give up her son to be sacrificed on the altar of his country. The wife must surrender her husband. The maid must bid farewell to her lover. We must all part from those that are near and dear to us in order that they may, if necessary, shed their lifeblood in the trenches on a foreign soil. Everybody is called upon to sacrifice something. All over the country we are now organizing the women to conserve the food supplies of the Nation. Everyone is called upon to sacrifice, to eat less, to work more, to give up all luxuries in order that the food for the Army and the Navy and those who are laboring to sustain and supply the Army and the Navy may be conserved and used to the best possible purpose. Women are doing the work of men in order that the ranks of the Army may be kept filled. In all the patriotic homes of America we are called upon to conserve and prevent the waste of food in order that we may be able to feed the soldiers and contribute to the food supply of our allies. Every patriotic citizen is called upon to do his utmost in the production and conservation of human food in order to win this war. He must give up all his luxuries and many of the comforts of life. He must not hesitate to make any sacrifice in this hour of his country's distress. We are facing a world shortage of food. Disaster and defeat will be ours unless we do our part in conserving the food of the world. The major part of the food must come from America. Is this predicament is it asking too much to demand that men should give up their beer? It may mean the difference between victory and defeat. Can patriotic men refuse to make that much of a sacrifice?

Why is it that we demand of all of our people these sacrifices, and yet when it comes to the manufacture of beer we apply a different rule? If we must give up the lives of those we love, if we must surrender the luxuries and the comforts of life, if we must all strive in every way possible to produce a little more food, why should not those who make beer be called upon to suspend their operations in order that the food that is used in the manufacture of beer may be utilized for the sustaining of human life?

Mr. President, it seems to me that it should be done alone on the ground of conservation, to conserve the food products of the country, in order to feed not only ourselves and our soldiers but the soldiers and the people of our allies. How many loaves of bread would these millions of bushels of grain make? How many hungry children would they feed? How far would they go toward sustaining human life where it is imperatively necessary in order that success may come to our arms?

It is argued here that those who have been in the habit for years of drinking beer will object to it. Why it is even said by some that they will strike. I do not believe it. I will not impute to the laboring men of the country who drink beer such a lack of patriotism. Can it be possible that men will refuse to give up the pleasure, the comfort, or even the benefit, if you want to put it that way—although I do not concede that it is a benefit—of drinking beer when by continuing to do so they will lessen the efficiency of the American Army and the efficiency of the armies of our allies and make it harder for the people who are not in the Army to sustain human life?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Nebraska has expired. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. On it I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], but I am at liberty to vote upon this bill and the amendments. I vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I announce my pair and its transfer as before and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a pair upon this question with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. I therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote on this subject, I would vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] and vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when Mr. WEEKS's name was called). My colleague [Mr. WEEKS] is unavoidably absent from the city. His pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] has already been announced. If present, my colleague would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. STONE (after having voted in the negative). I desire to change my vote from "nay" to "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON. I again announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. KIRBY].

The result was announced—yeas 54, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—54.

Ashurst	Johnson, S. Dak.	New	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Smoot
Borah	Kellogg	Overman	Sterling
Brady	Kendrick	Owen	Stone
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Page	Swanson
Cummins	King	Phelan	Thompson
Curtis	Knox	Poindexter	Townsend
Fernald	La Follette	Ransdell	Trammell
Fletcher	McCumber	Robinson	Vardaman
Gore	McKellar	Shafroth	Walsh
Gronna	McNary	Sheppard	Watson
Hale	Martin	Sherman	Wolcott
Hollis	Myers	Shields
Johnson, Cal.	Nelson	Smith, Mich.

NAYS—30.

Bankhead	Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Thomas
Brandegee	Gerry	McLean	Tillman
Broussard	Harding	Newlands	Underwood
Calder	Hitchcock	Penrose	Wadsworth
Colt	Husting	Pomerene	Warren
Culberson	James	Reed	Williams
Dillingham	Jones, N. Mex.	Smith, Ga.
France	Lewis	Smith, Md.

NOT VOTING—12.

Fall	Hardwick	Pittman	Smith, Ariz.
Gallinger	Hughes	Saulsbury	Sutherland
Goff	Kirby	Simmons	Weeks

So Mr. CUMMINS's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I wish to ask whether a motion to reconsider will be in order at any time during the consideration of the amendment covered by the special unanimous-consent order of the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that a motion to reconsider would be in order at any time while the bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CUMMINS. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. I desire to say that before the pending matter—that is, section 12—is disposed of, I shall desire to make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I did not hear the early part of the suggestions of the Senator from Missouri. Does he move to reconsider, or merely give notice of his intent so to do?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He gives notice of his intention to move to reconsider before the amendment is finally passed on.

Mr. STONE. I think that is what I will do; but I asked the Chair a moment ago, and I understood the Chair to state that I could offer a motion to reconsider at any time while the bill was in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair expressed the opinion that the Senator has a right to do that.

Mr. STONE. I understood the Chair to say that; and I said I thought I would do so before section 12 was finally disposed of.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I hope the Chair will not forget the unanimous-consent agreement; and I doubt whether a motion to reconsider this particular amendment would be in order after the final vote upon this section, as provided for in the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, what is the pending question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question, if the Chair can remember it, is the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the committee amendment.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I move to amend the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas by inserting a comma after the word "distilled" at the end of line 3, and inserting after the comma the words "vinous, malt, or fermented."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas, at the end of line 3, after the word "distilled," it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "vinous, malt, or fermented," so that it will read:

From and after 30 days from the date of the approval of this act, no person shall use any foods, fruits, food materials, or feeds in the production of distilled, vinous, malt, or fermented liquors, except for governmental, industrial, scientific, or medicinal purposes.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, there is a great movement on in this country to bring about economy in everything during the prosecution of the war, and especially economy in the use of foodstuffs. We have been advised from high sources to waste nothing, especially to waste no food, to eat less, and to see that no more food is put on the table than will be consumed. We are urged to have wheatless days, wheatless meals, meatless days and meatless meals. The good housewives of the country are signing pledges to economize in the household in every way possible, to restrict as much as possible within the limits of reason and the bounds of health the amount of food prepared and consumed. Cards by the hundreds of thousands and millions are being distributed all over the country, and the signing of those pledges has begun here in Washington, the fountain head of our Government. The foremost ladies in the land are signing those cards, thus pledging themselves to economy in the use, preparation, and consumption of food. It will rapidly spread all over this city and over all the country.

I understand that about 112,000,000 bushels of grain are consumed in this country annually in the manufacture of beer; and yet, while we are binding ourselves to the strictest economy in the matter of food, in preparing and eating less and wasting none, if the amendment presented by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] prevails we will be devoting 112,000,000 bushels of grain per year to the manufacture of beer in this country. It seems to me it would be highly inconsistent for housewives and families to be grinding themselves down to the last ounce of food that will maintain health and strength, and then to throw away 112,000,000 bushels of grain in the manufacture of beer.

It reminds me a good deal of a man saying to his family: "Now, mother, you must prepare just as little food as possible; you must give the children just as little food as necessary to keep them alive; you must mend and patch their old clothes; you must deny yourself many of the comforts of life," and they act upon his advice, and then he goes out and spends 50 cents or a dollar each and every day for beer. I think that would be inconsistent and farcical. It seems to me we would be acting upon the same principle if we should put that plan into practice on a broader scale by adopting, unamended, the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas. We should be consistent in all we do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator that everybody is expected to make sacrifices except the man who has a thirst for liquor or the man who owns a brewery.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as I understand it, this amendment extends to beer and wine the prohibition of the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas which is confined to distilled liquors. If I am wrong the Senator from Montana will correct me.

Mr. MYERS. That is correct, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON. The statement of the Senator from Massachusetts is correct. If the amendment of the Senator from Montana is agreed to, it will be substantially the House of Representatives' provision which forbids the use of food material and feeds in the manufacture of either distilled spirits or malt or vinous liquors. I am unable to agree to the amendment which the Senator from Montana has offered. In presenting my amendment to the Senate I discussed the fact that in order to effect what appears to be a fair and reasonable settlement of this controversy the President suggested, and the representatives of the Anti-Saloon League agreed to the elimination of malt and vinous liquors from the bill. That, of course, does not bind anyone upon the subject of national prohibition or other legislation that may hereafter arise.

The necessity for the speedy passage of this measure has been emphasized by many Senators as well as by the President. I am aware that some criticism of the President's action has been interposed here this afternoon on both sides of the chamber. I do not believe the men who represent the prohibition, who consented to the suggestion the President made, or anyone else who has fairly considered the subject, will reach the conclusion that the President did anything else than what he considered to be his patriotic duty in order to relieve the country from the perils that now threaten it by reason of the speculation in food products which are necessary to maintain our Army abroad and our people at home.

I express the hope under these circumstances that the amendment of the Senator from Montana may not be adopted.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I did not vote on the last amendment because I could not vote on it and maintain a consistent stand. I will vote for a bill separate and apart from this bill that shall provide for bone-dry prohibition in this country during the war. I have heretofore gone as far as I could on this matter under the constitutional authority of Congress.

But I know this that these prohibition amendments are being voted for by certain Senators here not because they want prohibition, nor because they expect prohibition in any form whatever, but solely for the purpose of killing this bill. There are Senators in this body who have spoken against the House provision and have spoken against provisions such as we just carried, and yet they voted for the amendment just now. Why? It was not because they wanted it, it was not because they ever expected it to be a law, and therefore it must have been because they sought an excuse to filibuster against the passage of this bill.

There are two classes of Senators in this body who are opposing the bill. One of these is opposing it because they are opposed to prohibition. The other class is opposing it for the reason that they resent any Government control over the business interests of this country. Neither one of these classes has sufficient votes to prevent a cloture bill from passing, but both classes acting together have more than one-third of this body and can prevent any vote from being obtained on the bill at any time. That is the whole situation.

I am going to vote against the tacking of a beer-prohibition amendment on this bill, because I believe that by the defeat of such amendment we will obtain the necessary support for the bill of that class who are against prohibition. We will then get two-thirds of the votes of this body, and it requires two-thirds of the votes to terminate debate and obtain a final vote.

As it requires two-thirds of this body to stop debate, it can only be accomplished by dividing the opposition to the bill. This fact is well known to practically every Senator on this floor.

I know that there are thousands of families in this country who are the victims of alcohol, but there are 100,000 times as many who are suffering to-day by reason of the criminally exorbitant price of food.

Much as I would like to crush out the effect of liquor in this country, I would far rather to-day place in the reach of the poor people of this country the food that they must have. This fight is now on between those who seek to immediately grant food to the poor and those who are opposed to the bill or who hold prohibition above human life. That is the thing we are facing now, and I regret to say that some Senators on this floor who are to-day voting to put prohibition amendments on the bill will later be found using such amendments, if they are adopted, as an excuse for a filibuster against the bill. I ask the country to watch and see if some of the men here who are voting to tack on this bill prohibition amendments do not do everything in their power to prevent the bill from ever coming to a vote. If that is so, then their votes are insincere and are given for the very purpose of defeating the bill, and for no other purpose.

I regret to see some of those who have charge of the bill on the floor here voting for prohibition amendments that they will later move to strike out. It is an inconsistency that the country will not understand, and it is their own fault if the country does not understand them. There is not a Senator here who does not know that if you tack prohibition on this bill it means the death of the bill, because more than one-third of the body are opposed to prohibition and will do everything in their power to prevent prohibition from being maintained. I but seek the passage of the bill. I will vote for the bill with or without prohibition amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Nevada has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator in my time if he is not aware of the fact that the amendment which has just been adopted upon the liquor traffic, if my information is correct, does not affect rectified spirits at all? Consequently its operation would be only upon the manufacture of artificial liquor and a monopoly of the whisky business of the country during the war.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have heard it said often that there are Senators who are going to filibuster against this bill; in fact, that the prohibitionists are going to filibuster against it. If it is going to be filibustered against by somebody else——

Mr. PITTMAN. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I have heard it said repeatedly by various classes of Senators that Senators were going to filibuster against the bill. I have never believed it. I do not believe it now.

Mr. President, I have the greatest respect for those who are opposed to the so-called prohibition provision. They are just as loyal as the other Senators are to the country. They are just as anxious to give honest legislation; they are viewing it from their viewpoint. But, Mr. President, to say that if prohibition is tacked on the bill it means the defeat of it, because more than a third of the Senators are opposed to prohibition, it seems to me, is making a statement that is without any foundation whatever.

There has been no debate on the bill that has not been legitimate. Although I have not agreed with those who are opposing parts of it and some who are opposing the entire bill, I must concede that they have made logical and able arguments from their standpoint.

Are we to get frightened because some Senators who are opposed to prohibition threaten a filibuster? I think it is only a bluff. There will be no filibuster. Let us settle the question on its merits. I certainly would not want to admit that the liquor interests were so strong that they could hold up such important legislation, using the United States Senate as the instrument.

The President is likewise entitled to his view, but he should not be allowed to frighten anybody. He said in a letter:

> Time is of the essence; and yet it has become evident that heated and protracted debate will delay the passage of the bill indefinitely if the provisions affecting the manufacture of beer and wine are retained and insisted upon.

Mr. President, somebody ought to tell the President that he is mistaken; that he is misinformed. That was the argument the President used in his letter. It had the effect of changing the Agricultural Committee. That committee, after extended hearings, put in a provision that prohibited the use of foodstuffs in the manufacture of beer; but when the President wrote that letter, and after it had been circulated, the committee met again and undid all of their work along that line. They went up the hill as prohibitionists, but when the President spoke they went down on the other side with their prohibition knocked out. They heard the President; and it is evident that at least some Senators recognized the master's voice.

Mr. President, this prohibition question ought to be determined on this measure upon its merits. No man ought to be induced to vote one way or the other through fear of defeat of the bill if some particular thing happens.

As far as I am concerned, if somebody wants to filibuster they must take the responsibility. I do not believe there is any Member of this body who has any intention or idea of filibustering. He will probably debate the bill legitimately and honestly and from his viewpoint bring out what argument he may think has a proper bearing upon the question; but there is not any danger, in my judgment, of the bill not passing. I think a large majority of the Senators are for it.

I am going to vote for it myself even though I expect to vote for a good many of the pending amendments, whether prohibition is put on or whether it is left off. I believe that the effect of putting on or taking off the prohibition amendment will not control on the final vote half a dozen votes. At least, the fate of the bill does not depend upon it. It is hardly fair, it seems to me, for Senators to say if we put on this amendment we defeat the bill, and try to induce those who are anxiously trying to bring about the passage of the bill to vote against such an amendment.

Mr. President, while I am on my feet I want to put into the RECORD some correspondence. I have a letter from Gustave Hafer, the president of the Farmers Feed Co., of New York City. This is a company that deals in feed products, and makes a specialty of brewers' wet and dried grains. He wrote a letter making an argument against the prohibition of food products in the manufacture of beer. I consider it a very able argument. It is scientific in its nature.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I have two telegrams which I have selected from a great number which I have received. I am in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana. I do not desire at this time on this amendment to take the time of the Senate, but I send to the desk two telegrams urgently in favor of the manufacture of malt liquors and the use of the same, and I ask the Secretary to read not only the body of the telegrams but the names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLIS in the chair). Without objection, the Secretary will read the telegrams.

The Secretary read as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

Remember the laboring class; a glass of beer is invigorating after a day's hard work.

Alex Jankowski, William Kavalikas, Henry Telkes, F. Kazimir, F. Kruting, P. Dubikaitis, Charles Jankaitis, P. Sirios, C. Christman, John Chovanec, W. Michalowski, M. Somson, August Graff, G. Kurniakop, W. Facklan.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator L. Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

We and our wives and grown-up children desire a glass of beer with our meals. Don't take it away from us.

P. Vishontas, Charles Luzaitis, N. Faguttia, Peter Rosja, J. Woluzis, T. Pappas, G. Boichardt, S. Bousami, Ed Thomenz, Albert Pohl, F. Zopletal, F. Teister, B. Suk, R. Eral, M. Segdonna, M. Miller, F. Fiedler, S. Ewalt.

Mr. GORE. I merely wish to say, Mr. President, that I was under the impression the proceedings of the Senate were conducted in English.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to have the pending amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read it.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] proposes to amend the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] as follows: After the word distilled and before the word "liquors" insert a comma and the words "vinous, malt, or fermented," so that it will read——

Mr. STONE. Yes; I know how it would read. Of course that amendment, if agreed to and written into the law, would peremptorily end the manufacture not only of distilled spirits but of fermented and vinous beverages.

Mr. President, I am not going to debate this at this time. I say at this time I am not going to undertake in the four or five minutes at my disposal to state my objections to that scheme, but, to my thinking, the proposition is so absolutely indefensible that it ought to be debated and must and will be debated in the Senate before the bill passes if it is agreed to here now. That ought to be understood.

I am not willing that a bill containing a proposal of that kind should be enacted into law right off the bat, so to speak. I am not going to discuss it. I mean later, if the occasion should unhappily arise—I say unhappily, perhaps I should say unwisely projected here—I shall debate it at such length as I please, and I think there are other Senators who will do the same thing.

Mr. President, I believe the President of the United States is absolutely right. I want to ask gentlemen here—I will not say upon this side or that, for it is not a partisan question—I want to ask Senators whether the President was right when he asked that the question of fermented and vinous manufactures should be eliminated from the bill in the interest of expediency if nothing else, and he put expediency on the ground of patriotism?

We did not enter into an agreement by which we are bound to vote upon section 12 with a limitation on debate of five minutes; but if a proposal like that of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] is written into this section I will be heard from a little later on. I repeat that the request, the urgent invocation to the Congress of the President, based on high principles of patriotism——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Missouri has expired.

Mr. STONE. I am sorry, for I had not quite finished.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I intend to vote against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], not because I am opposed to prohibition, for I believe in it, and the people of my State have adopted it, but I place the national crisis above the wishes of any class of citizens in my State.

Mr. President, in the great crisis that confronts us now, it seems to me there are enough delicate questions to be met and overcome without injecting into the situation a provision in this bill which will antagonize a great many of the people of our country, particularly in the larger cities. That one question might be eliminated from this crisis, and we ought to eliminate it, if it is possible to do so. The President has undertaken wisely to eliminate it; the Senate committee has undertaken to eliminate it by absolutely prohibiting the use of food products in the manufacture of distilled spirits, and leaving to the discretion of the President the question of permitting the use of such products in the manufacture of malt and vinous liquors, in such quantities and at such times as his judgment dictates.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the temperance people and the prohibitionists as well, one of whom I happen to be, have an opportunity to fortify their position in this country for prohibitory legislation by voting for the amendment as reported out of the committee by me and as the action of the committee. The prohibitionists have an opportunity to strengthen and fortify the prohibition sentiment by leaving to the President the power of controlling the situation during this crisis; and if the President does, as I think he will do—for he is an astute, wise, and a patriotic man—control the manufacture of malt and vinous liquors and the alcoholic contents thereof, at the end of three years he can practically put the American people upon a nonstimulating beverage, and eventually bring about prohibition in its best, in its wisest, and in its most statesmanlike form.

For that reason, Mr. President, and not because I am in favor of the manufacture of alcoholic liquors of any kind, I am going to vote against the amendment of the Senator from Montana, in the hope that the Senate will in its wisdom adopt the proposition which was reported out of the committee and for the committee by myself.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, a few days ago the honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] prophesied a rebellion if this provision were inserted in the bill. He said that the laboring men were the ones who were likely to rebel. That was a libel upon labor and the laboring man. Mr. President, the people of this country now see where the rebellion comes from. We have a rebellion threatened here upon the floor of the Senate; it is a remarkable spectacle, and yet I am glad that it has been presented. I am glad that the people of the country have the declaration made here on the floor of the Senate by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], showing clearly where the rebellion will come from.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I can not yield, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington declines to yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator misrepresents——

Mr. JONES of Washington. The RECORD will speak for itself.

Mr. PITTMAN. I rise to a question of privilege.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has no right to interrupt the Senator for a question of privilege. He will be recognized after the Senator from Washington has concluded.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator has misrepresented my position.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The RECORD will speak for itself. I certainly do not desire to misrepresent him. The Senator from Nevada, as I remember, stated that there were a third at least of Senators on this floor who would not consent to a conclusion of the debate on this bill, and who would not vote for a cloture resolution under which debate could be closed. If that is not rebellion or a threat of rebellion against the action of a majority of the Senate I do not know what it is.

The Senator from Missouri, after he had joined in the unanimous-consent agreement on yesterday that not only should we vote upon section 12 but that, after we had done so in Committee of the Whole, it should not be reserved for the consideration of the Senate, makes a threat. If that is not rebellion, I do not know what it is. I am glad, however, that the people of the country have it shown clearly upon the RECORD who it is who propose to defeat this bill unless their will is incorporated in it.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] referred to the Anti-Saloon League. I am not here to speak for them; I am here as a Senator; I am not acting under their direction. I am discharging my duty as a Senator from the State of Washington, but, Mr. President, I do not think the Senator's statement with reference to the temperance organizations of the country was just exactly fair to them. I know the Senator did not intend it to be unfair, but the President appealed to these organizations. Instead of coming to the Senate or to Congress in an official way and appealing to the Representatives of the people here, who have sworn to do their duty, he went to outside organizations and appealed to them as patriotic citizens to withdraw their efforts in behalf of certain legislation. They patriotically said they would agree to do that, but they did not agree to support any legislation that might be proposed here. They did not agree to the proposition of the Senator from Arkansas; it was not presented to them, but they did say this:

> We are aware of the threats made by the friends of beer and wine in the Senate of an indefinite and protracted filibuster against these provisions of the bill. We beg to assure you that as patriotic Americans, determined to uphold you as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy in the present war, we will not for our constituencies offer any obstruction to the prompt passage of the food-control bill.

Mr. President, they are not offering any obstruction to the passage of this bill. The Senators on this floor in favor of temperance are not offering any obstruction to the passage of this bill. We agreed upon yesterday to a proposition submitted by the friends of the brewery interests, and now it is before the Senate under that agreement. It is for a majority of the Senate to say what legislation they desire and to represent their constituencies and the great majority sentiment of the people of this country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] might be excused, because of his fanaticism, if he had not known how the Senator from Nevada stands on this question. The Senator from Nevada has voted on prohibition measures in this body in the presence of the Senator from Washington, and has on every and all occasions in the last few years voted on the prohibition side. Therefore, if there was any doubt as to the meaning of the Senator from Nevada in the remarks he made, and had the Senator from Washington desired to be just in his expression, he would have resolved the doubt at least along the line it was natural to resolve it. He should have asked the Senator from Nevada what he meant by his statement if he were in any doubt.

The Senator from Washington knows that the Senator from Nevada stated here that he would vote for absolute prohibition, and that statement stands in the record of my remarks. I stated very plainly here that the only reason why I was voting against attaching this prohibition amendment to this bill was because I believed it was intended to kill the bill, and whether it was intended in that way or not it would kill the bill. That is what I said, and I stated that I refrained from voting upon the Cummins amendment because it would be inconsistent for me to vote against the Cummins amendment when I favored that kind of legislation and yet later vote to eliminate that character of legislation from the bill because I believe it will be destructive of this bill. My whole position in this matter must have been understood. It was understood by the other Senators in this body, but it seems that there are some here who are uncharitable to others whenever their position is opposed at all. I do not care for that; I do not care for the criticism of the Senator from Washington. It neither injures me in the eyes of my people, nor in my self-respect; but I regret that at this time, when there are thousands of poor people throughout this country barely able to get sustenance, that this matter should be dragged in here for months and months of debate, to satisfy the vanity and the love of publicity of some Members of this body. It is to be deplored.

My position is known here. I say that the fight against this bill to-day is furthered on one side by intent and on the other by ignorance. There are those here who openly have declared on this floor that they are opposed to any form of control of big business in this country through the means of Government instrumentalities. There are others here who have time and time again declared to the country their unalterable opposition to prohibition, and they have demonstrated by their actions that they will go to any length, that they will filibuster for any length of time, to defeat a bill that contains such a provision.

We know now that that which urged the President of the United States was the deplorable condition throughout this country to-day; we know that that which actuated the President of the United States was patriotism of the highest character—a patriotism that can be realized by a man of intelligence, but can not be comprehended by those lacking in that respect. I would rather follow him blindly than to follow some of the Senators in this body even after months and months of their harangues and debates; but I do not have to follow him blindly. I know that there are over one-third of the Members of this body, including those who are bitter antiprohibitionists and those who are bitter anti-Government controllers, who would prevent this bill ever coming to a vote. I am not one of those, and none of my actions in the past would justify any such accusation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Nevada has expired.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to make an explanation. The Chair was informed before the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] was recognized a second time, that the Senator's previous speech was on the Cummins amendment; otherwise the Senator would not have been recognized, and his being recognized is not to be taken as a precedent for anyone else being recognized on a question of personal privilege.

Mr. STONE. I desire to rise for the same reason.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri has spoken once on this amendment. So has the Senator from Washington.

Mr. STONE. I rise to a question of privilege.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can not be recognized under the unanimous-consent agreement for a question of personal privilege.

Mr. STONE. The Chair did recognize another Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was under a mistake, and if any Senator had objected the Chair would not have recognized that Senator.

Mr. STONE. Very well; I do not care.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada proceeded by unanimous consent.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, as I understand, the amendment before the Senate is the one proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], which would, in effect, forbid the manufacture of distilled, vinous, and malt liquors in any form; in other words, it would serve the purposes of those who desire to make the country "bone dry" not only during the period of the war but for all time.

The President of the United States at this stage has ventured his views, and I submit that the President of the United States is in the possession of information of the most serious and impelling character; otherwise he would not have taken part in a controversy of this kind, certainly not for protecting either vinous or malt liquors for their own sake. He had in mind the effect of invading the rights of the people with respect to their habits of life.

The Constitution is the protection of the people, and the Constitution does not tolerate the invasion of personal rights in this manner, as I take it, because the law frowns upon the doing indirectly what can not be done directly. There has been proposed a constitutional amendment by which the manufacture of all liquors will be barred in this country, and that doubtless will come up sooner or later; but now the advocates of that constitutional amendment are seeking by mere legislation to accomplish the same end, which, I contend, is something which, in the essence and in the spirit, is not jurisdictional for the Congress.

The President is of the opinion that the masses of the people of this country—and they may be very remote from the Senate and they have not always had spokesmen in Washington—consider the proposed legislation an invasion of their rights, in so far as it affects their daily habit of drinking beer with their luncheons or their dinners, and as well an intolerable interference; and they laugh derisively at the claim that this is a free land which denies them a privilege which is enjoyed in the autocratic countries from which they came.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] proclaimed yesterday that he was a "bone dry" advocate, and, I think, as a matter of pleasantry he introduced telegrams, appended to which were the names of some of our foreign fellow citizens who have done much to develop industrially the United States and who should be considered in all measures of legislation. I would be sorry to believe that the Senator had been imposed upon; but it does not detract one iota from the appeal which was made because there were appended to those telegrams unpronounceable names.

There are involved these two questions—and I know my time is very brief—one the destruction of a valuable industry without compensation—something repugnant to the ideas of equity of all good men. This property has yielded vast revenues to the Government, and which is to be destroyed at one fell blow. One hundred and forty million dollars, under the new revenue bill, will be yielded by beer and five or six million dollars by wine—incomes which we need very much at this crisis.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from California has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, shortly after the present session of Congress began I was asked by representatives of the press as to the course I intended to pursue in reference to prohibition. I replied that I would continue to do everything I could for prohibition; that I believed it especially desirable as a war measure, but that I would not support prohibition or anything else to the extent of interfering with the plans of the President for the conduct of the war. When, therefore, the President publicly announced that it had become evident to him that insistence on the wine and beer provisions of the bill to conserve the Nation's food supply, as reported by the Senate Committee on Agriculture, would delay this great measure indefinitely—a measure the immediate passage of which the President said he considered as of vital consequence to the safety and defense of the Nation—I concluded, so far as I was concerned, that I would not insist on those provisions, but would fight for complete, unqualified prohibition in connection with some other measure or in the form of separate legislation. The present bill does not by any means offer the only opportunity of voting for prohibition during the present session. I propose, so far as my voice and vote may go, to hold up the hands of Woodrow Wilson in the management of this war.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I expect to vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. If I correctly understand his amendment, I am in full accord therewith. I do not like to have anyone question my patriotism because I vote in this way, for I am voting in accordance with my own judgment and conscience and in accordance with what I believe to be the will and wishes of a very large majority of the people of the State which I have the honor in part to represent.

I have taken very little time in the discussion of this measure, as you all know, and I have made it a point from the beginning not to ask for the publication in the RECORD of a single telegram or letter of the many I have received on this bill; but I have received a letter recently which considers this question solely upon the ground of food and labor conservation, a letter, by the way, written by a man who confides that he sometimes drinks. From the viewpoint of labor conservation he certainly has valuable views, and I am going to read them, if my time will permit. The letter is very brief. It is from the manager of the Jones & Lamson Machine Co., of Springfield, Vt., one of the largest, the most vigorous, and most prosperous of the business corporations of Vermont. It is a corporation composed of men of the very highest character, and its manager, Mr. Flanders, I personally know to be a man of great executive and business ability.

I read from Mr. Flanders's letter:

SPRINGFIELD, VT., June 26, 1917.

Hon. CARROLL S. PAGE,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The backwoods Vermonter has no convenient way of knowing what goes on in Congress other than through the reports in the daily papers. I see by the New York Times that the food bill has come to the Senate from the House with a drastic prohibition clause attached to it. I see also that there is danger of this being modified or mollified or nullified in the Senate. That would be without any question a serious mistake.

In giving my reasons for asking you to use all your wisdom and energy in retaining a drastic measure of prohibition in this bill, let me state first that I have never called myself nor allowed myself to be called a teetotaler. I drink beer occasionally, and am particularly fond of some varieties of wines, though I do not often indulge in them. I feel, however, that these indulgences on my part are a matter of very small importance as compared with the following considerations relating to prohibition as a war measure:

The first and most important advantage of it is, of course, that it will release a large volume of food that is urgently needed. Grains employed in the manufacture of malt or spirituous liquors, even when the brewers' grains are afterwards used for feeding stock, do not finally bring into the human system anything like the amount of food value they would bring if used as foods in the first place. There is, of course, no argument about this matter.

The thought in the next paragraph is one to which I wish the Senators would give especial attention:

The second argument for war prohibition relates to its effect on the labor market. We and every other industry are feeling the labor shortage very keenly, and will feel it still more when we come to remove 500,000 men from productive work and put them into the nonproductive activity of war. The hundreds of thousands of men engaged in the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors should be the first source of supply drawn on to fill in this tremendous hole in useful industry. They will thus be removed from labor that is almost invariably useless and harmful, to activities that will be of the utmost importance for the maintenance of our existence as a nation.

In the third place, prohibition will affect not merely the quantity of labor available, but also its quality as well. No one knows better than a large employer of labor the immense amount of mental incapacity, bodily ill health, and unreliability in working time caused by liquor drinking, and this condition can be seen as plainly in a so-called prohibition locality like our own as it can anywhere.

This brings me to a fourth consideration, which is purely a personal one, namely, that this business of trying to make a pretense of keeping up prohibition against liquor selling in a community surrounded by liquor selling, liquor manufacturing, and liquor dealing areas is a colossal farce. It is one that sickens every decent Christian citizen every time he looks into it, and it is thrust under his nose so strongly that he has to look into it whether he wants to or not. It would be a great personal satisfaction, despite my liking for some of the lighter forms of alcoholic drinks, to have its manufacture absolutely shut off.

Lastly, let me say with all earnestness that no one, except those interested, are fooled for a moment by the plea that the business is needed for the sake of furnishing taxes. It would be ten times preferable to take the tax raised by this industry and put it directly onto income—the burden would be less heavy in the long run. The wasteful consumption of food materials, the diminishing of the quantity of labor available for the necessities of the war, and the depreciation in the quality of that labor impose a tax infinitely greater than the few millions of dollars of revenue obtained from the business itself.

Yours, sincerely,

RALPH E. FLANDERS.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I have here a letter which I desire to read to the Senate, written by Hon. John M. Olin, of Wisconsin, one of the foremost lawyers of Wisconsin, if not of the Northwest, and a man who has been more prominent in the prohibition movement in Wisconsin than any other one man in the State. I received from him a letter dated June 26, as follows:

MADISON, WIS., June 26, 1917.

Senator PAUL O. HUSTING,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HUSTING: I am inclosing herewith copy of a letter which I have just dictated to the chairman of the prohibition national committee, and am also including the circular letter which I got from such chairman, thinking that you might be interested in the matter.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN M. OLIN.

The inclosure is as follows:

JUNE 26, 1917.

Mr. VIRGIL G. HINSHAW,
Chairman Prohibition National Committee,
326 West Madison Street, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of June 21, asking contribution toward meeting expense of securing petitions, etc., in favor of prohibition of the manufacture of any intoxicating liquors, including wine and beer.

I have for some 40 years or more been in favor of absolute prohibition, but I can not aid in any such movement as is being made at Washington, the object of which is to attach to a bill for the regulation of food, etc., a provision in effect establishing absolute prohibition during the continuance of the war. I do not believe in any such method as is here being pursued and recommended by your circular letter. The result of such legislation at this time, put through in this way, would be, I think, disastrous.

The bill, as shown by the vote in the House, is not an honest one, or at least is not being advocated honestly. I refer here to the vote in favor of the bill in the House by those who are known as "wets." Why does this element in Congress vote for this bill? This question is very easily answered. They are voting for the bill for the purpose of harassing the President in the measures that should be taken to prepare for and prosecute the war. I hope sincerely that your movement will not succeed.

Prohibition should stand upon its own merits. If you desire to ask for a prohibition amendment at this time, then have a resolution introduced to that effect so that the different Members of Congress can vote squarely on the question one way or the other without tying the matter up to any other phase of legislation.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN M. OLIN.

Mr. President, I believe that is the view held by a great many people of the United States who favor prohibition. They object to having it considered at this time or attached to this bill for fear it may delay, hinder, or defeat this bill. I believe that Mr. Olin agrees with the chairman of the Anti-Saloon League. I have stated before that I am not in favor of prohibition, but if or when the time comes when the barley or other cereals needed in the manufacture of beer are necessary for the purpose of food conservation I shall vote for it. I can not believe, however, that that is necessary now, nor can I bring myself to vote for it when the effect of this bill will be not to conserve the food but merely to shift it into the markets of our allies, who have not yet seen fit to prohibit the brewing of beer. Now, I find no fault with that. I cite that, however, as evidence which convinces me that the time has not yet arrived when it is necessary for the United States to do something which the allies by their actions say is not necessary. If that is the case, I do not believe we are justified in bringing about the disastrous results that this amendment would bring to people intimately connected with this industry, or to disarrange or put awry the domestic conditions of this country.

There are two kinds of people in this country, some favoring prohibition and some opposing it, and they are very evenly divided. I do not believe in rolling the apple of discord into the arena at this time, to divide the people, when it seems to me the vital thing to do is to cement the people together and not drive them apart. I do not look to see anybody rebel, no matter what happens in this matter, but I do not believe in promoting the possibility or probability of any such thing.

I stand by the President on this matter. He has taken this thing under advisement, and he believes, and even those who are strongly in favor of prohibition agree with him, that it would be unwise at this time to fasten a prohibition bill on a food bill, which may result in its defeat or its indefinite postponement. The thing in which I am vitally interested is the winning of this war, and I am going to vote for anything and everything that will promote that end.

Now, this proposition as a prohibition measure has no place in a food bill. As a food-conservation measure it would be futile, inasmuch as our allies are now using the grain in the same way we are now using it. Thus no benefit to anybody could come of it. The sacrifices of those who would suffer disaster thereby would be fruitless and the injury done them wanton. Its passage would hinder, delay, if not defeated, the food bill, which is particularly calculated to remedy serious public ills whereby millions and millions of people are suffering and in want because of these delays. The defeat of the food bill would spell irretrievable disaster. The President is right in asking to have the prohibition question set aside rather than imperil the bill, and that he is right is acknowledged by some of the warmest and most zealous prohibitionists both in and outside this Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Wisconsin has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McKELLAR. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair and its transfer as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] and vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when Mr. WEEKS's name was called). My colleague [Mr. WEEKS] is detained from the Senate and is paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. If my colleague were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have a pair on this subject with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON. I again announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. KIRBY].

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 52—as follows:

YEAS—34.

Ashurst	Brady	Dillingham	Gronna
Beckham	Cummins	Fernald	Hale
Borah	Curtis	Gore	Johnson, S. D.

Jones, Wash.	Myers	Sherman	Townsend
Kellogg	Nelson	Shields	Trammell
Kendrick	Norris	Smith, Mich.	Vardaman
Kenyon	Page	Smoot	Wolcott
McCumber	Poindexter	Sterling
McKellar	Shafroth	Thompson

NAYS—52.

Bankhead	Hollis	New	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Husting	Newlands	Smith, Md.
Broussard	James	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Calder	Johnson, Cal.	Owen	Stone
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Penrose	Swanson
Colt	King	Phelan	Thomas
Culberson	Knox	Pittman	Tillman
Fletcher	La Follette	Pomerene	Underwood
France	Lewis	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Reed	Walsh
Gerry	McLean	Robinson	Warren
Harding	McNary	Sheppard	Watson
Hitchcock	Martin	Simmons	Williams

NOT VOTING—10.

Fall	Hardwick	Saulsbury	Weeks
Gallinger	Hughes	Smith, Ariz.
Goff	Kirby	Sutherland

So Mr. MYERS's amendment to the amendment of Mr. ROBINSON was rejected.

Mr. CUMMINS. I offer the following amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Insert after the word "purposes," in line 5 of the printed amendment, the following:

No distilled liquors or spirits now in bond in the United States shall during the existing war be withdrawn to be used as a beverage, nor shall there be imported into the United States during said war any distilled liquors.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, according to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas, prohibition is limited to distilled liquors or spirits. The amendment which I now present prohibits the importation during the war of distilled liquor or spirits, and also prohibits the withdrawal from bond of such liquor during the same period. It is exactly the same amendment limited to distilled spirits that the Senate has already adopted modifying the House provision which is extended to fermented and vinous liquors.

I have nothing to add to the suggestion I have already made with regard to the propriety of such an amendment. I have heard it said that if the amendment were adopted by the Senate rectified spirits would not be included. That is true in so far as rectified spirits have passed out of the supervision of the Government and taxes have been paid upon them. I do not hope to be able to bring within the provisions of the amendment all the liquors in the United States, but it is my desire to bring just as many of them within its scope as is possible.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa presents two distinct and separate propositions, first prohibiting withdrawal of whiskies in bond, and second the prohibition of the importation of whiskies. I ask for a division of those two questions.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts made a point on the previous amendment which was lightly cast aside by the Senator from Iowa, in which I think there is very much merit. This House can not originate a revenue measure nor can it originate a revenue amendment or a revenue provision. I heard the new and startling doctrine that a provision which affected the revenue was not a revenue provision unless it increased the revenue. Of course, a provision decreasing revenue is just as much a revenue measure as a provision increasing it. This provision if it is adopted by the Senate will reduce the revenue of the United States on liquors imported and liquors forbidden to be taken out of bond when the tax is paid, and that is, when it is paid, $250,000,000, as I roughly estimate it in my mind now. It is a provision affecting the revenue; it is a revenue provision, and there is no right to originate it in this House.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the House provision itself would preclude the manufacture of not only distilled liquors but vinous liquors as well. The Senate therefore has a perfect right to amend the bill in such form as it sees fit. Moreover, while it has been argued that the liquors in bond have been used as the basis of credit, and that might affect business conditions in the country, I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that while it would have the effect of making certificates issued against such property in bond no longer a quick asset it would be an asset of constantly increasing value, because under this process the whiskies that would be in bond would continue to increase and would increase quite rapidly as an asset although not a quick asset.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I shall be perfectly willing to vote that no food material should be used for the manufacture of distilled liquors during the period of the war, but I am unable to support this amendment, which provides that no distilled liquors or spirits now in bond in the United States shall during the existing war be withdrawn to be used as a beverage. It seems to me that would be an act of pure confiscation. A man who has invested his money in liquor or who has manufactured liquor and put it into a bonded warehouse is paying storage on it and insurance, I assume. If he can not withdraw it to sell it in the market, if it is for beverage purposes, we are practically saying that all the liquor that is in bond shall be kept there during the war at the expense of the man who put it there, although it is his property and he desires to sell it. The only thing he can do to stop the running charges, the insurance on storage, is to destroy his own property himself.

I do not think that such an amendment is either wise or necessary at this time. It must be so that hundreds of thousands if not millions of dollars have been borrowed upon liquor that is now in storage. It affects existing contracts. It would impair many banks and business men.

At the outset of this war, with every foreign belligerent having participated in the war pretty effectively for two or three years without any such drastic legislation as this, it does not seem to me that it is necessary for this country to start with such a revolutionary and possibly unconstitutional procedure as this.

I have no doubt in my own mind that if the country can be put upon a beer and light-wine basis, if the subject is approached reasonably in a spirit of gradual progress, a great deal of good can be done, and I have no doubt whatever that any possible stopping or decrease in the bringing of distilled liquors which might be accomplished by legislation of this kind will be tremendously overbalanced by the wave of indignation that will arise from all classes in this country.

The greatest source of strength that this Nation can have in the war is to have a united spirit of its people in favor of its prosecution, but if one-half or more of all the people of this country are to be hounded and persecuted by the other half in a hysterical spirit of bigotry and intolerance, instead of fighting a foreign war we will be fighting an internecine war, and we will be fighting ourselves when we ought to be fighting the foreign enemy.

For that reason, Mr. President, I can not support the amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, in regard to the point of order made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], he says that this amendment is out of order because it affects the revenue and consequently must originate in the House of Representatives. I do not think the Senator from Mississippi would seriously urge that position. There is not any constitutional requirement that bills which affect the revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives. The Constitution says that those raising revenues shall originate in the House of Representatives. To hold that a bill which cuts off revenue of the United States comes within that provision of the Constitution would be equivalent to saying that a prohibition law itself passed by a State was unconstitutional, because it affected the revenues of the United States, and nobody ever heard of such a suggestion or ever would make it.

This amendment of the Senator from Iowa might cut off some revenues of the United States, just as legislation which is passed almost every day by Congress affecting the business of the country affects directly or indirectly the sources of revenue. We have an income tax. We pass a law authorizing the Government to commandeer a man's business, his shipyard, or his coal mine. It destroys the income of that man or that corporation, and consequently destroys that source of revenue of the United States. All that is no more beyond the power of the Senate to enact on that account than this amendment of the Senator from Iowa, nor is the amendment any more beyond the jurisdiction of the Senate than such legislation as that.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. STONE. This is an academic discussion.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think it is academic unless the Senator from Mississippi is not going to insist upon his point of order.

Mr. STONE. I will take the floor in my own time, but I will ask a question of the Senator. We have now a law levying an income tax, levying an excess profits tax, and so on. Does the Senator think that a bill could be introduced in the Senate, originated here in the Senate, be considered and passed merely to reduce—not to raise but to reduce—the income tax, to reduce the excess-war profits tax, or reduce any other tax levied? Does he draw the distinction in this way, that it is all right and within the Constitution to have a bill in the Senate that reduces taxes but unconstitutional to put a bill in the Senate that raises taxes. Is that the Senator's view?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not at all. The case the Senator states is an entirely different case from the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, for this reason, that that would be a revenue act; it would be necessarily an amendment of the existing law, as it reduces the income tax or the import duties; it is a change of the revenue law, and consequently fixes the terms of the revenue law itself, and under which the revenue is raised. This has nothing whatever to do with any revenue law. It does not change in the slightest degree any existing revenue statute. It affects conditions of business and trade which indirectly may affect sources of revenue, the means by which the business of the country pays revenue for the support of the Government. That is an entirely different thing from a law raising revenue.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Washington has expired.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a short time ago I was about to place in the RECORD some correspondence in regard to the question of the food value of the ingredients of beer. I was interrupted by the expiration of my time. As I was about to say, I had a letter from Mr. Gustave Hafer, president of the Farmers' Feed Co., of New York City, a company engaged in brewers' wet and dried grains, in which Mr. Hafer made an argument showing the value of these feeds after the beer had been extracted from them. It was, I thought, a very able argument from that standpoint, and to a great extent it was a technical one. I sent the letter to E. A. Burnett, one of the professors of the University of Nebraska, who is the dean of the College of Agriculture of that State, and asked him for his analysis of it. I got a reply from Prof. Burnett. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD without reading the letter of Mr. Hafer and also the analysis made by Prof. Burnett.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters referred to are as follows:

FARMERS' FEED CO.,
New York, May 3, 1917.

Hon. GEORGE W. NORRIS,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. NORRIS: In this great crisis, and actuated by a sincere desire to assist the Government in its effort tending to a conservation of all food products and the protection of business interests, we beg to subjoin concisely the following facts and statistics concerning the amount of grain utilized in brewing during the past year and the salvage recovered from that process, which is used for the purpose of feeding dairy cattle and horses:

TOTAL AMOUNT OF GRAIN USED IN BREWING BEER DURING THE PAST YEAR.

Product in natural state.

	Bushels.
Barley	48,000,000
Corn grits	15,000,000
Rice	2,000,000
Total used in brewing beer	65,000,000

By-product consumed as a dairy feed and horse ration.

	Bushels.
Brewers' dried grains equal to 450,000 tons	50,000,000
Malt sprouts equal to 50,000 tons	7,142,857
Recovered for utilization as dairy feed and horse ration	57,142,857

(One bushel of brewers' dried grains of 18 pounds per bushel has the feeding value of a bushel of oats of 32 pounds per bushel.)

Total amount of grains produced in the United States in 1915 and 1916.

	1915	1916
	Bushels.	Bushels.
Corn	2,994,793,000	2,583,241,000
Wheat	1,025,801,000	639,886,000
Rye	54,050,000	47,383,000
Barley	228,851,000	180,927,000
Oats	1,549,030,000	1,251,992,000
Total	5,852,525,000	4,703,429,000

The brewers consumed of these grains a total of 65,000,000 bushels per annum, or a percentage as follows:

	Per cent.
1915	1.116
1916	1.382

A comparison of the raw grains consumed in the brewing process and the salvage recovered in the form of by-products will show as follows:

	Bushels.
Utilized in brewing	65,000,000
Recovered through the operation of brewing, directly available as a dairy and horse food	57,142,857

In this connection we beg to submit a unit of weight per bushel and the protein contents per pound:

	Per bushel.	Digestible protein.
	Pounds.	Per pound.
Barley	48	8.4
Corn grits	56	7.8
Rice	48	6.8
Dried brewers' grains	18	23.6
Malt sprouts	14	21.6

As shown above, approximately half a million tons of brewers' dried grains and malt sprouts are produced and used in the United States annually, and, as their digestible protein contents are about three times greater than the original raw grain, it is clear that over a million tons of the latter, or its equivalent, would have to come from somewhere in order to fill up the hole in the Nation's food supply if these excellent products were taken off the market.

In view of the recent agitation to curtail the production of beer during the war on the theory that it will release a quantity of grain for more useful or necessary purposes, permit us to suggest, in view of the above tables, which show so small a proportion of the total crop diverted to brewing operations and so large a conservation in reclaimed by-products, that you will be doing the agricultural interests of the country in general, and milk producers in particular, a very marked service by giving these important facts your serious consideration.

We feel that anything broadly affecting the agricultural and live-stock interests of the country can not fail to be the concern of every good American among us, which, we trust, is sufficient apology for addressing you in the matter.

Very truly, yours,

FARMERS' FEED CO.,
GUSTAVE HAFER, President.

—

THE UNIVERSITY OF NEBRASKA,
COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE,
Lincoln, May 28, 1917.

Hon. GEORGE W. NORRIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. NORRIS: Your favor of the 5th instant inclosing a letter from Mr. Gustave Hafer has lain sometime on my table awaiting an opportunity for answer.

I have asked our chemist to go over this letter and he disagrees with Mr. Hafer on several important points. In the first place, it would seem that Mr. Hafer has undertaken to estimate feeding value purely upon protein contained in the grains as compared with that contained in the salvage recovered. This is not an accurate method of estimating feeding value, which should be determined either upon dry matter or upon digestible nutrients, including both protein and carbohydrate foods.

I have no figures to show the accuracy of this letter as to the amount of grain used in the brewing industry. You would have much better facilities than I to determine whether or not this estimate is correct. The analysis made by our chemist, Dr. F. W. Upson, is as follows:

"The 65,000,000 bushels of grain used in the brewing industry are equivalent to 1,621,000 tons of grains. The recovered by-products according to Mr. Hafer's own statement are equivalent to 500,000 tons. In other words, of the total amount of grain which goes into the process 30.8 per cent by weight is recovered in the by-products. The difference of 69.2 per cent is largely carbohydrate lost in the brewing process.

"The statement that 'One bushel of brewers' dried grains of 18 pounds per bushel has the feeding value of a bushel of oats of 32 pounds per bushel,' is not true. The table at the bottom of page 2 has no meaning for the reason that the unit for the protein is not stated. While it is true that the per cent by weight of protein in the brewers' grains is higher than in oats, the per cent of carbohydrate is lower. The following table shows the number of pounds of food material in 1 bushel of oats, 32 pounds, as compared with 1 bushel of brewers' grains, 18 pounds.

	Water.	Ash.	Protein.	Fiber.	Carbohydrate (starch).	Fat.
	Pounds.	Pounds.	Pounds.	Pounds.	Pounds.	Pounds.
1 bushel oats, 32 pounds, contains	3.3	1.02	3.65	3.46	19.0	1.53
1 bushel brewers' grain, 18 pounds	1.57	.65	4.5	2.45	7.6	1.25

"We see that one bushel brewers' grain contains more protein than one bushel oats; not, however, twice as much, but one and one-fourth as much. The brewers' grains contains, however, 7.62 pounds carbohydrate per bushel, as against 19 pounds for a bushel of oats. According to Henry the total digestible food material in one bushel of oats (32 pounds) equals 20.1 pounds, and in one bushel of dried brewers' grains 10.2 pounds. One bushel oats has therefore twice the feeding value of one bushel dried brewers' grains.

"The statement in paragraph 1 on page 3 of Mr. Hafer's letter is misleading. He states that over one million tons of grain would have to come from somewhere in order to fill up the hole in the Nation's food supply if these excellent products (brewers' grains) were taken off the market. The answer is that if no grain were used for brewing we would have Mr. Hafer's million tons in the grain thus saved, plus 621,000 tons left over.

"We should call attention also to Mr. Hafer's inconsistency in emphasizing the importance of the 500,000 tons of brewers' grains to the feeding industry, while not admitting the importance of the million-odd tons which are lost to useful purposes in the brewing process."

I am returning you the letter of Mr. Hafer and hope that this statement may still be useful to you.

I am, very truly, yours,

E. A. BURNETT.

Mr. CUMMINS. Upon the amendment pending I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. JAMES. I asked for a division of the amendment. The Vice President was not in the chair at the time. The amendment provides for a prohibition against the importation of liquors in the United States, and also prohibition against taking out of bond whiskies in the United States. There are two separate and distinct propositions, and I ask for a separate vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky is entitled to it. The vote will be taken on the first part of the amendment:

No distilled liquors or spirits now in bond in the United States shall during the existing war be withdrawn to be used as a beverage.

That is the first part of the question involved upon which the yeas and nays are requested.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask for the yeas and nays upon both propositions.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair as before and its transfer, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TILLMAN. Making the same announcement as heretofore of my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to make the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as I did on the previous vote. I am paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], and therefore withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—44.

Ashurst	Johnson, Cal.	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Smith, Mich.
Borah	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Brady	Kellogg	Owen	Smoot
Cummins	Kendrick	Page	Sterling
Curtis	Kenyon	Phelan	Thompson
Fernald	La Follette	Poindexter	Townsend
Fletcher	McCumber	Ransdell	Trammell
Gore	McKellar	Shafroth	Vardaman
Gronna	McNary	Sheppard	Walsh
Hale	Myers	Sherman	Wolcott

NAYS—41.

Bankhead	Harding	New	Swanson
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Newlands	Thomas
Broussard	Hollis	Penrose	Tillman
Calder	Husting	Pittman	Underwood
Chamberlain	James	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Reed	Warren
Culberson	Knox	Robinson	Watson
Dillingham	Lewis	Simmons	Williams
France	Lodge	Smith, Ariz.
Frelinghuysen	McLean	Smith, Md.
Gerry	Martin	Stone

NOT VOTING—11.

Fall	Hardwick	Kirby	Sutherland
Gallinger	Hughes	Saulsbury	Weeks
Goff	King	Shields

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the first part of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], the yeas are 45 and the nays are 40. So that is agreed to. The vote will now be taken on the second part of the amendment, which reads:

Nor shall there be imported into the United States during said war any distilled liquors.

The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore of my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to make the same announcement with regard to my pair as heretofore. I am paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] and therefore withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 69, nays 10, as follows:

YEAS—69.

Ashurst	Hale	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Harding	New	Smoot
Beckham	Johnson, Cal.	Norris	Sterling
Borah	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overman	Swanson
Brady	Jones, N. Mex.	Owen	Thomas
Brandegee	Jones, Wash.	Page	Thompson
Calder	Kellogg	Phelan	Townsend
Chamberlain	Kendrick	Pittman	Trammell
Colt	Kenyon	Poindexter	Vardaman
Cummins	King	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Curtis	Knox	Reed	Walsh
Dillingham	La Follette	Shafroth	Warren
Fernald	McCumber	Sheppard	Watson
Fletcher	McKellar	Sherman	Williams
France	McLean	Simmons	Wolcott
Frelinghuysen	McNary	Smith, Ariz.
Gore	Martin	Smith, Ga.
Gronna	Myers	Smith, Mich.

NAYS—10.

Broussard	Hollis	Lewis	Underwood
Gerry	Husting	Pomerene
Hitchcock	James	Robinson

NOT VOTING—17.

Culberson	Hughes	Saulsbury	Tillman
Fall	Kirby	Shields	Weeks
Gallinger	Lodge	Smith, Md.
Goff	Newlands	Stone
Hardwick	Penrose	Sutherland

The VICE PRESIDENT. The entire amendment of the Senator from Iowa is adopted.

Mr. CUMMINS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. If the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] by way of substitute is rejected, will the amendment which has been proposed on behalf of the committee by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] be still open to amendment under the unanimous-consent agreement?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas as amended.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I am opposed to the Chamberlain amendment or the committee amendment. I am also opposed to the Robinson amendment. I prefer the House provision as amended to either, but I believe the Robinson amendment is better than the Chamberlain amendment. I believe it would be a mistake to leave the question as to beer and wine to the President of the United States, as is done by the Chamberlain amendment, and I shall therefore cast my vote for the Robinson amendment, and upon the final vote shall cast my vote for the House provision.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] as amended.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Arkansas if he would be willing to accept an amendment to his amendment which would insert the word "manufacturing" after the word "industrial"? I believe that that would clarify the section somewhat and permit the use of distilled spirits.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to the amendment, and, so far as I am authorized to do so, I am willing to accept it.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] offers an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. PENROSE. I was going to offer an amendment in view of certain things which have occurred, but I shall take the opportunity perhaps to offer it later on some other occasion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] moves, after the words "governmental, industrial," to insert "manufacturing."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. I now ask that the amendment as amended be reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment as amended.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the words proposed to be inserted by Mr. CHAMBERLAIN for the committee it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 12. That from and after 30 days from the date of the approval of this act no person shall use any foods, fruits, food materials, or feeds in the production of distilled liquors except for governmental, industrial, manufacturing, scientific, or medicinal purposes. No distilled liquors or spirits now in bond in the United States shall, during the existing war, be withdrawn to be used as a beverage; nor shall there be imported into the United States during said war any distilled liquors. Any person who willfully violates this section shall upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is that the amendment that is offered as a substitute for the committee amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, if I understood the reading of the amendment, it relates to "persons" entirely, and not to companies or corporations. Am I correct in that?

Mr. GORE. The word "persons" is defined in the bill as including corporations.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is a part of this bill?

Mr. GORE. It is a part of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, did the Senator from Michigan address an inquiry to me?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, if the Senator from Arkansas will permit me, I understand the committee bill defines a person to be a company or corporation, artificial or natural?

Mr. MARTIN and others. Question!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] as amended. (Putting the question:) By the sound the "ayes" seem to have it.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. After the word "purposes," I move to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the word "manufacturing" as used in this paragraph shall not include the manufacture of brandies and distilled spirits for the fortification of wines.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas as amended.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that that amendment to the amendment be again stated. I am not quite sure that I understand it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The SECRETARY. After the word "purposes," in line 5 of the amendment of Mr. ROBINSON, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the word "manufacturing" as used in this paragraph shall not include the manufacture of brandies and distilled spirits for the fortification of wines.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I do not desire the Senate to act upon that amendment or any other amendment without understanding its significance. The question was about to be put by the Chair and the sentiment seemed to be in favor of the Robinson amendment.

The amendment of the Senator from Arkansas forbids the use of distilled liquors except for governmental, industrial, scientific, and medicinal purposes. The word "manufacturing" was proposed to be added by the Senator from New York. If the amendment as originally proposed by the Senator from Arkansas were adopted, I contend that the word "industrial" would embrace wine-making, and therefore I supported the amendment. I think the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York is superfluous. It is merely cumulative, because "industrial" and "manufacturing" are substantially the same thing. However, because it is cumulative, I am in favor of it.

But the Senator from Pennsylvania, for reasons best known to himself, has seen fit to introduce an amendment which will prevent the manufacture of sweet wines. I voted against whisky because I am opposed to whisky. I voted for the Cummins amendment because I believe it to be in the public interest, and I have consistently contended that the use of light wines and beers has never done anyone any harm; that to prohibit them is an invasion, without sufficient justification, of the personal rights of our citizens; and that there is no strong demand, either in this Chamber or outside of this Chamber, for the abolition at this time of light wines and beer. The people who work with their hands and support this structure of Government ask for that little comfort with their daily meals—the mixture of water and wine and the glass of beer. It does not seriously affect the purposes of the war by the conservation of food.

I am opposed to whisky because it destroys the food of the people and destroys the life and moral stamina of the people.

Now, if the Senator from Pennsylvania, for the purpose of punishing those who favor light wines and beer, as an eleventh-hour provision seeks to prevent, in this food measure, the manufacture of light wines and beer, then I should like to know it and I should like the line to be drawn in this Chamber.

Are we to abolish light wines and beers because King John Barleycorn decrees it—he who is consuming the substance of the people and the grains and cereals of the land?

I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania will not be adopted.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not intend to speak in favor of this amendment. I only wanted to have an opportunity of calling to the attention of the country the broad and patriotic and statesmanlike qualities of the Senator from California, his sympathies embracing, as they do, the needs and requirements of 100,000,000 people, extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean.

It is unfortunate that whisky in bond is not located in California. If it were, its beauties would immediately become apparent and the zealous activities of the Senator from California would be enlisted. But it happens to be largely a product of New England and the East, and hence it is obnoxious in his sight. But as to wines, they are medicinal and healthful and inspiring, no matter how decocted or adulterated, provided they are made in California.

The Senator has been most active in trying to have everything done to diminish taxation on wines of every kind, so that they might escape their burden of war taxes, and in every way to benefit this industry. He has deliberately by his vote practically destroyed by confiscation several hundred million dollars, much of it carried in banks, loaned in good faith, located in New England and in Pennsylvania, and helped to enact a law which will unquestionably be unconstitutional, and which places the Senate of the United States before the people of all the world as prompted by a spirit of fanaticism to absolutely ignore the Constitution and the rights of property not located in California.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California has had his time.

Mr. PHELAN. Has my time expired?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; the Senator has had his time. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. PENROSE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as before with reference to my pair, and withhold my vote, not knowing how my pair would vote on this question.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KNOX (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted under a sympathetic misapprehension. [Laughter.] I desire to change my vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER. I make the same announcement as before as to my pair and its transfer and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 6, nays 72, as follows:

YEAS—6.

McCumber	Sheppard	Stone	Townsend
Reed	Sherman

NAYS—72.

Ashurst	Hale	Martin	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Hollis	Myers	Smith, Mich.
Beckham	Husting	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Borah	James	New	Smoot
Brady	Johnson, Cal.	Newlands	Sterling
Broussard	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Swanson
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Thomas
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Owen	Thompson
Culberson	Kellogg	Page	Tillman
Cummins	Kendrick	Penrose	Trammell
Curtis	Kenyon	Phelan	Underwood
Dillingham	King	Pittman	Vardaman
Fernald	Knox	Poindexter	Wadsworth
Fletcher	La Follette	Pomerene	Walsh
France	Lewis	Ransdell	Warren
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Robinson	Watson
Gerry	McKellar	Shafroth	Williams
Gronna	McNary	Shields	Wolcott

NOT VOTING—18.

Brandegee	Gore	Kirby	Smith, Md.
Colt	Harding	McLean	Sutherland
Fall	Hardwick	Saulsbury	Weeks
Gallinger	Hitchcock	Simmons
Goff	Hughes	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. PENROSE's amendment to the amendment of Mr. ROBINSON was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] as amended.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I desire to state my position on this question.

So far as I am personally concerned, I should be very glad to vote for an amendment or a bill that would conserve the grain supply of the country to the people of the United States; and it was my purpose to vote for an amendment that would prohibit the use of grain in manufacturing distilled spirits during the period of the war, if I could have done so. As this amendment is now presented to the Senate, by reason of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, it presents the proposition that in order to vote to conserve the grain supply of the country I shall be compelled to vote to confiscate a large amount of property without just compensation. I shall also be compelled to vote to destroy something like $300,000,000 of revenue to this Government. If this bill as now amended becomes a law, I doubt its constitutionality, but it is not for me to pass upon that question now. I believe the Supreme Court will decide in the end that you can not take a man's property without paying just compensation; and if you provide in the bill that liquor in bonded warehouses can not be taken during the period of the war, for the time being and perhaps forever, you take away these people's property. You destroy the securities on which thousands of dollars have been loaned by the banks of this country. You may produce a financial panic.

I am not willing, for the sake of conserving a portion of the grain supply of this country, to jeopardize the financial condition of the country by my vote. I am not willing to vote to take a man's property without just compensation. If you want to add to this bill a provision that if this property is withheld the Government of the United States shall pay for it, I am willing to go that far with you; but I am not willing to confiscate the property of these people, nor am I willing to destroy this revenue. Therefore, I find myself in an attitude where I can not vote for this amendment as it is presented, or any other amendment carrying these terms.

I have not discussed the question, but I do not think I can allow my vote to stand in the negative, as I intend to vote, without making this explanation in the RECORD to endeavor to show my constituents what my position is.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that I entirely concur in what the Senator from Alabama has said, and I intend to vote against the amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I voted against the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Iowa for the same reason as stated by the Senator from Alabama; but I much prefer the Robinson amendment to the so-called Chamberlain amendment, which is the committee amendment, and I know that if the Robinson amendment should be voted down the Senator from Iowa will probably offer the same amendment to the Chamberlain amendment, and the votes are here to put it on. Therefore, unwilling as I am to vote for it in its present shape, I find myself in the dilemma of being compelled to choose the lesser of two evils, and on that theory I shall vote for the Robinson amendment. Whether or not I shall vote for section 12 of the bill as amended I do not know.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will vote down the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, because that leaves the whole question as to vinous and malt liquors open to be fought out on the floor of the Senate in some other shape.

Now, Mr. President, the committee amendment, it seems to me, will settle this question. I think I may safely say that with the exception that it absolutely prohibits the use of food products in the manufacture of distilled liquors, it is in conformity with the wishes of the Commander in Chief of the Army and of the Navy as originally expressed to the House of Representatives. I do not say that that is a sole reason why the Senate should adopt the committee amendment, but I say that he, as the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, is in a position to know just what is best to be done in this critical emergency.

The amendment that comes from the committee absolutely prohibits the use of food products in the manufacture of distilled liquors, and it leaves to the President the power to say what amount of food products shall be used in the manufacture of malt and vinous liquors and to fix the alcoholic content. Now, with that power, and with his ample knowledge of the conditions which confront this country, it seems to me that the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas ought to be voted down and the committee amendment adopted, leaving it to the President, as the emergencies present themselves in the course of the war, to adopt that policy which will be safest for the country. I am satisfied that the Members of the Senate have enough confidence in the President to know that power will be used by him only in such a way as to best suit the emergencies as they arise during the progress of the war.

I hope the committee amendment may be adopted, and to that end the pending amendment voted down.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand that in case the Robinson amendment should be adopted, we would then have an opportunity to vote upon that as a substitute for section 12?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BORAH. And we have a choice between section 12 and the Robinson amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Between section 12 and the Robinson amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I shall vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas because I believe that this is a matter which the Congress itself ought to meet and dispose of. I think it is a responsibility which rests upon us. It is a policy that is either wise or unwise, and we should not shift that responsibility.

Believing that the Congress ought to meet the question and determine it and settle it for itself, I prefer to vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas rather than the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, we have in this body, conjointly with the House of Representatives, from time to time passed laws providing that they should be executed by different heads of departments according to the time and occasion requiring such; notably, the regulations concerning the pure-food act, the execution of which was put in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture and his agents; that concerning oleomargarine, for a long time under the Secretary of the Interior and his agents; those respecting the administration of public lands, in certain respects under the administration of the Secretary of the Interior, to be enforced or not, limited or expanded, according to the circumstances as they shall develop.

With this policy in my mind I introduced an amendment here as a substitute to take the place of section 12, providing, sir, that the whole subject matter of the limitation of the use of food for beverages should be left to the same source at which the food act has been left for administration. Such is my view now. I feel that the whole matter should be left to the President to be executed by him through such aid as shall be provided, upon the same theory that we have left the administration of other foods to the Secretary of Agriculture and the administration of land to the Secretary of the Interior.

My view, which I beg to impose on the Senate, is this: Conditions to-day may justify to the mind of Senators a peremptory and absolute enactment which may so change when we are not in session as to seriously embarrass the enactment of that law and embarrass the Government in the execution of it. Therefore for myself I regard it more prudent for the country, I regard it more for its welfare, to vest the execution of such a measure in the discretion of those who command the whole subject, that it may from time to time change such administration of it or limit it according to the conditions as they arise.

For that reason, Mr. President, I prefer to support the amendment of the committee and oppose the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Arkansas, thinking that the method of the amendment by the committee would serve a better object and a better purpose to the end which we have in view.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, when the present food-conservation measure came from the administration, after having been developed by the combined efforts of the House and Senate Committees on Agriculture, the Secretary of Agriculture, and various agricultural authorities and heads of farmers' organizations throughout the country, it contained a section giving the President the power to limit, regulate, or prohibit the making of foodstuffs into any kind of alcoholic liquors, and authorizing him to determine the alcoholic contents thereof in the interest of food conservation. This is a complete answer to the charge, so widely repeated, that prohibitionists forced the liquor question into the deliberations on this bill. The presence of this section in the bill, as originally framed, showed that the President, the Secretary of Agriculture, and both House and Senate Committees on Agriculture believed that the use of foodstuffs in making alcoholic liquors was a waste, and that power to limit or prevent this waste should be given. This section was in the bill when the President requested both these committees to confer with him at the White House, and when from time to time he talked to Members of both Houses regarding the measure, expressing the deepest anxiety over its fate. The House amended this section by directly prohibiting the making of foodstuffs into alcoholic liquors. The Senate Committee on Agriculture reported a similar amendment, except as to wine, after the bill had reached the Senate, and it was then that the beer interests threatened the defeat of the entire measure. Evidently the President had in mind the provision added by the Senate committee, in line with the House action, when he made an appeal for its elimination.

It would be a distinct step backward, therefore, if an amendment should now be adopted relieving wine and beer of all restriction and control. Whatever decrease may take place in the amount of grain made into whisky will be largely offset by the making of additional foodstuffs into beer and wine, due to their increased consumption, which is sure to follow, if no restrictions are imposed, and no material saving in foodstuffs would in the end be effected. Dr. Wiley, one of the greatest food experts of the time, tells us that barley, the main constituent of beer, is an excellent human food, as well as a valuable animal food. Alcohol is a liquid poison, which attacks the tissues composing every organ of the human body. As the tissues composing the brain and nerves are the most delicate of all, it attacks them first, and the result is a loss of control over the normal functions of thought and action, ranging from hilarity to murder. This is the result whether alcohol is taken in the form of wine or beer or whisky, or in some other guise. It has been demonstrated that the alcohol in a single glass of beer will so affect the brain and nerves and arm of an engineer as appreciably to prolong the time between the sight of a danger signal and the swing of the throttle, and thus to imperil or destroy the lives of hundreds of passengers. The need of a clear brain and steady nerve in an age of machinery is doing more for prohibition than all other agencies put together. Men drink whisky, wine, and beer for the same purpose—for the alcohol they contain.

Let me quote here a resolution adopted by the American Medical Association at its sixty-eighth annual session held at New York City last month:

Whereas we believe that the use of alcohol as a beverage is detrimental to the human economy; and
Whereas its use in therapeutics, as a tonic or a stimulant, or as a food has no scientific basis: Therefore be it
Resolved, That the American Medical Association opposes the use of alcohol as a beverage; and be it further Resolved, That the use of alcohol as a therapeutic agent should be discouraged.

Let me say that therapeutics is the term applied to that branch of medicine which deals with the methods of curing disease, or of controlling and resisting its evils. The language of the above resolution is that of one of the foremost scientific bodies of the world, not the language of dreamers, enthusiasts, or fanatics. It is one of the plainest and most effective indictments of alcohol that has yet been drawn. It makes no distinction as to whisky and wine and beer, because all represent stages of alcoholism. Prohibition prevails by State or local action in three-fourths of the territory of the United States, a territory in which lives more than 60 per cent of the American people, and yet in none of this territory is the line drawn between whisky on the one side and beer and wine on the other.

The difference, therefore, between the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas and that proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is fundamental. If we surrender control of wine and beer in this dreadful time and regulate whisky alone, we endeavor to draw a distinction which does not exist and blind ourselves to the truth. The object of food conservation is the development of man power to the highest possible limit. Put wine and beer beyond control and our man power will be menaced by alcoholism practically as much as ever before. The adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will destroy the admirable plan which the President evidently had in mind when this food-protection bill was first developed, namely, the gradual decrease of the alcoholic contents in all liquors until the shackles of alcoholism could be permanently broken, an emancipation comparable to that which his immortal predecessor, Lincoln, effected for millions of the human race. If the Chamberlain amendment should be adopted, the President will gradually lower the alcoholic contents of beer and wine until those addicted to these beverages will have become accustomed to the change and we will pass to the condition of a dry nation without the disturbance and without the resentment and financial loss so many seem to fear.

I hope therefore that the Chamberlain amendment will finally be adopted.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, in view of the observations of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] I desire to be heard just a moment upon the pending question. The amendment which has been adopted and which I had the honor to offer does not take property without due process of law. It merely suspends for the time being the right of the citizen to use the property. I assume that it is within our power to say that in the period of storm and trouble through which we are now passing, if any citizen has property that can not be used without increasing the storm and trouble, or if being used diminishes our power and strength to pass safely through the storm, he must not use it until the storm has passed.

If when war is over, Mr. President, the Government shall determine that intoxicating liquor of this kind shall not be used in the United States, then common fairness and honesty will require the Government to make adequate compensation for the property which it has taken; but until that time comes we need not meet the point raised by the Senator from Alabama. I know that it will deprive for the moment the country of a revenue of some $200,000,000 or $250,000,000, but it must be remembered, Mr. President, that when the 300,000,000 gallons of whisky are sold the people of the United States will pay for it nearly $2,000,000,000, and by just so much will their capacity to respond to the demands of this time be lessened. I would rather lose a revenue of $250,000,000 than stand by, when every resource is to be called upon, and see the people of the country pay out $2,000,000,000 a year for the beverages from which we derive a revenue of $250,000,000.

I shall feel constrained to vote against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas because, as much as I believe in the Senate or Congress determining for itself this matter of commerce, I would rather leave to the President the power to exclude beer and wine from the commerce of the country than to do nothing whatever with respect to those beverages.

I would have some hope that in the exercise of his discretion he would banish these drinks from the public use, and therefore I think the amendment of the committee is preferable.

I say now, as was anticipated by the Senator from Connecticut, that if the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas is rejected, I shall offer as applicable to the committee amendment the same provision with regard to bonded spirits and imported spirits that has already been adopted to the House text and to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I am moved to make some remarks because the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has touched on the particular theme that impels me to oppose the pending legislation. I have understood that the question of the prohibition of manufacture was introduced as a method of food conservation, and the drift of the afternoon is toward prohibition, not toward food conservation.

If I could have my way, Mr. President, I would give assent to the complete abolition of the liquor traffic in this land, but I shall never give my vote to that abolition when I think the procedure is unjust; and I contend that the amendment of the Senator from Iowa is unjust in every application. If it does not literally confiscate the lawful property of the United States, it does suspend the use of that property for the period of the war, and the war may be 1, 2, or 10 years in duration; and by the suspension of the use of that property you jeopardize every loan, amounting to millions of dollars, secured by certificates of storage. Aside from that, you apply the lash of confiscation to lawfully existing property that has been taken under the wing of Government partnership since the first internal-revenue law was ever written.

Mr. President, there seems to be an impression that we have got to become a prohibition country to win the war. It ought to be the first thought in the mind of every Senator and every citizen to win the war. I am for that, and if I believed it were necessary to adopt prohibition in this country to win the war, I would vote for it in spite of my conviction of the injustice involved.

But, Mr. President, it has not been proven necessary for the United States to be prohibition to win a war. We have never been a prohibition Nation heretofore to win a war, and there is not an allied country engaged in this war with us that is a prohibition nation. I know of only one prohibition nation on the face of the earth, and it has the least to its credit in the way of triumphant warfare. I refer to Turkey.

It is not, Mr. President, that I for a moment rise to defend "John Barleycorn" or the malted beverages of this land. I have already stated my position. I think no man can stand and make a speech in defense of intoxicating liquors. But, Mr. President, on the calendar lying on my desk, on page 6, calendar No. 61, is a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. In that amendment the prohibition question itself is frankly, flatly, and squarely submitted. Why has not this body the courage to take up and settle the prohibition question under that amendment? Then when such an amendment is adopted the country can righteously and justly undertake to dispose of the liquor traffic and the manufacture of distilled and fermented liquors and add a just compensation to the property thereby destroyed. Whenever that is proposed it shall have my vote in this body.

I want to be just, Senators. At the same time I want to be committed to the cause of this country. Let us for a moment put aside the narrow view. I can not find fault with the prohibitionist who is insistent on furthering the cause in which his heart is so deeply enlisted; I can not find fault and I do not find fault with the manufacturer of intoxicating beverages who is opposing this legislation, but I have a very strong conviction, Senators, that this difficult question ought to be settled quite apart from the extremists on either hand. This is a time when men can march safe to the front in the middle of the road, and, coming to the front, settle this question.

In my State, Mr. President, we have twice had the prohibition question submitted to a vote of the people, and though we are very evenly divided, the majority has been against us. The same story might be told of many other States that are still in the liberal column. On the other hand, there are some 24 or 25 States in the Union in the dry column. Why, in the name of sense, must we as a war proposition divide among ourselves and rend the concord of American spirit and the unity of American citizenship, which is far more essential to the winning of this war than the adoption of prohibition for the moment?

Mr. President, I presume I am trespassing. Perhaps later——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SHAFROTH. In my time I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio a question.

Mr. HARDING. I would be glad to have the Senator ask it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Would it be acceptable to the Senator for a commandeering provision to be made in either of these amendments by which the Government of the United States would pay to the person who owned these liquors the fair value thereof?

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, if the Senator from Colorado can write an amendment that will stand not only for commandeering liquor in the storage warehouses of the country but under Government supervision and at the same time take over every brewery and distillery in the United States, I shall support him and vote for the prohibition which will result from that amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I will vote to settle the property rights involved in this amendment in its own time and place, if given the opportunity. I wish the question now settled whether a sober nation is a better nation in war and that we approach that settlement freed from the entangling questions of property rights. That is what the Senate has this day voted. I am looking in the faces of Senators on the majority side of this Chamber whose ancestors saw vanish overnight by the signature of an Executive pen countless millions of property that was as sacred as the property contained in a whisky barrel.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield.

Mr. HARDING. I do not want to trespass, but the Senator will say that the Great Emancipator himself believed in justice and desired to compensate for the property that was taken.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; he did, and it was rejected by certain of the States to which the proposition was made. I could not go into that detail now in the time allotted here. It is known to the Senators and their constituents of that time. Your ancestors, my fellow Senators, in the States where you lost the property by the proclamation of half century ago, when slavery melted instantly into nothingness, bound up your wounds, economically and otherwise, turned to your ruined homes, girded up your loins like men, and bore the loss without complaint. Not one dollar has ever been paid you by this Republic. Your fathers and grandfathers lost every dollar of the slave property that vanished into thin air overnight. It was the fortunes of war, and, like vanquished warriors, your fathers bore the burdens of defeat.

Is a distillery more sacred than a human soul, in peace or in war? If your ancestors in certain States lost millions by the proclamation of emancipation, can you not stand overnight sincere to your convictions, and continue to vote steadfastly as you have begun, and that the holders of stocks of whisky may abide the results of this amendment, and trust hereafter to legislation to pay for the property values involved in the action of this day? I will meet that, Mr. President, when I reach it in due time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Illinois a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does not the Senator from Illinois recognize a clear distinction between confiscating the property of an enemy and confiscating the property of your own citizen? My father's property was confiscated, but he was an enemy fighting the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is a distinction without a difference. The man who for pecuniary gain will pour liquid hell-fire into a soldier's blood and brain under the pretense of making a soldier of him is a public enemy. He is worse infinitely than the one who raised the standard of revolt in 1861. If this Nation endures it will not be saved by the spurious courage born of whisky but the clear eye and steady hand of sober men. Your ancestor felt the bitterness of defeat. To-day his descendants are living under the flag and are patriotic and making the same sacrifices we of the Northern States are making, who won in that great struggle. Do not think for a moment I do not appreciate the spirit that animates you Senators and your constituents of this day. You made the great sacrifice; you are in the Union; you are here now as living evidences, preserved to this day, of the loyal sentiment that animates you this year and hereafter in this war of a united American people. There is, it is true, a distinction, but it is a distinction without a difference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Illinois has expired.

Mr. REED. I offer an amendment, to come in after the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment heretofore agreed to it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, however, That the President is hereby empowered to permit the withdrawal of liquor in bond if, in his opinion, such withdrawal is in the public interest.

Mr. STONE. How would it read if that amendment were agreed to?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment as it will read as proposed to be amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

No distilled liquors or spirits now in bond in the United States shall, during the existing war, be withdrawn to be used as a beverage; nor shall there be imported into the United States during said war any distilled liquors: Provided, however, That the President is hereby empowered to permit the withdrawal of liquors in bond if, in his opinion, such withdrawal is in the public interest.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the vote on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa was pretty close, and it seems to me that the amendment I have offered may afford a means of adjustment. There is much to be said in favor of the argument which was adduced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. The cold truth of the matter is, I think, that nearly all of the liquor, or at least a great part of the liquor, that is held under Government bond has been mortgaged to banks and other financial institutions. This law would, of course, make it impossible to foreclose upon that liquor; hence the security would be destroyed. It is likely to break some banking institutions and to visit loss upon innocent stockholders. I think we can become so radical that we will do harm instead of good. I believe it would be safe to pass this question over to the President; and if, upon investigation, he finds that great injustice is to be done, and that it is to the public interest to relieve this liquor from the inhibition of the bill, he can be trusted to act wisely and justly in the matter.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Question!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas as amended.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Oregon if he will not consent to let us recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning, and in the meantime I will ask if the Senate will not direct that section 12, with the amendments so far agreed to, may be printed. We can consider it then to-morrow morning advisedly. This very important matter involves far more than the mere question of stopping the sale of liquor. It involves other things, and I think, Mr. President, we ought to allow the section to go over until to-morrow morning, in order that Senators may familiarize themselves with it as it now stands.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, quite a number of Senators have expressed a desire to see the amendment printed in its amended form, so that we may act intelligently upon the matter when the vote is taken; and, at the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri, if there is no objection to taking a recess, I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

Mr. STONE. I suggest that the Senator ask that the section be printed as amended.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. And in the meantime I ask that the section as amended be reprinted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the section as amended will be reprinted.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon withhold his motion just a moment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I withhold the motion.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent to present an amendment to the bill, not relating to this section, for the purpose of having it printed and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be received, printed, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. KING. If the Senator from Oregon will withhold his motion for a moment further, I desire to submit an amendment, and ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

RECESS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I renew my motion that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m., Friday, July 6, 1917) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, July 7, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, July 6, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Take us, O God our Heavenly Father, into Thy confidence and make us susceptible to Thy will, that we may be faithful servants in the working out of Thy plans and purposes.

We can not always trace the way
Where Thou, Almighty One, dost move;
But we can always, always say
That God is love.

And that in the dispensation of Thy providence the dark shall be made light, truth though crushed to earth shall rise again, and every wrong shall be made right. For faith shall find its purpose, hope its answer, and love its full fruition. Man may retard or accelerate, but he can never thwart Thy purposes, for Thou art God.

Hear us and answer our prayer, in His Name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, July 3, 1917, was read and approved.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing two statements, one by Dr. Taylor, an aid of Mr. Hoover, on the relation between the manufacture of yeast and malted liquors, together with some comments of my own thereon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish, in this connection, to direct the attention of the House to what was said here on Friday, June 29. I do this now because inadvertently, when I reserved the right to object on Tuesday last, I mentioned the wrong date, Saturday, June 30, in referring to what the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] had said. I should have referred to his language on Friday, June 29, and therefore before this request is granted I desire to remind gentlemen of the agreement made by the House on that day.

On page 4491 of the RECORD, right-hand column, after some preliminary remarks, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] said:

We can have an understanding that nothing will be done during the week except to meet and adjourn for three days at a time until Monday week.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman will yield for one minute, I want to emphasize the importance of understanding absolutely that nothing will be done except what is stated, because if Members go away under a gentlemen's agreement and a handful come here and somebody gets up a little insignificant thing and asks unanimous consent it ought not to be allowed.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think every man will be committed in honor to stand by this understanding that nothing will be done next week except to meet and adjourn over.

Now, the understanding was clear that nothing of any sort was to be done here except to obey the constitutional mandate which prohibits an adjournment for longer than three days without the consent of the other House. That this was the understanding is shown by what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] said during the same discussion, on page 4492, left-hand column, near the top:

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman's agreement, as stated, would not permit even a request for unanimous consent. My only point was that should not apply to a request for unanimous consent, but that if this bill comes back the gentleman should have full opportunity to object.

The discussion went on, and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] said:

My judgment is we will lose no time, but make time, by consenting to the unanimous-consent request that I have made.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman believe that the asking of unanimous consent to extend remarks in the RECORD is embraced in that agreement? If I got the gist of that agreement, and, as I understood it on the floor at the time, there was to be no business transacted in the House that the Journal would record. The mere extension of remarks is not a matter that is embraced in the Journal. If a bill were called up here for action by unanimous consent, certainly it would be objected to, and ought to be under that agreement, but I can not see any particular objection to gentlemen extending remarks.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The other day when I reserved the right to object, somebody else made the objection. Having heard what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] said on Friday, June 29, by way of interpreting the agreement as proposed by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], and remembering the general acquiescence of the Members of the House in that interpretation, I sought the other day to remind the House of this understanding that absolutely nothing should be done here during the present week except to meet and adjourn. We are awaiting action by the Senate on bills we have passed and sent to that body.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But if the gentleman will pardon me, I doubt the accuracy of his conclusion as to our gentleman's agreement. I do not think it ever prohibited the extension of remarks in the RECORD. But even if it did, that was violated about 10 times on Tuesday, and it was not until I made my request that the gentleman from Wisconsin and other gentlemen rose. It is very seldom that I ask to extend remarks in the RECORD. I only do it now because I hope that before final action on the food bill Members will read in the RECORD some data and information that I want to present. That is my only reason for asking consent at this time, because the food bill will probably come back to us from the Senate very shortly.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin permit this suggestion? There is a very vast difference, as he knows, between the RECORD and the Journal. Anything undertaken to be done by the House that would have to be recorded in the Journal would, I think, be a legitimate subject to object to under this gentlemen's agreement.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, before I reply to what the gentleman from Texas has said, I wish again to direct attention to the language on June 29 of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON]:

If the gentleman will yield for one minute, I want to emphasize the importance of understanding absolutely that nothing will be done except what is stated, because if Members go away under a gentlemen's agreement and a handful come here and somebody gets up a little insignificant thing and asks unanimous consent it ought not to be allowed.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. One moment. I am not going to object, but that was an express statement, not questioned by anybody, that under the agreement nothing would be done except to meet and adjourn for three days. Now, in reply to the question of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] let me put a question to him. It is a supposititious case, but it might occur: Suppose that somebody had printed an article in a newspaper that the gentleman from Texas did not think told the truth about a subject important to him, and that some Member wishing to get it into the RECORD should ask leave to extend his remarks and, leave being granted, should print that article while the gentleman from Texas was absent. Might not that be a matter of serious consequence to the absent gentleman from Texas?

Mr. GARNER. I will say to the gentleman that I do not anticipate any such state of affairs.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is not a question of whether the gentleman would anticipate any such state of affairs. I am directing attention to the agreement of June 29 which sought to make such a thing impossible.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1811) providing for counting of service in the Army or Navy of the United States as equivalent to residence and cultivation upon homestead entries, and in the event of the soldier's death in such service providing for the issuance of patent for such land to his widow or minor children, had requested a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHAFROTH, Mr. PITTMAN, and Mr. SMOOT as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution:

Senate concurrent resolution 8.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That there be printed in document form 50,000 copies of the bill (H. R. 4280) to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes, and Senate Report No. 75 thereon, of which 25,000 shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 20,000 for the use of the Senate, 2,500 for the use of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, and 2,500 for the use of the Committee on Finance of the Senate.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

S. 1854. An act to save daylight and to provide standard time for the United States.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on June 30, 1917, they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 3548. An act providing for the modification of the designs of the current quarter dollar.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Monday, July 9, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, recommending an authorization for the use of the appropriation of $30,000 for equipment for the commissary department, United States Naval Academy, contained in urgent deficiency appropriation act approved June 15, 1917, for pay of additional employees of that department (H. Doc. No. 248); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Little River, S. C. (H. Doc. No. 249); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication of the acting president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, submitting supplemental estimates of appropriations required by the District of Columbia for the fiscal years 1917 and 1918 (H. Doc. No. 250); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting report of tests of the Wooding train-control system (H. Doc. No. 251); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MANN: A bill (H. R. 5325) in relation to trading with the enemy; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. DENT: A bill (H. R. 5326) to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Signal Corps of the Army, and to purchase, manufacture, maintain, repair, and operate airships, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KEHOE: Memorial of the State Legislature of the State of Florida, requesting that the reservation known as the Choctawhatchee Reservation in West Florida be withdrawn and the land therein be restored to homestead entry; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER: A bill (H. R. 5327) granting an increase of pension to Robert J. Clark; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5328) granting a pension to Mary J. Allen; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 5329) granting an increase of pension to William H. Rock; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHOUSE: A bill (H. R. 5330) granting an increase of pension to William Criswell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SWEET: A bill (H. R. 5331) granting an extension of patent to Rosella Rebecca Reilly; to the Committee on Patents.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of the City Council of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, praying that the President and Congress of the United States insist on the freedom and independence of Bohemia; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also (by request), petition of Tyler Place Senior Christian Endeavor Society, St. Louis, Mo., favoring war-time prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also (by request), petition of the National Woman's Party, meeting at Salt Lake City, Utah, protesting against imprisoning women pickets in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also (by request), petition of the membership of the Congregational Church of Wasco, Cal., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also (by request), petition of Kauai (Hawaii) Chamber of Commerce, pledging loyalty and support to the Government of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ALEXANDER: Petitions of Jesse Wright and 181 other citizens; W. S. Walker and 40 other citizens; Mrs. E. W. Prentiss and 50 other citizens; Rev. P. F. Meek and 73 other citizens; J. S. Vanzant and 28 other citizens; C. H. Edson and 15 other citizens; Miss Ethel Cunniff, noble grand, and 22 other ladies of the Rebekah Lodge; Mrs. M. D. Shamblin and 18 other ladies; Mrs. E. S. Miner and 56 other citizens; R. J. Tilley and 33 other citizens, all of Bethany, Harrison County; and Mrs. A. O. Stanley, Mrs. V. H. Sanders, and 70 other ladies of Sheridan, all in the State of Missouri, favoring the prohibition of the liquor business as a war measure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BROWNING: Memorial of Haddon Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, No. 38, favoring the closing of distilleries and breweries in the United States as a war measure; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: Petition of the Evangelical Lutheran Congregation of Edgerton, Wis., asking that the law relating to the carrying in the mails of matter containing liquor advertisements be amended in certain respects; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of Mrs. P. L. Munger and other residents of Janesville, Wis., urging enactment of House bill 5118, providing for osteopathic physicians in the Army and Navy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of the congregation of the First Evangelical Luthern Church of Racine, Wis., and the members of the First Methodist Church, Clinton, Wis., urging the enactment of legislation prohibiting the use of foods in the manufacture of alcoholic liquors, etc.; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. DALE of New York: Petition of the Evangelical Lutheran Congregation of Brooklyn, N. Y., urging that the act of Congress approved March 3, 1917, House bill No. 19410, be amended to allow the mails to carry such mailing matter as is unconditionally necessary to enable churches, one and all, to secure the wine needed for sacramental purposes; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. DRUKKER: Petition of residents of Paterson, N. J., favoring woman suffrage; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. EAGAN: Petition of P. F. Volland Co., Chicago, Ill., urging that the Federal law against the misuse of the flag be amended so that it shall not apply to sheet music; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of National Association of Owners of Railroad Securities, in re the general rate increase requested by the carriers of the country; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, urging that incomes and profits should be taxed to the furthest possible point without checking production and the exemption of the incomes dedicated to the maintenance of religious and social agencies; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the Publishers' Association of New York City, indorsing the protest of American Newspaper Publishers' Association against the levying of a special discriminating war tax on the newspaper business; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of State Council of the Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers' International Alliance of the State of New Jersey, protesting against the high cost of living and urging that a remedy be found therefor; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HASTINGS: Petition of Maywood Presbyterian Church, Oklahoma City, Okla., protesting against use of food supplies in the manufacture of beer, wine, or distilled liquors; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of the Methodist Church South, Atoka, Okla., protesting against the use of any foodstuffs in the manufacture of beer, wine, or distilled liquors; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Petition of members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and voters of the seventh ward, Tacoma, Wash., favoring the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LONERGAN: Resolution signed by 21 Swedish-American citizens of Hartford, Conn., in favor of prohibition during the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LUNN: Petition of W. A. Campbell and citizens of Hagaman, N. Y., asking for an amendment to the Constitution that will suitably express national acknowledgment of Almighty God, as the source of all authority in civil government, etc., and the placing of all Christian laws, institutions, and usages of the Government on an undeniable legal basis in the fundamental law of the land; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Mrs. John H. Giles, of Amsterdam, N. Y., asking for full national prohibition during the period of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of G. Cozzi, C. Buonocore, N. Fabrioni, Simon Straus, and sundry citizens of New York City, asking that enactment of national prohibition be defeated; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of D. C. Brownell and citizens of the towns of Perth and Mayfield, asking for national prohibition for the period of the war as a measure to conserve the food supply of the Nation; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of J. C. E. Van Etta, of Schenectady, N. Y., asking that Congress take such measures as may be necessary to eliminate all sources of profit in the production, transportation, and distribution of the food supply of our country, to the end that every man, woman, and child shall be supplied with sufficient good and wholesome food to keep them in perfect physical condition; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of Mrs. Francis A. De Graff and 800 members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Montgomery County, N. Y., asking for prohibition during period of the war and asking that religious papers be exempted from taxation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McCLINTIC: Petition of Raywood Presbyterian Church, Oklahoma City, Okla., signed by E. B. Surface, pastor, favoring prohibition as a war measure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McFADDEN: Petitions signed by 99 residents of Montrose, Pa., urging Congress to enact legislation prohibiting the manufacture of alcoholic beverages from foodstuffs, to conserve the world's food supply, and to prohibit the sale of such beverages during the period of the present world war to preserve the physical and moral strength of the Nation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. RANDALL: Petitions of Woman's Missionary Society, Duarte; Woman's Missionary Society, San Diego; Methodist Episcopal Church South of California; Woman's Missionary Council of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Downey, all in the State of California, praying for prohibition as a war measure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of 180 citizens of Pasadena, Cal., for national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of Boy Scouts' Association of Los Angeles County, representing 2,600 Boy Scouts of the ninth and tenth congressional districts, with more registered voters than were cast for President in any one of 18 separate States, that while Boy Scouts enthusiastically plant, produce, and save, they call upon Congress to prevent monstrous waste of food grains in the breweries and distilleries; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Philotos Club, of Los Angeles, for prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors during the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of 31 citizens of Glendale and Tropico, Cal., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of 464 citizens of Schenectady, 368 citizens of Albany, 112 citizens of Amsterdam, and 485 citizens of Watertown, all in the State of New York, urging Congress to enact national prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for the period of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. RAINEY: Petition of the Home Missionary Society, of Waverly; F. H. Payne and 39 other citizens of Maredosia; the Methodist Church of San Jose; Mrs. Clara Sperry and 30 other citizens of Jacksonville; Methodist Church of Rockport; and First Baptist Church, of Jerseyville, all in the State of Illinois, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of First Congregational Church, of Jacksonville, Ill., favoring food conservation; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. SNELL: Petition of citizens of Plattsburg, N. Y., favoring full national prohibition of the manufacture, sale, and transportation of intoxicating beverages for the period of the war in conservation of the man power, military and industrial efficiency, and the food supply of the Nation, and that all liquors now in bonded warehouses and elsewhere shall be commandeered by the Government and redistilled for undrinkable alcohol, to be purchased by the Government for war purposes, and that we oppose an increase in the tax on intoxicating liquors as a means of raising a revenue to prosecute the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Brotherhood of the Keeseville Methodist Episcopal Church, Keeseville, N. Y., favoring prohibition of the manufacture and sale of every form of intoxicating beverage liquor for the duration of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SNYDER: Memorial of the Mowhawk Valley Branch of Collegiate Alumnæ for the moral protection of the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, memorial of the Federated Men's Bible Class of the Mohawk Valley, N. Y., pledging loyalty to the Government and administration in the present situation of the country; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STEENERSON: Petition of mass meeting on the Fourth of July of producers of grains and other food products, for the passage of laws prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, to conserve the food and man power of the country and help win the war; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of the Minnesota Woman Suffrage Association, protesting against picketing and other unpatriotic demonstrations in Washington by persons purporting to represent the women of America; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. TEMPLETON: Petition of the Trinity Lutheran Congregation of Hazleton, Pa., against the manufacture of intoxicating liquors from grains; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. TIMBERLAKE: Petition of J. R. Haynes and 36 other citizens of the State of Colorado, urging prohibition as a war measure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WARD: Petition for the passage of a bill to prohibit the use of foodstuffs during the war for the manufacture of intoxicating beverages, signed by John Dingman, presiding officer, at a meeting of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, Sharon Springs, N. Y.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of citizens of Kingston, East Kingston, Saugerties, and vicinity, Ulster County, N. Y., protesting against prohibition legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WOOD of Indiana: Petition of citizens of Reynolds, Ind., opposing prohibition of the liquor business, and especially as to wine destined for sacramental purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, July 7, 1917.

(Legislative day of Thursday, June 28, 1917.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

CONSERVATION OF FOOD AND FUEL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4961) to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Hollis	Nelson	Smoot
Beckham	Husting	New	Sterling
Borah	James	Norris	Stone
Brady	Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Sutherland
Brandegee	Johnson, S. Dak.	Penrose	Swanson
Broussard	Jones, N. Mex.	Pittman	Thompson
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Poindexter	Tillman
Colt	Kellogg	Pomerene	Townsend
Culberson	Kenyon	Reed	Trammell
Cummins	King	Robinson	Underwood
Curtis	Knox	Shafroth	Vardaman
Dillingham	Lewis	Sheppard	Wadsworth
Fernald	Lodge	Sherman	Walsh
Fletcher	McCumber	Simmons	Warren
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Smith, Ariz.	Watson
Gerry	McLean	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Gronna	McNary	Smith, Md.
Hale	Martin	Smith, Mich.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of sickness.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], on account of illness. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is detained on important public business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the discussion of this subject has been prolonged, I shall have to object to the introduction of any resolutions or any other business than the regular order. I hope that we may proceed now with the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] as amended.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to perfect that amendment by adding, after the words "withdrawal of" and before the word "liquors," the word "distilled," and, after the word "liquors," to add "or spirits." That simply makes the language of the amendment comply with the language of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. It makes the language of the exception comply with the language of the section to which the exceptions apply. So the amendment would read as follows:

Provided, however, That the President is hereby empowered to permit the withdrawal of distilled liquors or spirits in bond if, in his opinion, such withdrawal is in the public interest.

Mr. BORAH. I ask to have the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] read as it will read with the amendment of the Senator from Missouri attached.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask leave to introduce, out of order, a bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I suggest——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is compelled to enforce the rule. The Chair wishes the rule would be repealed, because it is very embarrassing to the Chair, but there is a rule that when a Senator has the floor he can not be interrupted for the purpose of introducing bills, resolutions, or anything else except a conference report. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa will be read.

The SECRETARY. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa as already agreed to in Committee of the Whole reads:

No distilled liquors or spirits now in bond in the United States shall, during the existing war, be withdrawn to be used as a beverage, nor shall there be imported into the United States during said war any distilled liquors.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri is after the word "liquors," at the end of the amendment, to insert:

Provided, however, That the President is hereby empowered to permit the withdrawal of distilled liquors or spirits in bond if, in his opinion, such withdrawal is in the public interest.

Mr. BORAH. In view of the provision of section 13, I think it is, with reference to commandeering these liquors, may I ask the Senator from Missouri what is hoped to be obtained by this amendment? Why is it necessary? The President can commandeer under section 13 any liquors which may be necessary for the public use.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have already spoken on the question, and I shall have to answer in the Senator's time.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I expected the Senator to do so.

Mr. REED. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa absolutely ties up all liquors that are in bond. It was stated on yesterday that that would result probably in wrecking some banking and financial institutions that loaned large sums of money upon liquor so bonded, and that it would be a very violent measure.

With that in view I offered the amendment so that if the President found it in the public interest to vest in him the discretion to allow the withdrawal of such liquors. That applies to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa. The other proposition in regard to commandeering I understand to be different entirely. That is a provision enabling the President to take the liquor over for the use of the Government, whereas this gives the President the power to release the liquors which are in bond.

I have no special interest in this matter. It seemed to me from what was said yesterday that it may be the remedy proposed by the Senator from Iowa is too violent and might do some harm in the country, and I offered this to vest it in the President to determine the question of merit with reference to the injury or noninjury of the public.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the bill already provides that the President can commandeer these liquors for public purposes. He needs no further authority with regard to that phase of the matter. If the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri has any application at all, or could have any application, it would be that the President would regard it for the public interest to withdraw these liquors to be used as a beverage, for the amendment which I proposed and which has been adopted is limited to a prohibition against the withdrawal of the liquors as a beverage or to be used as a beverage. I can hardly conceive that the President of the United States would like to be put in the position of withdrawing liquors from bond in order that the people of this country might have an opportunity to drink. I think you are doing the President no good and conferring upon him a power that he would not want to exercise. I would protect him against that power.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield for a question? Under the provision of your amendment it is provided that whisky shall not be withdrawn from bond. The longest term the whisky can remain in bond is eight years. It must be tax paid at the end of seven years. Now, there are millions of gallons of whisky in bond. The term of eight years is probably expiring every week as to several million gallons.

The question I ask the Senator is this: Under your amendment you require people to pay millions of dollars as taxes on whisky which you refuse to allow to be taken out of bond, or which you require shall be kept in the Government bonded warehouse with the constant outage or seepage or loss and wasting of whisky.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator recognizes that he has taken up practically the whole of my time. I answer the question put by the Senator immediately, that if this bill becomes a law in the present form it will modify the particular statute to which the Senator from Kentucky has referred.

One word with regard to the general exigency of the measure to which there was grave objection made yesterday. Suppose, Mr. President, that the supply of gasoline should become short, do you think it would be any great injustice to the people of this country if Congress were to say that during a certain period those who own automobiles should not use them? Would that be confiscating the automobile because we thought that the fuel should not be used in that way?

All these gentlemen agree that we may close the distilleries, that we may suspend the use of the distilleries, during the period of the war. Is it more confiscatory to say that the liquor shall not be used during the period of the war than it is to say that the distillery itself shall not be used for the production of liquor during the war?

It seems to me a moment's reflection will show that the suggestion that there is any confiscation, any real injustice, in enforcing the policy my amendment provides for disappears at once.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa is mistaken in his statement that his amendment changes existing law in regard to tax-paying whisky. That is not true. The Senator's amendment does this: It provides that the distiller shall not take the whisky out of bond during the period of the war, but there is no provision anywhere in the amendment which requires that he shall not tax pay the whisky which he has already given a bond to do, with approved security, which the Government itself holds and can enforce.

When the distiller makes his whisky and places it in bond the Government holds the key. It is a Government warehouse, and it is under the supervision and control of the Government. The distiller can not go into the warehouse without the consent, and under the eye of a Government official, and then only for the purpose of repairing his barrels to prevent his whisky from leakage. The Government requires the distiller to give a bond that at the end of the period for which the whisky is bonded he will pay the tax of $1.10 per gallon, which is the existing law, or $2.20 per gallon which is provided under the new revenue bill. The amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] provides that the distiller must tax pay the whisky, notwithstanding the Government will not allow him to take it out of the warehouse or remove it, or use it in any way. The banks throughout the country, hundreds of citizens, and bonding companies are upon these obligations given by the distiller to the Government to tax pay this whisky.

If the Cummins amendment is adopted, the distiller and the bonding company and the citizen who constitute the distiller's surety to the Government will find themselves in this situation: They must tax pay the whisky, pay the interest upon the money, the outage or loss of whisky shall continue, the cost of keeping men there to prevent the leakages of the barrels in the warehouse shall be continued, and they shall be denied absolutely the right to remove it. I do not believe that is fair. The good Christian people of this country are not in favor of such unjust treatment as that. It is even worse than confiscation. If you are going to say to these people that they shall not remove the whisky from the distillery, where they entered it under a solemn contract with the Government that upon the tax payment provided under the law—$1.10 per gallon—they could remove it from bond, I say it is manifestly unjust to deny them the right to remove it and then require of them the tax payment of it, taking from them not only their product, placing upon them the burden of the cost of its distillation, the outlay and probable loss of the money, but, in addition, saying to them: "You must tax pay this whisky at not less than $1.10 per gallon"—and probably $2.20 per gallon—"which the Government will not allow you to use or withdraw from the warehouse."

The Finance Committee, of which I am a member, unanimously reported from that committee the bill which is now on the calendar which prohibits the distillation of whisky during the war. This was done to conserve the grain for food purposes. I supported that measure. The distilleries are required to remain idle. There is no provision of remuneration to them. Now, to say that the whisky which they have on hand they shall not use, but shall, in addition to this denial, tax pay it, is so manifestly unfair that I believe the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] himself can see that such an injustice as that ought not to be perpetrated.

There are many innocent holders, Mr. President, who must be considered in this matter. The distillers are not the only ones who will suffer. Various banks throughout the country will be greatly injured, if not wrecked. Warehouse receipts for bonding whisky have been good security in the localities where whisky is distilled for a quarter of a century. The Government issues these storage receipts, and the banks and citizens of the State loan money upon them and hold the receipt as security. How unjust it would be to say to these banks: "Your security is destroyed. It is true that when you took it it was as good as a mortgage upon a blue-grass farm, but now the Government steps in and says that not only shall you not remove this property for which you hold a receipt, which is the very title to it, but you shall do the further thing, that will impose the additional injury upon you of requiring you to tax pay this whisky, which they will not allow you to get, to the extent of $1.10 per gallon, or probably $2.20 per gallon." Mr. President, the outage of whisky, which means the seepage, evaporation, and so forth, from the barrel for a term of eight years amounts to 25 per cent. Under the provisions of the Cummins amendment you could keep this whisky in bond until it all had evaporated, until the outage had consumed the whisky, and the distiller not only would lose his whisky, but the tax which the Government required him to pay. This, Mr. President, is not fair play. No great moral cause can be so immoral. Justice demands that tax payments upon whisky should be suspended during the period which you deny the distiller and the banker the right to remove the whisky from bond. I can not conceive anyone who will consider this question coolly and deliberately denying the justice of this contention.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] is an able lawyer, and I can not furnish any explanation to myself as to his advocacy of his amendment, unless it be that he is not familiar with the situation of whisky in bond. After the adjournment last evening, I took occasion to compile some figures in this connection and some data as to the facts, and I appeal to him as a lawyer, and shall ask him later on, what answer he may have to some of the conditions which I intend very briefly to present.

Distilled spirits in bond on June 30, 1916, the end of the fiscal year, 1916, amounted to 232,402,873.3 tax gallons, or an actual amount of about 208,000,000 gallons, subtracting leakage and evaporation, present in the internal-revenue bonded warehouses.

The total for the fiscal year 1917, ended on June 30 last, will not be available until the computations are made; but it is estimated that distilled spirits placed in bond during the year just closed have at least equaled in amount the withdrawals in the same period, and that therefore the present bonded stock of distilled spirits represent not less than 208,000,000 actual gallons.

These bonded stocks, Mr. President, of distilled spirits are owned either by the distillers themselves or by dealers to whom the distillers have sold the goods by transfer of warehouse receipts therefor.

I want to refer to the money which has been loaned by the banks. Under the internal-revenue laws distilled spirits may be held in bond for not more than eight years. Warehouse receipts issued by the distillers for their serially numbered barrels of distilled spirits in the warehouses have long been recognized as prime collateral for bank loans all over the United States, whether the bank be located in a "dry" State where prohibition exists or in a "wet" State.

A careful estimate made by prominent distillers and bankers is that not less than $80,000,000, and perhaps considerably over $100,000,000, of bank loans are now outstanding upon the collateral of these internal-revenue bonded warehouse receipts. These are legitimate business transactions, involving an enormous amount of money in the hands of innocent holders, the loans having been made during a very long period of years, when these receipts were considered the best collateral that a bank could have.

What does the Supreme Court of the United States, Mr. President, say of this transaction? The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Taney v. The First National Bank of Reading, Pa. (232 U. S., 174), considered the validity and use of internal-revenue bonded warehouse receipts as bank collateral. The court upheld the propriety in law of their use as bank collateral when issued direct by the distiller. Mr. Justice Hughes stated that the special circumstances of the Government control of the warehouse enabled the distiller himself to issue his own warehouse receipts.

And what further does Justice Hughes say, Mr. President, about the propriety and the character of this financial transaction? He says:

> But we know of no ground for thus condemning honest transactions which grow out of the recognized necessities of a lawful business. The case is not one where credit may be assumed to be given upon the face of the ostensible ownership of goods in the debtor's possession. Everyone dealing with distillers is familiar with the established practice in accordance with which spirits are held in store under governmental control and are transferred by the delivery of such documents as we have here. * * * The usage serves a fair purpose, and there is no public policy which requires that the trade should be thrown into disorder by a refusal to uphold it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, there are 48 Members of this body who represent 24 prohibition States. It is not surprising, therefore, that the great majority of that 48 should be favorable to "bone-dry" prohibition legislation, nor is it surprising that there should be prohibition advocates from States which are not yet committed to that policy. Those who are familiar with the progress of prohibition legislation are aware, however, that no State in the Union, so far as I am aware, has attempted to abolish the business without assuming the fair attitude of attempting to allow a perfectly lawful business to adjust itself in advance of the effectiveness of the prohibition decree, and yet no one of the prohibition forces has been fair enough to propose an advance adjustment of conditions looking to the effectiveness of this war prohibition. It seems to me we are a little inconsiderate of a business which has been recognized and which in part has been a partnership concern with the Federal Government.

Let me read a telegram I have received this morning from Cincinnati:

> Associated Press dispatches announce the passage of the Cummins amendment prohibiting further use of distilled liquors for beverage during war—

That is at least the effect of the Cummins amendment, though that is not its language—

> Bonding companies are on distillers' bonds for over $250,000,000. This is more than their combined capital. The adoption of the Cummins amendment would bring about financial chaos. We estimate banks of the country carry over $50,000,000 whisky certificates as collateral; also unsecured loans to liquor dealers of over $75,000,000. The adoption of the Cummins amendment would bring about insolvencies carrying liabilities of over $750,000,000.

It seems to me, Mr. President, if that is a fair representation of the financial situation involved in this legislation, that Congress, eager to have the business of the country go on, eager to maintain and stabilize conditions, would at least hesitate before adopting so drastic a proposition as that which the Senate, momentarily at least, adopted at the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa.

I am not favorable, Mr. President, to the Senate adopting the so-called Reed amendment. In part it accomplishes a bestowal of fairness, but I think the Senate ought to hesitate to reach such a desired end by this method of indirection. The Senate ought, in reasonable fairness, to come right out and declare its policy. If we are going to insist on the maintenance of liquors in bond, let us say so frankly and distinctly; but if we are going to allow the owners of this property to come to a realization of their just possessions let us do that by direct legislation, instead of going and whipping the devil about the stump as this amendment necessarily does.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HARDING. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Would the Senator be willing to support this measure in case an amendment were proposed postponing its actual operation, say, for six months?

Mr. HARDING. I should infinitely prefer it to the present arrangement.

Mr. BORAH. Well, but would it be satisfactory to those who oppose it?

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I will answer the Senator's question with explicitness when I have five minutes more time to go into details. I do not propose to answer it by a mere "yes" or "no," but I will be very glad to answer the question later on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Ohio has expired.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in presenting the amendment which has been designated in the press as the administration compromise I was inspired solely by the purpose of promoting a speedy conclusion of this controversy. I am satisfied that the Senate did not understand the full effect of the amendment to my amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa. I am also convinced that the Senate does not desire to do any injustice to anyone.

The statement which has just been made on the floor by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] as to the effect of the amendment by the Senator from Iowa discloses that, while it will deny to the owners of distilled spirits the use of their product, it will still require them to pay the Government tax. I do not believe there is a man in this Chamber, or anywhere else for that matter, who would regard legislation of that character as fair, reasonable, or just.

Mr. President, it will undoubtedly produce a reaction against the very laudable movement in behalf of national prohibition, which I favor. It is not fair to undertake, Senators, the settlement of a question of so far-reaching importance as the question of national prohibition upon this bill. It is not fair to undertake to determine it exclusively as an alleged conservation of food measure.

We all understand the constitutional limitations on the power of Congress to enact statutory national prohibition; we all know that we have the power to pass a joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment in an orderly way and submit it to the States. When ratified this will authorize Congress to enact national prohibition; but now, in a great national crisis, when more than ever in the history of this country we need and require the solid support of our people, we are proposing here to pass a measure which practically confiscates hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of property and at the same time imposes a tax burden upon that property. I want to say that while the representatives of the prohibition movement, commonly known as legislative representatives of the Anti-Saloon League, have been criticized on the floor of the Senate for agreeing to eliminate wine and beer from this bill and thus enable the Senate to reach a speedy conclusion concerning the subject—while they have been criticized for that action, I think they were prompted by patriotic purposes and motives and deserve commendation. The Cummins amendment, if retained in the bill, will occasion indefinite delay in the passage of the food-control bill.

I think the Senate ought to pass this food bill, and pass it speedily. We ought not to retain the amendment of the Senator from Iowa in this bill, because it will work an injustice which will occasion a reaction against this Government. It can not do good to impose a tax upon these people while we are confiscating their property. Let us be fair and just; let us determine this national prohibition question like men. I will vote for it whenever the opportunity arises; but I do not believe any fair-minded person would want me to stultify myself by confiscating hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of property and at the same time imposing a burden of taxation upon it. I think the Cummins amendment ought to be reconsidered.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I was very much struck with the figures given by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING], and I should like to know, as the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] was speaking of that matter when he was cut off, if he has any other figures relating to that subject, for I think it is a very important consideration, affecting, as it does, general business. If the Senator will answer me, I will yield to him in my time.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, if I may be permitted in the time of the Senator from Massachusetts, I will be very glad to furnish him with those figures, for I think they are really striking; but, first, I want to refer to warehouse receipts which are hypothecated with banks throughout New England, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky, Wisconsin, Missouri, Minnesota, Louisiana, California, and other States as collateral for loans to distillers and owners of distilled spirits in bond, reaching in the aggregate, in the opinion of experienced persons, nearly $100,000,000. These loans have been made upon the faith of the distilled spirits in bond, the loans to be paid upon resale in bond or upon withdrawal from bond in due course.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask what is the question which the Senator from Pennsylvania is answering the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. I asked the Senator from Pennsylvania if he could give me the figures as to the amount involved under the liability of the bonding companies.

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator from Idaho will not take up my time, I will endeavor to answer now.

Mr. BORAH. We have at least discovered a method by which an address may be made upon this bill.

Mr. PENROSE. I hope this interruption will not be counted against my time, Mr. President, or the time of the Senator from Massachusetts. I am giving the Senate real facts, not the usual speech of the demagogue or the fanatic, and I want these facts to sink into the minds of Senators, and expect some of them to be called upon by me to answer them.

Now as to bonding companies, concerning which the Senator from Massachusetts makes inquiry: Every gallon of distilled spirits in bond is covered by a warehousing bond guaranteeing the payment of the tax thereon within eight years from the date of warehousing. Millions of gallons of distilled spirits must be withdrawn within the next six months, as the Senator from Kentucky has stated—spirits of a character which can not be used except for beverage purposes, and consequently can not be withdrawn by their owners for other than beverage purposes. When the distiller fails the bank has a bad loan, and the bonding company has to make good the tax. The Government, under existing laws, will force these spirits out of bond, and call upon the bonding companies for the payment of the tax. The total liability of the bonding companies exceeds their combined assets and capital, Mr. President; and with the ruin and disaster brought upon the entire distilling and owning trade in distilled spirits, the bonding companies will be compelled to stand back of the tax liability upon all goods now in bond, and I am assured that there will be more than one bank in the New England States and in Pennsylvania and New York and Maryland and more than one bonding company which will fail should the so-called Cummins amendment be retained in the bill.

Mr. President, in closing my answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts—for I do not want to take up too much of his time—I will only refer to the revenues which the Government derives from this source, and which the Finance Committee in its scheme of taxation has constituted an important part of its fiscal program. These facts are generally admitted and well understood and have been frequently referred to.

I hope I have answered the Senator's question.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator has.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, it occurs to me that it is a very easy matter for us to take care of the tax proposition by providing that this tax shall not be required to be paid until these liquors are taken out of bond. That is not beyond the constitutional power of Congress, I think, and I am satisfied that nobody will object to an amendment of that sort.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator will not take as much time as the Senator from Pennsylvania did in answering the Senator from Massachusetts, I will.

Mr. JAMES. No; I will not. I will be very brief. The Senator knows that the Government allows outage to the distillers.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I really do not know very much about those things. I am very glad to get that information from the Senator.

Mr. JAMES. The Government allows outage, and allows up to 13½ gallons for seven years. Now, suppose you keep the distiller's whisky in there for three years longer, or two years longer. Are you going to allow him any additional outage?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think probably we could take care of that; but——

Mr. JAMES. The trouble is that it has not been done.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I understand, we do not compel the distiller to keep this liquor in bond for any length of time, but we say he must take it out within a certain time.

Mr. JAMES. Oh, yes; you do. He can not take it out of bond for bottling purposes until it has been in bond four years.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It must be in bond four years before it can be taken out?

Mr. JAMES. Oh, yes; absolutely.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But I understand that there is a great deal that has been in bond more than four years now. Does anyone doubt, Mr. President, but that that will all come out, with this provision adopted, before this bill passes? That is the only thing I fear in regard to the Cummins amendment—that it will bring out so much of this liquor that the country will be flooded by what so many of our Senators fear; that they will bring it right out of these bonded warehouses and have it all ready for beverage purposes.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, may I correct the Senator on that point?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. PENROSE. That is a physical and a financial impossibility, Mr. President. It would be beyond the financing power of the banks and of the distillers to take this stuff out of bond prior to the passage of this law.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Well, Mr. President, they would take out enough to supply the beverage demands of the country for a year or two. I am satisfied of that.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator may be.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am glad to know that there is one thing, anyhow, that is beyond the power of this interest, that is impossible at its hands.

Mr. President, I am very much in accord with the suggestions made by the Senator from Arkansas. I should like to see the constitutional amendment presented and submitted and passed by the Senate, as I think it would be, and get rid of much of this, and I hope it will be called up and voted upon before this session ends and let the people have a chance to speak; but I am not urging these matters, so far as that is concerned, upon the grounds of prohibition. Senators on the other side suggest and declare that those who are urging this are doing it in order to get prohibition. That is not it, Mr. President. I am just as patriotic as the Senators who are opposing this proposition. I may be mistaken, but I believe that there is nothing that we can do better to strengthen the arm of this country to win the contest that it is in now than to suspend during the pendency of the war this influence that has done more to weaken the arms of England and France than any other one influence, and that will do more to weaken and destroy our power than any other one influence. If I did not think that, if I did not believe it with all my heart and soul, I would not be urging this proposition here.

Senators talk about wanting a unanimous sentiment in this country. Why, Mr. President, for this Congress to deny what millions and millions of the very best people of this country are praying for and desiring with all their heart and soul, in order that we may win this war, will do more to weaken and dampen the spirit and the patriotism of our people than any other action that we can take. I may be mistaken in that, but that is my judgment. That is the main reason why I am anxious to see this done.

Why, they said when the conscription act was urged that that would cause riots all over the country; yet we did not hesitate to pass it, and say that we will take the first born of every home in this land if it is necessary to save this Nation of ours. The people were patriotic. They did not respond with riots and insurrection and rebellion. But, Mr. President, after doing that, shall we say to the financial interests of this country and the interests that are represented in these industries: "You can go on with your business; we will let this waste continue," in the face of the appeals for conservation, in the face of the appeals to the women of the land to take care of every crumb?

Mr. President, that is why I want it done. I may be mistaken, but I am not unpatriotic.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Washington has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, it is the common lot of humanity for men to run to extremes. No matter what a man is advocating or what he is opposing, when he begins to make a fetish or a fad of it he allows it to disturb his vision to such an extent that he takes no note of actual facts. I do not apply that to either side of this controversy alone, but to both sides. It is true not only of this controversy but of all other controversies when men get worked up; somebody will contend that there is a millenium in the thing, and somebody will contend that there is a hell in it, and they are both perhaps equally sincere and both nearly equally wrong.

I was struck with a realization of this fact a moment ago when the Senator from Washington was speaking, by his assertion that inefficiency in the French and British Armies was owing to the consumption of alcoholic drinks of various sorts. Now, according to the British Medical Journal "2½ ounces of rum are issued to each man in the British Army twice a week. For men in the trenches, this allowance is increased to 3 ounces twice a week under ordinary weather conditions, and to 2½ ounces daily in very bad weather, making a minimum of 5 ounces a week and a maximum of 17½ ounces." Keep that in your minds.

The French soldier receives daily 50 grams of rum, containing 20 grams of alcohol, and a half liter of wine.

The German soldier is allowed 1,793 grams of beer and 20 grams of brandy a day. The beer, which is of the ordinary lager variety—that is, very low alcohol beer—has an alcohol content of only about 3½ per cent; but this quantity plus the brandy would amount to a total of 70.7 grams of actual alcohol a day in the Germany Army, as against 17½ in the English Army.

Now, the Senator, in letting his fetish run away with him, is trying to account for the fact that the English and French have not whipped Germany to a standstill up to date by the fact that they are taking too much alcohol, totally oblivious for the time being of the fact that the Germans are taking a very great deal more.

"The Austrian soldiers receive each day one-half of a liter of wine, equivalent to 40 grams of alcohol." Their armies have been least efficient of all, not because they had less alcohol, of course, but they had less.

Now, Mr. President, I want to state just this: When a man rises and says that a great war can not be fought without prohibition no sort of parliamentary language can properly designate his attitude. The Revolution was fought without it; the Civil War was fought without it; the Napoleonic wars were fought without it. No armies of Europe were so abundantly supplied with good red wine as the armies of Napoleon, wherever he could get it for them. Of course alcohol is a curse—the man that takes it must confess that—if it is abused at all; and when you meet a man that tells you that he drinks, but he drinks moderately all the time and never drinks to excess, he is generally either mistaken about himself or he is lying. It is a thing the excess of which is easy, the abuse of which is constant, and the evil of which is awful; but to come here and try to confiscate millions of dollars' worth of property and to render worthless millions of dollars' worth of securities in addition to that, and to give up, besides all that, two hundred and fifty millions of revenue, all three of which things the Cummins amendment involves, strikes me as carrying unreason to the superlative point.

You have got it now with the Robinson amendment, without the Cummins amendment to the Robinson amendment, so that you have food conservation. The Senator says that he wants it for food conservation. Will you tell me how forbidding whisky already made from being taken out of the warehouse multiplies the amount of food or contributes to food conservation? How are you going to "unscramble" the whisky and get the corn and rye out? The Senator in the next breath denies that he is voting for the Cummins amendment because he wants prohibition. I leave him to reconcile his argument with the facts as they exist and his vote with his assertion of purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I voted for the Cummins amendment both times. I should be glad if the use as a beverage of the whisky in bond could be prevented, but at the same time I do not want to take any step that would be contrary to absolute justice to the men who have their money invested in it. I confess that I was a great deal impressed by what the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] said about these taxes. I am not posted as to the law or the details of it, but it seems to me that if the Senator from Kentucky has it right—and I have no reason to dispute his knowledge of it—he has presented an objection to the so-called Cummins amendment that is serious.

I have wondered—and I should like to have the opinion of the Senator from Kentucky if I can—whether an amendment could not be added in the shape of a proviso that would meet that objection with regard to those taxes.

I have at my desk here blocked out an amendment as follows, and I want to call the attention of the Senate to it, particularly the attention of the Senator from Kentucky. I suggest adding a proviso something like this:

Provided, however, That the payment of any taxes that may become due on said liquor during the continuance of said war shall not be required until said war is ended.

I should like to know whether that would be a remedy, as far as the payment of taxes is concerned, and whether it is a practical proposition to add this kind of a proviso. If the Senator from Kentucky desires to answer in my time I shall be glad to yield to him now.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that I have drawn an amendment myself, which I expect to offer if the Senate finally determines to accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, to suspend the tax payment; and an amendment ought to be drawn also in regard to the outage allowance.

Mr. NORRIS. Perhaps that is true. I was not endeavoring to cover that part of it; but I can see that if the Senator has the facts right in regard to the outage, it ought to be met.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, does the Senator from Nebraska think that under all the circumstances it is necessary for the Government of the United States to guarantee that these men who have made an investment in liquor shall lose nothing and make no sacrifice?

Mr. NORRIS. No; and I am not undertaking to cover the indebtedness part of it or the mortgaging of it or anything of that kind. To me that does not appear to be serious. But if these men are required to pay taxes and not permitted to take out the property, it seems to me that is an injustice, and that it ought to be remedied. We ought not to require them to pay taxes and at the same time refuse to permit them to take out the liquor. The fair thing would be to defer the payment of taxes until the time comes when they are allowed to take possession of the liquor.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield for a question.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to suggest to the Senator that if this amendment is adopted, certainly Congress will not tax the whisky that is to remain in bond.

Mr. NORRIS. That is, if the Cummins amendment is agreed to.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Of course, in that event it will not be taxed, as I understand.

Mr. NORRIS. I understood that it would be.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Well, that is a matter in the hands of Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. I understood that what the Senator was objecting to was the compulsory payment of taxes while the Government refused to permit the people to take out the product taxed, and that is the difficulty I desire to remedy.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I was very much impressed by what the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] said when he quoted the practice of Britain with reference to serving liquor to the soldiers; but, as I now recall, the Senator from Mississippi on the 18th day of May voted to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors to American soldiers, and made it a crime for any one to sell them liquor. How the Senator can bolster up his present attitude by quoting Britain, while this statute remains unrepealed, is beyond my comprehension.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, in view of section 13 of the bill I doubt if the situation is nearly as bad as stated by either the Senator from Pennsylvania or the Senator from Kentucky. I am going to ask to have section 13 read in my time. It is the section which permits the Government to take over all liquors needed for governmental purposes and pay for them, and if the party is not satisfied with the price he may bring suit for the balance. I am opposed to the Reed amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The section will be read.

The SECRETARY. Section 13, as proposed by the committee amendment, reads:

SEC. 13. That the President is authorized and directed to commandeer any or all distilled spirits in bond at the date of the approval of this act for redistillation, in so far as such redistillation may be necessary to meet the requirements of the Government in the manufacture of munitions and other military and hospital supplies, or in so far as such redistillation would dispense with the necessity of utilizing products and materials suitable for foods and feeds in the future manufacture of distilled spirits for the purposes herein enumerated. The President shall determine and pay a just compensation for the distilled spirits so commandeered, and if the compensation so determined be not satisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same such person shall be paid 75 per cent of the amount so determined by the President and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as, added to said 75 per cent, will make up such amount as will be just compensation for such spirits, in the manner provided by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I have heard it said in a way, without knowing whether my information is accurate, that a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the substitute amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas was agreed to would be made. If that is to be done, I would think it would be better if we could have an arrangement to vote upon the motion to reconsider first—that is, ahead of the vote on the amendment of my colleague [Mr. REED], which is the pending amendment.

I would be very reluctant to vote to send a question of this kind to the White House and submit it to the President for his action. I am not in sympathy with that policy. Still I would vote for it as a last resort. But I would be very glad if such a motion as I referred to for reconsideration could be offered, that it could be determined before the other question is taken up, for if a vote to reconsider should be in the affirmative it would relieve some of us of some embarrassment in casting our vote on the motion to remit the matter to the President. I would make the motion to reconsider if I could do so. I changed by vote yesterday when the Senator from Iowa offered the very same amendment to the House text, but I did not change it when he offered his amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas. Therefore my vote stands in the negative, and I can not move to reconsider. I do not know that any Senator could, but if so I should like to have that done now. Otherwise I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to the Robinson amendment, and later on when we come to consider the House provision, and the final amendments to the House provision are proposed, I shall probably be in a position to move a reconsideration of the whole subject.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, aside from the merits or demerits of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, I am going to vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri, because I can see no reason why we should refer such a matter as this to the President. Indeed, I do not see how the President could possibly execute this amendment if it is to be executed along the lines suggested by the Senator from Missouri.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Did not the Senator from Idaho open the discussion on the Reed amendment this morning?

Mr. BORAH. I did not know that I had spoken upon it. I made an inquiry in somebody else's time. But I have said about all I desire to say, and I do not wish to trespass upon the rule.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I certainly can not vote for the pending amendment. I can not see how it is possible for the President to exercise the power and do justice to all concerned in the United States.

I simply rose, Mr. President, to give notice now that if I can receive recognition after the pending amendment is voted upon I shall offer an amendment directing the President of the United States to take over for and on behalf of the Government of the United States all liquors in bond, and pay for the same. That will take care of all the questions that have been raised here to-day by the Senator from Kentucky and by the Senator from Pennsylvania, and I think it will take care of all the financial institutions of the country and those that have advanced money in any way upon liquors in bond, and do justice to the distillers who made the liquor under a permit from the Government of the United States in good faith, and that they can not complain if they are paid the actual cost and a reasonable profit over and above that cost.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. REED. How much of our money would it take at this time to carry out the Senator's plan?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not tell how many millions of dollars it would take; I am frank to say, Mr. President, it would take many millions of dollars, but even if it were $150,000,000 it would be cheap for the Government of the United States in case it will do away with the boozing bill of the country which amounts to nearly $2,500,000,000. It would be a very, very splendid investment for the Government of the United States if by paying half a billion dollars it could stop the waste and expenditure of nearly two billion and a half dollars that brings nothing but ruin and destruction to the people of the country who consume it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I rose to ask a question entirely for information. If the Government took over the liquor, it would be for the purpose of redistillation in order to make material for munition purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. And hospital and whatever other purposes desired, as provided for in the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. What I want to ask is if that process is an expensive one; I mean, in the redistillation of such liquors would the alcohol cost more than it would cost to manufacture alcohol in the regular way? I desire to know what the operation would cost, and if so, how much.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say there is no question but that there is a slight loss in the redistillation of spirits, and that if all whiskies that are in bond were redistilled for the purpose of taking out the alcohol in them it would cost the Government, besides the slight loss, about 5 cents per gallon. Of course, the Senator knows that the cost of making pure alcohol does much exceed 30 cents per gallon, but I take the position that I do not care what it would cost the Government, now is the time to stop the manufacture of distilled spirits. It is a splendid time now for the Government of the United States to say that henceforth and forever there shall be no distilled spirits manufactured in the United States except for certain specified purposes, and in no case for beverage purposes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I agree with the Senator that if we are going to take this liquor it ought to be paid for, but I wish to ask for information, What will the Government do with it? It would not redistill it all for munitions.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Government of the United States can use ultimately every gallon of it. There will be a slight loss, as I have already stated, in the redistillation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Utah has expired.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, according to the amendment which was offered by the Senator from Iowa and adopted, these liquors that are in bond are not to be sold for beverage purposes. Everybody seemed to concede that that is wise, if there is no loss to the distillers of the liquor.

Mr. President, there is a commandeering proposition which was read at the desk a few minutes ago, and which, it seems to me, by proper amendment, could prevent any financial loss by the distillers. If that is true, there should be no complaint in keeping in the bill the Cummins amendment as it has been adopted.

I have been informed, and I found it in print somewhere, that the total amount which would be required to commandeer all the distilled spirits in the United States was $80,000,000. Of course, that does not take into consideration the amount that would have to be paid if it was used for beverage purposes. As quickly as it is withdrawn from bond, of course, a tax of $1.10 a gallon has to be paid, and that, of course, raises the price very much. In the revenue bill which is about to be enacted the tax is raised to $2.20 per gallon, and that much more, of course, would be added if the liquor was taken out of bond. But, Mr. President, in all these provisions the tax would not be paid if the Government commandeers it, and if it had been paid it should be refunded. That being the case, it seems to me that the commandeering proposition would not cost very much; but even if, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has said, it cost three or four times the amount of $80,000,000, as estimated, it would be a most excellent investment by the United States.

I believe, Mr. President, that in this war it is necessary that something of this kind should be done, and the only question in my mind that is at all debatable is the question as to whether these distillers shall be saved from loss. As they can be freed from loss by the expenditure of a mere bagatelle compared to $2,500,000,000 that is expended every year in intoxicating drink, it seems to me that a commandeering proposition ought to follow this amendment of the Senator from Iowa, and it ought to be adopted and thereby save this loss to the distillers.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have no question about the propriety at this time of imposing absolute prohibition against the use of grains and other food products in the distillation of liquor. I take it there is not much division in the Senate upon that question. That is a food-conservation proposition, and meets my hearty approval.

But the question now presented is not a food-conservation question at all. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], who sits near me, suggests that it is a confiscation proposition. It is either a confiscation proposition or it is a pure and simple prohibition proposition. I think it is chiefly the latter.

Mr. President, I challenge any man in the Senate to present a more consistent prohibition record than I have in my State. I think there is hardly a man in North Carolina who will deny that I largely initiated and successfully led the fight for prohibition in that State.

I know, as every man knows who has been as I have been in hot prohibition conflicts, that there is no question upon which people who are divided feel more intensely and more bitterly than upon this question, and I can conceive of no question that could be injected into this war situation that will create more dissension and more discord and disturb that unity which is so necessary if we are to win the war than would this question in those States where the sentiment is against prohibition and in favor of liberty and license in the sale and use of liquor.

It seems to me that in these circumstances it is unwise from every standpoint, especially from the standpoint of patriotism and of the successful conduct of the war, that this prohibition question should be injected into this situation. That the President of the United States feels that way, I think, is apparent from his letter to the head of the Anti-Saloon League in this city, which was yesterday read into the RECORD. In this letter he appeals to the league, upon the grounds of patriotism, to hold the fight upon this question in abeyance until a more opportune time; at least not to jeopardize this bill or delay its passsage by ingrafting it upon it.

To this appeal those gentlemen readily and patriotically have responded. They have recognized the force of the President's appeal and made public announcement of their purpose and action in this behalf. They said in substance to the President, "If, in your judgment, our course is unwise and unpatriotic, we will withdraw from the fight." It seems to me that the friends of prohibition in this body should follow their example and let this bill pass as quickly as possible, as the President says, and all admit in the public interest it should.

It must be obvious to every Senator that if this amendment be attached to this bill it will jeopardize its passage. Yea, Mr. President, I will go further than that. The President feared it would delay its passage, greatly to the detriment of the public weal. I agree with the President, and I go further, and I give it as my deliberate opinion that if this amendment is added to the bill it may, and probably will, drag it down to defeat.

The VICE PRESIDENT rapped with his gavel.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, apropos of what will be done with the whisky in bond in this country if the Cummins amendment be allowed to stand, I understand that at the Battle of Verdun, covering a period of several months, the quantity of high explosives used by the entente allies would require far more alcohol in the making thereof than could be obtained from the redistillation of all the whisky now in bond in the United States. If we are to wage much war in Europe, we shall need high explosives in large quantities, and I know of no better way of obtaining them than by the redistillation of the whisky now in bond in the United States. It seems to me we shall have use for all of it if this war should last long, and that disposition of it would repay the people who have money invested in the whisky and at the same time would serve the interests of our country.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I must say that I am somewhat confused as to the attitude of some Senators upon this question. Next November there will be submitted to the voters of New Mexico a proposed amendment to their constitution prohibiting the use of liquors and wines as a beverage. I hope, if the Senate adjourns in season, to get out to New Mexico to vote for that constitutional amendment. I hope the time is not far distant when we shall have such an amendment to the Federal Constitution, but until that time comes it seems to me that we ought to deal with this question in a sane manner.

Senators upon this floor who are ardent prohibitionists have expressly declared themselves in favor of permitting the use of wine and beer in unlimited quantities. Senators have taken that position upon this floor who would not do that in their own States. They have done it upon the ground that this is not a prohibition measure. They have voted to prevent the use of grain in the manufacture of distilled spirits upon the ground that it is a conservation measure. It has been repeatedly stated upon the floor that it is not a prohibition movement; that it is a conservation measure. As a conservation measure it has my hearty support, but I do not believe that this is the time to inject the prohibition question into the measure now before the Senate in which the country is so much interested. When the Prohibitionists stand here and say they are in favor of the use of wine and beer in unlimited quantities, it seems to me they are proving false to the principle upon which prohibition is founded. If you consider this as a conservation measure, then you are going too far. By the Cummins amendment you are turning it, as has already been stated, into a confiscation measure.

As the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] has just stated, it is true these liquors may be redistilled and the alcohol taken from them. Much of this liquor has been in bond for a number of years. The cost to the owner is far beyond the ordinary cost of alcohol. Do you want the Government of the United States at this time to pay such an exorbitant price for the alcohol to go into munitions as would be necessary if you convert this liquor to such a purpose?

It seems to me that we are making a mistake if the Cummins amendment shall remain in the bill and become a law. In my judgment, it would confiscate many millions of dollars; it would drive into bankruptcy a number of the banks of the country. I believe that we want to carry on this war with as little disturbance to business as possible. The revenue bill, which we have just framed and submitted to the Senate, was framed with that in view. We have dealt with this question; we have planned that millions of dollars shall be raised for revenue purposes upon these very liquors. It is true that we have prohibited in our revenue bill the use of grains in further distillation, but we expected to derive, and have planned to derive, a large revenue from whisky already in bond.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, in reply to the statement of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], I simply want to read the testimony of Col. Pabst, one of the biggest brewers, I believe, in the United States.

Mr. PABST. The total number of bushels of grain used in 1916—

He is speaking of the brewing of beer—

is 70,505,488; return to the farm as a dairy food, 35 per cent, 24,676,920 bushels. Net number of bushels of grain used in the manufacture of beer, 45,828,568—

And so forth. He further states:

The number of bushels of barley used in the United States in 1916 was 52,439,973, and the total number of bushels grown in the United States was 180,927,000 bushels

I call the Senator's attention to the fact that there are less than 40,000,000 bushels used in the manufacture of whisky or in the manufacture of any distilled spirits. So I deny that a vote in favor of the pending amendment or the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is a conservation measure.

I am giving the Senate the figures of the men who are interested in the business; they are not figures which I have myself compiled. This testimony will be found in the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, on pages 320, 321, and following.

Mr. President, I believe that section 13 of the bill, which not only authorizes but which directs the President of the United States to commandeer any distilled spirits in bond, will do exactly what the Senator from Utah suggests, that the Government of the United States shall pay those who own this liquor a fair price. Section 13 provides that the President of the United States is not only authorized but directed to commandeer, if he sees fit, every gallon in bond. For what purpose?

To meet the requirements of the Government in the manufacture of munitions and other military and hospital supplies.

I agree, Mr. President, that there would be a tremendous loss to the Government of the United States in the redistillation of this liquor. What are we going to do with it? Is there any Senator here who will deny that the condition to-day is such that every pound of grain fit for food will be required? I ask Senators to study the reports, the special reports, which have just been made and which are available. Take those reports, study them for yourselves, and see whether or not we are in a condition to supply the people of the United States and our allies with the foodstuffs that we and they will require. There will be a tremendous loss, Mr. President, to the Government of the United States in taking over this bonded whisky and redistilling it into alcohol. Potatoes will, of course, be cheap next fall, and we could manufacture alcohol from potatoes at from 20 to 25 cents a gallon; but when a gallon of whisky is redistilled there will not be obtained from it three-fourths of a gallon, and it would, perhaps, cost a maximum of $1 a gallon to do that. If, however, it would serve the purpose of saving this Nation is it not worth it? How are we going to get the foodstuffs in any other way, I ask you? I do not believe that there is a human being in this country or anywhere else who can suggest any other method and call it a conservation measure than taking this whisky over and redistilling it for military purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CUMMINS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment to the amendment be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the words "distilled liquors," in the proposed amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, on page 2, line 17, of the printed amendment, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, however, That the President is hereby empowered to permit the withdrawal of distilled liquors in bond if, in his opinion, such withdrawal is in the public interest.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been requested. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. He is absent, and I do not know how he would vote on this question. However, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] and vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON (when Mr. KIRBY's name was called). My colleague, the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], is unavoidably absent. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. I have been just informed by the pair clerk that that Senator will be absent during the day, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WOLCOTT (when Mr. SAULSBURY's name was called). I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SAULSBURY] on account of important business. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. He is absent, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS (when Mr. STERLING's name was called). I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] on account of illness and will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. Not knowing how he would vote on this proposition, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SHAFROTH (when the name of Mr. THOMAS was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of illness. I desire that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] and vote "yea."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 38, nays 45, as follows:

YEAS—38.

Ashurst	Husting	Owen	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	James	Penrose	Smith, Ga.
Broussard	Jones, N. Mex.	Phelan	Smith, Md.
Calder	Lewis	Pittman	Stone
Colt	Lodge	Pomerene	Swanson
Culberson	McLean	Ransdell	Tillman
Fletcher	Martin	Reed	Underwood
Gerry	New	Robinson	Warren
Hitchcock	Newlands	Sheppard
Hollis	Overman	Simmons

NAYS—45.

Beckham	Gronna	McKellar	Thompson
Borah	Hale	McNary	Townsend
Brady	Harding	Myers	Trammell
Brandegee	Johnson, Cal.	Nelson	Vardaman
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Wadsworth
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Page	Walsh
Curtis	Kellogg	Poindexter	Watson
Dillingham	Kendrick	Shafroth	Williams
Fernald	Kenyon	Sherman	Wolcott
France	King	Shields
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Smith, Mich.
Gore	La Follette	Smoot

NOT VOTING—13.

Fall	Hughes	Smith, S. C.	Weeks
Gallinger	Kirby	Sterling
Goff	McCumber	Sutherland
Hardwick	Saulsbury	Thomas

So Mr. REED's amendment to the amendment of Mr. ROBINSON was rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk, to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, after the words "distilled liquors," the following:

Provided, That the President of the United States be, and hereby is, directed to take over for and on behalf of the Government of the United States all distilled liquors that are held in bond at the time this act goes into effect, and he is hereby authorized to pay the owners of such liquors the actual cost of the same plus a profit not exceeding 10 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a word in relation to this amendment.

I recognize that there was some justice in the criticism made by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] and also the statement made by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], as to those who are the owners of the distilled spirits in bond, and banks that have advanced money to the distillers, and particularly the bonding companies that guaranteed the payment of the tax when withdrawn from bond.

There will be 208,000,000 gallons of distilled spirits in bond at least—there may be more than that—by the time this bill becomes a law. If the Government of the United States lost all of the money it is claimed it would lose, and the actual cost of the distilled spirits plus 10 per cent would amount to $1.50 a gallon, it would be $300,000,000. But the Government of the United States is not going to lose that amount. In fact, a very small proportion of it will be lost to the Government. I therefore believe that in view of the fact that the distillers have run this business for over a century in partnership, as it were, with the Government of the United States, at least with its approval, the Government now, to be absolutely fair with them, should at least hold them safe from loss.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. What is the estimated actual cost of these liquors in bond?

Mr. SMOOT. I have tried to arrive at the figure of the actual cost of distilled spirits in bond, but I have been unable to arrive at a figure that I could say with safety would be even close to the actual cost. Under the law, whenever the bottled spirits go into bond they are required to remain there four years before they can be withdrawn, and under the law they are compelled to be withdrawn and tax paid upon them within eight years; or, in other words, under the law they are not allowed to remain in bond over eight years. The value of distilled spirits is based upon the age of the same. I have been unable so far to find the amount of spirits in bond that have been in there, say, two years, four years, five years, six years, or seven years; and I would have to know the age of the liquor in order to arrive at anything that would be an approximate figure.

But grant, as I say, that the value would be $1.50 a gallon. Then there could not possibly be a loss of more than half that price, and much of it would be not to exceed 50 or 60 cents a gallon. With those figures in view, it could not possibly cost the Government of the United States more than $150,000,000 to pay all that the actual cost of the spirits may prove to be. Then, Mr. President, there must be deducted from that all of the advantages that will come to the Government from taking over that 208,000,000 gallons of distilled spirits. The Government of the United States certainly would not lose more than half of the amount, and half of the $150,000,000 would only be $75,000,000; and that is a very cheap way for the Government of the United States to dispose of this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Utah has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, it seems to me that every dictate of justice and common honesty requires that if the Cummins amendment is to become law this proviso offered by the Senator from Utah should also become law.

The other day, when dwelling upon this question of taking private property without compensation, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] referred to the fact that the United States Government had taken the slaves and had never paid anything for them. Now, so far as the slaves belonged to slave owners, who were citizens of the Confederate States and were fighting the Federal Government at that time, that was the confiscation or the taking for war purposes by one belligerent of the property of the citizens of another belligerent, and has no reference to this sort or thing. But at that time there were slaves held in Delaware, Kentucky, Maryland, and Missouri, that had never seceded, and Mr. Lincoln's friends in all the legislatures of those bodies, except possibly Missouri, tried to pass bills—the Senator from Illinois said Mr. Lincoln made propositions to these States; that is not quite accurate, but friends of his did, and he was in sympathy with their purpose—tried to pass bills to pay the slave owners in the border States, where there had been no secession, for their slaves. Long before that, when Mr. Lincoln was a Member of Congress here, he introduced a bill to emancipate the slaves in the District of Columbia, and accompanied it with a provision for the valuation of them and the payment to their owners of their value.

One of the greatest blots upon the escutcheon of the United States to-day is that they did not pay the loyal slave owners in the border States for their slaves. There was nothing that we of the Confederate States had a right to complain of about freeing our slaves as a war measure, being a confiscation of enemy property—not a private "enemy that went like liquid hell-fire in somebody's stomach," as the Senator from Illinois irrelevantly said, but a public enemy actually in arms against the Nation itself.

Now, Mr. President, it is just a matter of common honesty if you let a man go on in a business and give the sanction of law to the possession and the accumulation of a certain sort of property, and then by law take that property away from him, that you should put him in statu quo. Now, whatever is statu quo in this case may be a little indefinite; but undoubtedly it is at least the cost of the material, the cost of the distillation, and the interest on the money during the time the stuff has been in the warehouse, including the expense of the warehousing, whatever that may be, and then finally a fair profit—10 per cent, as stated by the Senator from Utah. Even then you leave the man's property in the still itself partially destroyed, but only partially, because it can be converted to other uses; can be, say, used for a munition plant. It is not like a brewery in that respect. You can do nothing with an old brewery except throw it in the scrap heap, but you can turn a distillery into a munition plant. You would leave the owner with that much less demand for the use of his still, of course, and with that much less value attached to his plant, but that is so indefinite that it is hard to go into.

I think that a nation, like an individual, ought to be honest. If the Government of the United States agreed that cigar smoking and the use of tobacco were doing me harm, the Government would be exactly right; and if the Government had the constitutional right, say, under the taxing power in some way, indirectly or in the exercise of a war power, if I were a soldier and they thought it was decreasing my efficiency, to take a box of cigars away from me, but the Government ought to pay me for the box of cigars. Now, I have no doubt that the whisky which any of us drinks does us harm, and I have no doubt that the distillery in making the whisky has made a thing that has done humanity harm; but you have permitted it, you have allowed it, you have given it the sanction of a legal title in every way in the world, and you have no right to rob him of it under forms of law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, 10 years ago, as governor of the State of Georgia, I approved a State-wide prohibition bill. I have voted for every measure that has come before the Senate looking to the curtailment of the sale of liquor. I shall vote with a great deal of pleasure for the constitutional amendment, which I hope will soon be adopted, and give an opportunity in the next few years for three-fourths of the States legally to terminate the sale of intoxicating drinks for beverages in the United States. But, Mr. President, this is not a prohibition measure. This is a food-control measure. I do not believe we ought to load it down with our prohibition views. I believe we ought to handle prohibition separately.

I voted for the amendment of the Senator from Iowa; but after serious reflection I believe I am hindering the passage of a food-control bill by helping put that provision in the bill. The same reasons that the President gave for asking that beer and wine be left out of this bill are equally applicable to this matter. The revenue bill will be up in a few days. The amendment which the Senator from Utah has offered proves the fact that the whole problem of revenue is involved, and the whole problem of handling this question from a business standpoint is involved. Therefore, the more appropriate place, I believe, to consider the amendment of the Senator from Iowa and the amendment of the Senator from Utah will be when the revenue bill is before the Senate.

I believe that this food-control bill should have stricken from it the outside matter. I should like to see the Senate substitute the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota on the subject of grain exchanges which we adopted some time ago, and the amendment of the Senator from Washington which we adopted some time ago, for the provision of this bill covering the prevention of improper conduct by middlemen. Then I should be glad to see stricken out of this bill all but the food regulation, and then put it through and give an opportunity for its immediate use. We can discuss this other subject when the revenue bill comes up.

Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote of yesterday afternoon by which the Senate declared that no distilled liquor or spirits now in bond in the United States shall, during the existing war, be withdrawn to be used as a beverage.

Mr. President, this food-control bill is a war measure. The President, the war council, those charged with the responsibility for the war, believe that it is absolutely essential to the vigorous conduct of the war that the food part of this bill should pass, and pass speedily.

I did not approve the bill called the food-control bill as it first came from the Department of Agriculture, but most of the objectionable features have been stricken out.

The President urges prompt passage of the food-control features of this bill, and declares they are essential to the vigorous conduct of the war. Let us lay aside for the time being our pet theories of legislation. Let us refrain from adding them to this food bill. Let us defer all things not essential.

Let us place the food supply in the hands of the President to conduct the war, so that it will add to our strength in the war.

The energy and force of every American should support our Nation. Let us concentrate our forces. Let us put our hearts, our heads, and our bodies into this struggle until, by God's help, we may crush our enemy, or drive our enemy to a place where we can obtain an honorable and a lasting peace.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa will state the point of order.

Mr. CUMMINS. The pending question is the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and during the pendency of that question it is not in order for the Senator from Georgia to move to reconsider an amendment adopted at a former time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I give notice of a motion to reconsider and will offer it as soon as the pending amendment is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would have sustained the point of order.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I am in accord with the Senator from Utah relative to his amendment, but I wish to suggest to him whether it would not be well to insert in addition to his amendment the following:

> If the price so determined be not satisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same such person shall be paid 75 per cent of the amount prescribed by the President and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as added to the amount so paid will be just compensation for such liquors in the manner provided by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code.

Mr. President, in the amendment as I understood it there is no provision made where there is a dispute between the owner of the bonded liquors and the Government; and if the Government has the right to commandeer that property there should be some mode of determining how much shall be paid in cash and how much shall be determined by a trial. On that account it seems to me we ought to have a provision similar to the one which was discussed several times before the committee. I hope the Senator from Utah will accept that amendment to his amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield to me a moment to answer the question in his time?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say that that proposition has no place here. There can be no question as to the cost plus not to exceed 10 per cent when the plant is involved, the stopping of the plant and the cost of production of that plant by commandeering, the question will arise perhaps as to what the actual cost is, but this stuff is put in by the Government, they know just the age of it and know the cost of it. Therefore I did not put in the provision the Senator has suggested, and I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I must concede, of course, that it would be an amendment in the third degree, and therefore can not be offered to the amendment presented by the Senator from Utah, but it seems to me there ought to be some way of determining by some tribunal what is the value of the liquor. I understand that the quotation price is $1.40 now, and when you consider that the amount of the tax is $1.10, it leaves only for the manufacture of it 30 cents a gallon, which would not make the amount of $75,000,000 or $80,000,000 referred to by the Senator from Utah. It does seem to me that the amendment I have suggested ought to go in somewhere.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, a motion to reconsider is a privileged motion under the rule and may be made at any time. It is entered at once and it is for the Senate to determine when it shall be considered. I suggest that it is desirable that it should be disposed of at once, because if it carries it would save the necessity of further amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the Senator realize, though, that the question as to a reconsideration depends very largely upon whether there are provisions that will compensate the people for the liquor which they have in bond. That would be one of the considerations for a Senator in voting upon the question as to whether compensation should be made. For that reason it seems to me the motion to reconsider ought not to be made until it is determined whether or not these liquors are to be paid for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to inquire of the Senator from Georgia whether he renews the motion. The Chair understood the Senator from Georgia to withdraw the motion to reconsider.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I made a motion to reconsider. I take the position that it is then with the Senate to determine when it shall be considered, but that it can be entered at any time.

Mr. SMOOT. The rule provides that a motion to reconsider may be made within the next two days of actual session, and that it shall be decided by a majority. The question of reconsideration does not take precedence over a pending motion. The only question now before the Senate is the amendment presented by myself. I think the Chair was perfectly right in ruling as he did.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Chair did not rule.

Mr. SMOOT. The Chair ruled that the point of order raised by the Senator from Iowa was sustained.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Chair so ruled, I will not appeal from the decision of the Chair; but I do insist that a motion to reconsider is a privileged motion and should be entered at once, though the question as to when it is to be considered is a matter to be controlled by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair remembers that the Vice President passed upon this same question yesterday and announced the conclusion which the present occupant of the chair announced a moment ago.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, just a word with regard to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah. The amendment which seems to be the storm center this morning was not offered with any contemplation of confiscation, nor do I believe if it remains in the bill the effect of it will be confiscation. There is a well-determined difference between the suspension of the use of property for a reasonable time and the taking of the property itself, so far as war is concerned. Nevertheless, I would infinitely rather see the amendment presented by the Senator from Utah adopted than to see this volume of liquor poured out among the people at the close of the war. There never was a better opportunity to do something, not only for the war but for the general welfare, than to take the liquors that are now in bond and pay for them a fair and reasonable price.

I do not concern myself about the standards. It is immaterial to me whether it is the standard suggested by the Senator from Utah or whether it is the standard prescribed in the section of the bill which gives the President the right to commandeer. I shall vote for the amendment, no matter which of these standards shall be adopted. I shall be very glad to vote for the amendment, although I reiterate that the suspension of the use of a hundred million or two hundred million gallons of intoxicating liquor for the period of the war is not confiscation or anything approaching confiscation, and it will be found before we have gone far in this war that it will be necessary that the citizens of the country shall surrender without immediate and full compensation a great many privileges which they have heretofore been accustomed to enjoy.

I sincerely hope the amendment of the Senator from Utah will be adopted.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should like to have the Senator from Utah, who offered the amendment, tell me what it means and to what use the Government will put this liquor. Will it be stored in a warehouse or will it be poured out on the prairie or in the river, or what will become of it?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator has asked me a question, and I desire to answer in his time. When the Government of the United States purchases this liquor of course the Government is going to use it. It will use it in the manufacture of munitions. There will be a redistillation, as I said before, and all the pure alcohol, after the redistillation, the Government of the United States will use; and it will need more than it will get out of the redistillation of bonded spirits before the war is over if it lasts a year.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Would it not be rather expensive alcohol?

Mr. SMOOT. We will not get every dollar that we would if we were going to buy the alcohol itself straight. But I think it is a very cheap way now to arrive at a position that I believe will be maintained—that no more distilled spirits shall ever be manufactured in the United States for beverage purposes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If I thought that would be the effect of the amendment I would vote for it very cheerfully. I would vote for it if the whisky were taken and emptied out into the Atlantic Ocean. I would rather that disposition would be made of it than to have it drunk by the people.

Mr. SMOOT. There would be no necessity for that.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do not, however, feel that that would be money lost. Indeed, it would be a splendid investment if it would stop permanently the distillation of liquor. I wish very much that we could dispose of this question. We have debated the main question thoroughly. Every Senator has made up his mind upon every phase of the measure, and while I am not assuming the rôle of dictator or advisor of Senators as to how they should perform their respective functions here, I wish very much that the Senate would dispose of this matter or come to some definite understanding upon it and not consume so much time. I am weary waiting and listening to the interminable eloquence that has been repeated in this Chamber a thousand times since this bill was taken up.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish simply to call attention to the fact that if this amendment is adopted it will place upon the Federal Government probably a billion dollars of obligations. Of course I can not state that absolutely, but with two hundred and odd million gallons of liquor on hand and with the fact that if it is confiscated and taken over by the Government no matter what arbitrary rule we may set up here the courts will declare if it is taken over the market is the determining thing, as the courts have held in other cases. I do not believe the figure I have named to be very far out of the way, but I am not an expert on whisky and therefore only make the suggestion.

Now, that amount, whatever it may be, must be raised by a tax. That tax must be borne by the American people; and as far as I am concerned I do not propose to vote in the Senate that the farmers of my State who do not drink whisky at all and who may be dry in their habits and dry in their views shall be taxed to take over a lot of whisky by the Government. I do not propose to levy a tax upon a man who does not want to drink whisky in order to take over liquor at such a time as this.

There would be a good deal more sense in the proposition if it was frankly recognized that if the war lasts very long all this liquor might be needed in the hospitals and on the field of battle because, Mr. President, the man is simply out of harmony with all the scientific knowledge of the age who does not know that liquor is a very great essential in hospitals and in places of great stress and trial.

The proposition, however, is this: We start out by saying that we are going to conserve the food of the country by stopping the manufacture of it into liquor. Then we do the remarkable thing of proposing to take over the liquor that has already been manufactured and to tax the raiser of the food for the purpose of taking it over right at a time when we need every energy we possess to levy an additional burden of taxation upon the American people.

It seems to me we are abandoning the purpose for which this bill was framed. It seems to me without any question that men are willing in the interests of what they are pleased to term prohibition to sacrifice the interests of the country, that they would rather put a prohibition rider on this bill than make a good bill. It is a strange thing to me that you can get so much interest up over a little whisky either one way or the other, but with the markets for wheat already destroyed and the future of the wheat industry jeopardized you can not really get the attention of the Senate.

As far as I am concerned, I am going to vote against this proposition for I am not going to vote to tax the wheat farmers to buy the booze that there may be on hand.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that I hope the amendment will be adopted. I think it is fair under the circumstances and just. Furthermore, I should like to see the Government and this Whisky Trust out of partnership. That is one of the main reasons why I shall vote for it.

The Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Missouri seem to take the view that this is not a conservation proposition. The Senator from Georgia refers to the bill as a food-control bill. The bill is more than that. The title of the bill says "to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products."

There are two very important elements that I think are pretty largely conserved by the provisions that we have under consideration. That is all I care to say. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the question has been asked, and, of course, it very naturally arises, What will the Government do with this liquor when it gets it? There are reasons sufficient to some people, of course, why the amendment should be agreed to even though it be a total loss, but it would be well to have certain figures showing exactly what it would cost the Government in its purchase. While I am not an expert on it, and I have not any definite information at my command, I have been told since the discussion has been going on by those who have made some investigation of the subject that the Government would come out just about even if it bought the liquor now in bond on the terms propounded and laid down in the amendment of the Senator from Utah. It provides for the payment of cost plus a profit of 10 per cent. The Government, as I understand it, will need vast quantities of alcohol for the manufacture of munitions during the war. A large amount will be used if we utilize the whisky now in bond by redistilling it into alcohol, and we would therefore make it unnecessary to use for the purpose of munitions the amount of grain and other products necessary to make the identical amount of alcohol. So as a matter of fact, it seems to me there is good ground to say it is a conservation provision. The amount of alcohol that will be utilized from the whisky taken out of bond would save just that much grain, assuming that we would need that much grain in the manufacture of alcohol.

I have a table here given me that purports to be taken from Bonfort's Directory for 1909 and 1910 which gives the cost value, as I understand it, of the whisky in bond for the various years.

It commences with 30 cents per gallon when deposited. When it is there 12 months its value is 33.53 cents per gallon; when it is there 24 months its value is 37.19 cents per gallon; when it is there 36 months its value is 40.98 cents per gallon; when it is there 48 months its value is 44.91 cents per gallon; when it is there 60 months its value is 49 cents per gallon; when it is there 72 months its value is 53.25 cents per gallon; when it is there 84 months its value is 57.67 cents per gallon; and when it is there 96 months its value is 62.28 cents per gallon. This allowed something for insurance; it allowed municipal taxes and 6 per cent interest compounded semiannually. So as to the value, I understand, if we had to buy the product now that is necessary to make alcohol and pay present prices for it we would come out just about even. So there is going to be perhaps no loss, perhaps a small profit, but not much either way, as I understand it, if we enter into this proposition.

But, Mr. President, it will end, it seems to me, the whisky question; it will settle it. I think we can well afford to do it in order to have it determined finally, without doing anybody any injury and doing the fair thing to the men who own the property. I have here a circular letter issued by the Distillers' Securities Corporation, in which they set forth the value and the amount of alcohol necessary to make powder. It says:

It is well known that alcohol is an essential and indispensable ingredient in the production of smokeless powder, and that is the only kind that is used in modern warfare.

Now, listen to this:

Two pounds of alcohol are required to make 1 pound of powder, and every time a giant howitzer is fired about a barrel (50 gallons) of alcohol is consumed. Practically all of the distilled spirits that have been exported during the years ending June 30, 1915, and June 30, 1916, and about nine-tenths of the tax-free alcohol that has been used for industrial and manufacturing purposes have been used in the production of smokeless powder in the United States and by the allies. Alcohol is indispensable to the manufacture of the only kind of powder that can be used by the United States Army and Navy. An expert on the use of alcohol for the manufacture of smokeless powder has recently stated that "the present output of alcohol in this country would not be sufficient to supply one-third of the smokeless powder used in a four days' engagement at Verdun, during which large-caliber guns were discharged 4,000,000 times."

It seems, therefore, Mr. President, at least as I look at it, that everything is in favor of the adoption of this amendment. No loss, or at least no loss of a material kind, will come to the United States, and it will conserve millions of bushels of grain and other products which would otherwise be used in the manufacture of alcohol for the purpose of making powder.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print the table from which I read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

COST OF CARRYING WHISKY IN BOND.

The following table shows the cost of aging, or carrying whiskies in bond. The calculations are based on original gauge proof gallons, 47½-gallon barrels. Storage, 5 cents per barrel per month; fire insurance, one-half of 1 per cent per annum; State, county, and city taxes, 15 cents per barrel per annum; interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, compounded annually:

Value including carrying charges for time indicated.

	Cents per gallon.
At deposit	30.00
After 12 months	33.53
After 24 months	37.19
After 36 months	40.98
After 48 months	44.91
After 60 months	49.00
After 72 months	53.25
After 84 months	57.67
After 96 months	62.28

Taken from Bonfort's Directory, 1909–10.

The farm value of corn for the five years preceding the war was 57¼ per bushel. Cash quotations to-day are 172¼. Allowing for freight and commissions this would still leave the present cost of material nearly three times the cost at the date the liquors were manufactured and would seem to make purchase of aged whisky for redistillation financially feasible.

The price of 30 cents per gallon at time of deposit was suggested as reasonable average price by an official in the revenue department.

Respectfully submitted.

H. G. CALDERWOOD.

JUNE 10.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah on three grounds: First, I think it is right that if we take the property of these people we should pay for it what it is reasonably worth. I think under the amendment of the Senator from Utah that is provided for. It is a matter of common honesty and justice if the Government takes this property, or confiscates this property, it ought to pay for it. Just compensation for property taken by the Government is a principle as old as our Government.

In the next place, it is peculiarly appropriate that we should do it now, because we can utilize the property that we are obliged to buy. We can use it in manufacturing explosives for fighting our enemies instead of using the whisky in debauching our own people. As bad as war is, it is perhaps better to use alcohol for war purposes rather than to use it for beverage purposes.

For that reason the Government will not be out anything if it takes over this property and uses it for its very proper purposes. In other words, the Government will use it for the highest purpose, the defense and protection of our own people in war instead of using it and allowing the people to use it for a very degrading and base purpose.

In the third place, my proposition is, Mr. President, that we all know—or I think most of us believe—that if the Government does confiscate whisky and prevent its distillation it means that we have gone on a prohibition basis for all time in this country. We have done it fairly, we have done it justly, we have done it honestly toward the people who are now engaged in the business and who have a license to be engaged in the business. There can be no doubt about the ultimate result of this legislation. If once stopped by national law, there will never be any more legal distillation of alcoholic spirits in this Republic. If that point is once gained, the American people will never permit again the manufacture of whisky. For these three reasons we should adopt the amendment of the Senator from Utah. I for one am going to vote for it, and I hope and believe that it will be agreed to by this body and become the law.

Mr. JAMES. I ask permission at this time to print in the RECORD a few telegrams which I have received from various citizens of Kentucky protesting against the adoption of the Cummins amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the telegrams will be printed in the RECORD.

The telegrams referred to are as follows:

PADUCAH, KY., July 7, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Save one of your State's largest industries from practical bankruptcy. The Cummins amendment will embarrass practically every bank in Kentucky.

GEO. H. GOODMAN.

—

LOUISVILLE, KY., July 7, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE JAMES,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Passage of Cummins amendment grave danger to every interest of this country and a special assistance to the pro-Germans.

GEORGE L. DANFORTH.

—

PADUCAH, KY., July 7, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Please protest the Cummins amendment. No good is accomplished by stopping tax payments, and it would ruin not only the distillers and wholesalers of this State, but our banks and bonding companies would likewise be seriously affected. Stop manufacture, if necessary, but do not stop tax payment.

CHAS. K. WHEELER.

PADUCAH, KY., July 7, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE JAMES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Please protest the Cummins amendment. No good is accomplished by stopping tax payments, and it would ruin not only the distillers and wholesalers of the State, but our banks and bonding companies would likewise be seriously affected. Stop manufacture, if necessary, but do not stop tax payments.

W. F. PAXTON.

—

PADUCAH, KY., July 7, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
Washington, D. C.:

If amendment of Senator CUMMINS becomes a law every distiller and wholesale liquor dealer in the State of Kentucky is ruined, and our banks and bonding companies will be broke. The country gains nothing by this amendment. Stop manufacture of distilled spirits and you have your grain left, but stop tax payment of that which is now in bond and you will ruin without giving an American citizen a chance 90 per cent of the distillers and wholesale dealers of America.

FRIEDMAN KEILER & CO.

—

PADUCAH, KY., July 7, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Please protest the Cummins amendment. No good is accomplished by stopping tax payments, and it would ruin not only the distillers and wholesalers of this State, but our banks and bonding companies would likewise be seriously affected. Stop manufacture if necessary, but do not stop tax payments.

J. C. UTTERBACK,
President City National Bank.

—

LOUISVILLE, KY., July 7, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The banks of Kentucky and all over the United States hold as collateral thousands of barrels of whisky in bond, and if this whisky can not be tax paid it will be worthless and the notes, in most instances, can not be collected. It will therefore be ruinous to the banks.

GERMAN SECURITY BANK.

—

HENDERSON, KY., July 7, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Adoption of Cummins amendment prohibiting withdrawal from bond would mean great distress in this section to banks and public.

HENDERSON NATIONAL BANK.

—

PADUCAH, KY., July 7, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We heartily protest against unfair Cummins amendment. Every bank in the State of Kentucky would feel such unfair and undemocratic legislation, and the distillers and wholesale liquor dealers would be virtually ruined. The revenue would be lost to the Government and no good accomplished by such a ruling.

PADUCAH WATER CO.

—

PADUCAH, KY., July 7, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Please protest the Cummins amendment. No good is accomplished by stopping tax payments, and it would ruin not only the distillers and wholesalers of this State, but our banks and bonding companies would likewise be seriously affected. Stop manufacture if necessary, but do not stop tax payment.

W. F. BRADSHAW, JR.,
President Mechanics Trust & Savings Bank.

—

PADUCAH, KY., July 7, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We urge your influence against the Cummins amendment, as it seriously impairs value of collateral represented by whisky certificates largely held by Kentucky banks.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK.

—

BOWLING GREEN, KY., July 7, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The adoption of the Cummins amendment or similar legislation would cause unnecessary loss and hardship to large numbers of people not in liquor business, including banks holding distillery papers.

CITIZENS' NATIONAL BANK,
By ROBERT RHODES,
President.

—

FRANKFORT, KY., July 7, 1917.

Senator OLLIE JAMES,
Washington, D. C.:

If Cummins amendment is passed, it will mean financial disaster to all banks in the country holding warehouse receipts. We hereby make vigorous protest against such drastic action at this critical time, and hope you can give us protection in some way.

NATIONAL BRANCH BANK OF FRANKFORT, KY.

—

LOUISVILLE, KY., July 7, 1917.

Senator OLLIE JAMES,
Washington, D. C.:

The adoption of the Cummins amendment means absolute prohibition and the destruction of property without any warning, making thousands of people idle.

VIC. LORCH.

LEXINGTON, KY., July 7, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The Cummins amendment would work great hardship on our distillers and on banks carrying their paper. Your opposition to it would be very much appreciated.

PHOENIX AND THIRD NATIONAL BANK.

LOUISVILLE, KY., July 7, 1917.

Senator OLLIE JAMES,
Washington, D. C.:

We desire to enter protest against Cummins amendment to food bill. We consider absolutely ruinous to insurance companies.

FIDELITY & CASUALTY CO.,
C. L. NELSON,
Resident Manager.

LOUISVILLE, KY., July 7, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE JAMES,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

Cummins amendment passed in Senate yesterday would work untold hardship upon this city and State. Aside from capital invested in distilling business and thousands employed in this industry, banks and trust companies would suffer great loss. We strongly urge that President's views be upheld in this matter and that no other proposed prohibition legislation be considered.

MERCHANTS & MANUFACTURERS ASSOCIATION,
H. E. PFINGST, President.

LEBANON, KY., July 7, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
Washington, D. C.:

Defeat the Cummins amendment, as it would mean ruin to our State.

SAM J. SPALDING, County Clerk.

LEBANON, KY., July 7, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
Washington, D. C.:

Do all in your power to defeat the Cummins amendment.

HUGH MURREY MARION.

LOUISVILLE, KY., July 7, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES, or
Hon. J. C. BECKHAM,
Washington, D. C.:

The Cummins amendment will bankrupt our business. Trust you will use your best efforts against this amendment.

BOOKER BOX CO.

LOUISVILLE, KY., July 7, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE JAMES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

I am in whisky bottle jobbing business. My customers owing me thousands of dollars; will go broke if the Cummins amendment stands. My entire business and all I have accumulated during my life will be totally destroyed. Congratulate you on your vote and am wiring as additional bit of evidence to show your colleagues.

I. T. AXTON.

FRANKFORT KY., July 7, 1917.

Senator OLLIE JAMES,
Washington, D. C.:

If the Cummins amendment is adopted to-day, preventing us from marketing whisky now in bond during the war, it will cause great financial disaster to banks and bonding companies and all holders of warehouse receipts. At this most critical time it means absolute financial ruin to anyone holding these securities. We hereby enter vigorous protest against such drastic action, and hope that in some manner you can give us protection.

LABROT & GRAHAM.

COVINGTON, KY., July 7, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE JAMES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The passage of the Cummins amendment or like legislation will not only ruin this company but cause heavy loss to banks, bonding companies, and private capital. Please oppose this vicious and unjust measure.

THE W. J. FRAZIER CO.

LOUISVILLE, KY., July 7, 1917.

Senator OLLIE JAMES,
Washington, D. C.:

We, in common with many other banks, have large loans based on warehouse receipts for whisky in bond as collateral. The Cummins amendment, if enacted, would in many instances force the ownership of this whisky on the banks. We have viewed with the greatest satisfaction the orderly liquidation of these loans involved in the President's message for the discontinuance of the use of grain in such manufacture, but feel it to be absolutely vital to the interests of this bank and practically all business in this and other communities where considerable distilling operations have been permitted under the law in the past that the orderly withdrawal of liquor from bond may be allowed. It seems unbelievable that tremendous loss should be thrust on the banks and hundreds of thousands of laborers put out of business overnight.

S. B. LYND,
President Citizens' National Bank.

LEBANON, KY., July 7, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE JAMES,
Washington, D. C.:

Defeat the Cummins amendment. It means ruin to our State.

JNO. A. BURTON,
Judge Marion County, Ky.

OWENSBORO, KY., July 7, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE JAMES,
Washington, D. C.:

Proposed legislation in Senate prohibiting withdrawal of spirits in bond would not only bankrupt every distillery in Kentucky but throw out of employment thousands of industrious men, and would seriously embarrass all financial institutions holding bonded-warehouse receipts as collateral. It in no way conserves the grain supply, and such legislation would create discord among our people which should be avoided in the crisis now before our Nation. Please use your influence to defeat such an unwise, unpatriotic, and un-American measure.

NATIONAL DEPOSIT BANK.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK.
CENTRAL TRUST CO.
OWENSBORO BANKING CO.
U. S. NATIONAL BANK.
FARMERS & TRADERS' BANK.

LOUISVILLE, KY., July 7, 1917.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
Washington, D. C.:

We believe the banking interests of this State would be imperiled by the enactment of the Cummins amendment or kindred legislation. It seems to us that any seeming breach of good faith or interference with laws of long enactment should be avoided at this critical juncture in the Government's affairs. Credit is essential, and any impairment of credit is to be avoided. The amendment would be also detrimental to the credit of the State, and we are confident of injury to the banks and their customers.

THE STATE NATIONAL BANK.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to my amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not desire to enter into any discussion of the amendment of the Senator from Utah. As I said a little while ago, if this question is to be settled at all in my judgment it ought not to be settled indirectly; it ought to be settled directly. I am for national prohibition, provided that the people of the country have an opportunity to pass upon that question. If I am given a chance to do so I shall vote for a constitutional amendment providing nation-wide prohibition. I voted and fought for prohibition in my State. I rejoiced when the fight was won there, and I would resist with all my power any effort to overthrow it. But I am not willing, especially by indirect methods as proposed here, to vote a forced prohibition upon States whose people do not want it. I believe under the Constitution as now written that is a question for the people of each State to settle for themselves. That much in passing.

The point I rose to make is this: This discussion has made one thing clear. It has shown clearly that if this matter is to be dealt with in the way proposed by the so-called Cummins amendment and the other amendments which have been offered to it many very complicated questions will have to be adjusted. Questions which should have careful and mature consideration and treatment to adjust the equities of the interest affected, and legislation of this hurried and ill-considered sort hurriedly prepared and tacked on as a rider to a bill relating to a different subject affecting millions of dollars' worth of property ought to prevail in a great deliberative body like this.

Mr. President, why is it necessary to inject this question in the pending bill? Everybody knows that if this amendment is put in this bill it will probably jeopardize it. It may defeat its passage. If it does not defeat it it will delay its passage, when conditions require, in the public welfare, that it should be speedily enacted.

In these conditions should the friends of prohibition insist upon ingrafting it on this bill? Let the bill be passed; the public exigency be met. Prohibition has sufficient merit to stand on its own feet. Its friends will have a chance to present it to the Senate as a separate measure if they so wish, and the Senate will and the House can vote upon it after it has been carefully prepared and perfected by the appropriate committees in accordance with the precedents which obtain here. Legislation of such broad and sweeping consequence and importance to the American people as this should in all conscience receive that mature consideration our rules and ordinary procedure contemplates.

It is bad form at best, Mr. President, to undertake to settle a great question like this by way of an amendment in the nature of a rider to another bill.

I think we ought to have enough respect for intelligent procedure, for just action, to let this matter be taken up as a separate proposition, and to deal with it in the usual and ordinary course of procedure in this body.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I desire to address the Senate in my own time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has not the Senator already spoken on this amendment?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair entertains a different view. The Senator from Mississippi was recognized in his own time and yielded to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], whereupon a colloquy ensued between the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Utah.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think the Chair is right about it.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I assure the Senate that I do not wish to delay its proceedings; but, answering the statement of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], I wish to say that his argument will not convince me that this is not the proper time to enact legislation, if that legislation will conserve food, conserve man power, and conserve the morals of the country.

There has been a great deal said by Senators on this floor as to the attitude of the so-called Anti-Saloon League. I want to read briefly from a statement issued by some 21 or 22 societies, in which I understand the Anti-Saloon League is included, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 5, 1917.

MY DEAR SIR: Below please find a statement outlining the legislative policy unanimously adopted by the national legislative conference, representing the allied temperance forces of the whole country, and which these forces desire to see enacted.

We earnestly and respectfully request for this statement your most careful and serious consideration.

Very sincerely, yours,

ANNA A. GORDON,
Vice Chairman,
D. LEIGH COLVIN,
Secretary.

—

III. WAR PROHIBITION.

We urge Congress to conserve all our national resources needed to win the war by prohibiting the conversion of any foodstuffs into intoxicating liquors; by authorizing and directing the President to commandeer all stocks of distilled liquors for munitions and other governmental purposes; by preventing the importation of intoxicating liquors and the exportation of foodstuffs for the manufacture of intoxicating liquors abroad; and we oppose any except prohibitive taxes on the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors.

In view of the President's expressed fear of a filibuster on the food-control bill and of consequent serious delay in its passage, we desire to say that we have done nothing and will do nothing to delay the passage of this bill, but will press for adequate food conservation and for complete war prohibition, and will rely upon our trusted leaders in Congress to decide whether these objects can be best secured by a separate bill or by an amendment to some other measure.

Mr. President, if I interpret that language correctly, the Anti-Saloon League and these 21 other societies, which I believe represent a large constituency in this country, have not said to Congress or to anyone that they are opposed to this particular legislation. They have only said that they will not interfere with the passage of the food-control bill, but leave it to the judgment of the Members of this body and the other body to decide.

Mr. President, there has been a great deal said about the importance and the necessity of whisky and beer for the use of the Army. If I had time, I could show from the reports made by the consuls general from different countries which are now at war. These reports are certified to by the Librarian of Congress. I will read a line or two from the French report:

The French soldier has been specifically warned against alcohol by the Academy of Medicine in Paris, which has drawn up an appeal to the army and is circulating it by means of leaflets, which are entitled "Soldiers, beware of alcohol."

We all know that all these beverages consist of alcohol. I also want to read from Capt. Bathurst, in the House of Commons, a short extract.

In the course of a discussion of grain and food regulation, Capt. Bathurst said:

That far too much shipping was taken up with barley being brought across the seas for conversion into intoxicating liquor of one sort or another.

Mr. President, in Great Britain, in France, and in Germany they criticize the action of the legislative bodies for not conserving the grain for food, but using it in the manufacture of alcoholic liquors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I have not occupied the time of the Senate in discussing this question. It is my intention to vote for the substitute presented by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], but I can not, in justice to the great business interests of the city of New York, which I in part represent, permit this question to come to a vote without submitting my protest against that part of the so-called Cummins amendment which prevents whisky and other distilled spirits from being taken out of bond. I have in my hand a large number of telegrams—at least 20 from leading banking institutions of the city of New York, savings banks, trust companies, and national banks—all protesting against this sort of legislation. The Irving Savings Institution of New York State telegraphs me as follows:

Hon. W. M. CALDER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

As affecting real estate on which we hold mortgages, we respectfully urge that you oppose legislation prohibiting the withdrawal of whisky from bond.

IRVING SAVINGS INSTITUTION.

The First National Bank of New York State telegraphs me:

BROOKLYN, N. Y., July 7, 1917.

Hon. WILLIAM M. CALDER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We respectfully protest against the passage of the Cummins amendment to the food-control bill. Prohibiting the withdrawal of distilled spirits from bond during the period of war would be most disastrous to many financial institutions having as collateral to loans warehouse receipts for distilled spirits.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK.

Among other telegrams which I have are the following:

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 7, 1917.

Hon. WILLIAM M. CALDER,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Adoption of the Cummins amendment prohibiting withdrawal of whisky from bond will bring serious financial distress to banks and bonding companies. Use your influence against it.

CHELSEA EXCHANGE BANK.

—

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 7, 1917.

Hon. WILLIAM M. CALDER,
Washington, D. C.:

Any amendment that would prospect the withdrawal of whiskies from bond at this time would be a serious disaster. It would affect real estate values as well as banking institutions, bonding companies, etc.

M. BERNARDINI STATE BANK,
New York.

—

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 7, 1917.

Hon. WILLIAM CALDER,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Adoption of the Cummins amendment prohibiting withdrawal of whisky from bond will bring serious financial distress to banks and bonding companies. Use your influence against it.

WESTSIDE BANK.

—

BROOKLYN, N. Y., July 7, 1917.

Hon. W. M. CALDER,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

We urge your opposition to passing of prohibition measure as latest amended by Cummins.

THE CITY SAVINGS BANK OF BROOKLYN.

—

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 7, 1917.

Hon. WILLIAM M. CALDER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Cummins amendment to food bill prohibiting importation and withdrawal of spirits from bond during period of war would cause great disturbance and distress to trade and serious loss to banks. We respectfully urge strong opposition to such actions. Importation, withdrawal, and sale of spirits actually in existence should be permitted.

NEW YORK COUNTY NATIONAL BANK.

Mr. President, though I have very many other telegrams, I shall not encumber the RECORD with them; but I desire to say that it seems to me that Senators should hesitate before taking a step which I am sure will very materially disturb many financial institutions, bonding companies, and business concerns, who, as the Senator from Utah said a moment ago, have been conducting their business in partnership with the Government for these hundred and odd years. I shall vote against the manufacture of distilled spirits, both as a measure of conservation of grains and because, in my opinion, the country will be better off morally and economically; but I can not agree to confiscate property created in compliance with law without due compensation for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If I were allowed to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], but not knowing how he would vote I withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], which I transfer to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], but I am informed that if present he would vote the same way as I shall on this particular question. Therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I observe that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has not voted. I have a general pair with him and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. FLETCHER. Making the same announcement as before of my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 65, nays 12, as follows:

YEAS—65.

Ashurst	Harding	McKellar	Sheppard
Bankhead	Hollis	McLean	Sherman
Beckham	Husting	McNary	Smith, Ariz.
Brady	James	Myers	Smith, Mich.
Brandegee	Johnson, Cal.	Nelson	Smoot
Broussard	Johnson, S. Dak.	New	Thompson
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Newlands	Tillman
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Townsend
Cummins	Kellogg	Overman	Underwood
Curtis	Kendrick	Page	Wadsworth
Fernald	Kenyon	Penrose	Warren
Fletcher	King	Phelan	Watson
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Pittman	Williams
Gerry	La Follette	Poindexter	Wolcott
Gore	Lewis	Pomerene
Gronna	Lodge	Ransdell
Hale	McCumber	Shafroth

NAYS—12.

Borah	Hitchcock	Simmons	Trammell
Chamberlain	Owen	Smith, Ga.	Vardaman
France	Reed	Stone	Walsh

NOT VOTING—19.

Culberson	Hardwick	Saulsbury	Sutherland
Dillingham	Hughes	Shields	Swanson
Fall	Kirby	Smith, Md.	Thomas
Gallinger	Martin	Smith, S. C.	Weeks
Goff	Robinson	Sterling

So Mr. SMOOT's amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move to reconsider the action of the Senate yesterday whereby there was added to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas the amendment embraced in the following language:

No distilled liquors or spirits now in bond in the United States shall during the existing war be withdrawn to be used as a beverage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia moves that the vote whereby the amendment just adverted to was passed shall be reconsidered.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not intend to take up a moment's time to discuss this matter. I am quite ready to have a decision. I only suggest that the amendment is just as meritorious to-day as it was yesterday. Whether the hours that have intervened for reflection have furnished new and additional reasons for rejecting the amendment, time alone can tell. Before I sit down I ask that the vote be taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Yes; let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, before this motion is voted upon I desire to say that I am confident that when this amendment was adopted last evening a number of Senators really did not understand the situation as it has been explained this morning, and I doubt whether all the Members of this body fully realize the result of the action which they have taken just now.

Reference has been made to the revenues of the Government from distilled spirits, and I want to put in the RECORD here, in a couple of minutes, just what they amount to.

In the year ended June 30, 1916, the Government collected $158,682,439.53 from distilled-spirit sources, an increase of $14,062,740.16 over the preceding year.

For the first 11 months of the fiscal year 1917, just closed, the Government collected more than $162,000,000 from this source; and when the figures are computed for the entire year just closed, the rate being but $1.10 per proof gallon, the total will probably exceed $180,000,000.

Under the proposed rate of $2.20 per proof gallon, double the present rate, the Government should realize upon distilled spirits now in bond at the least figure $457,600,000. This amount would be paid into the Treasury over a period of 18 months or 2 years. In other words, the Government would receive approximately $225,000,000 per annum during the period present bonded stocks are being disposed of, despite diminishing withdrawals.

This total revenue would be lost to the Government, and, in addition to that, it is proposed to buy the distilled spirits in bond, costing several hundred million dollars more. Therefore, including the loss of revenue and the expenditure required to purchase, the total loss to and disbursement of the Government will soar up toward $1,000,000,000. That is the road which we are being left to follow by a course of action unnecessary, in connection with this particular measure not germane, and, in my opinion, absolutely sure to defeat the food bill if persisted in.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] suggested a while ago that something might have happened in the night to change the opinion of Senators. I do not know exactly what is meant to be conveyed by that intimation, but something has happened in the Senate this morning to make me change my mind. By a vote of 65 to 12, I think, the Senate has just adopted an amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah, reading as follows:

Provided, That the President of the United States be, and hereby is, directed to take over for and on behalf of the Government of the United States all distilled liquors that are held in bond at the time this act goes into effect, and he is hereby authorized to pay the owners of such liquors the actual cost of the same plus a profit not exceeding 10 per cent.

The provision of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, which was adopted yesterday, reads:

No distilled liquors or spirits now in bond in the United States shall during the existence of the war be withdrawn to be used as a beverage, nor shall there be imported into the United States during said war any distilled liquors.

If the President of the United States is authorized to commandeer the liquor and pay the owners what it is worth plus a profit of 10 per cent, what is the use of keeping it tied up in bond? If the Government takes it over, the Government certainly is not going to use it for beverage purposes; it will use it for the purposes of the Government. So I shall vote to reconsider the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What is the motion to reconsider upon? Is it simply upon that part of the Cummins amendment that was adopted yesterday or is it upon the Cummins amendment as modified by the amendments adopted to-day?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair understands that the motion to reconsider relates only to that part of the so-called Cummins amendment which interdicted the removal of certain liquors held in bond.

Mr. JONES of Washington. A further parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. If that is the case, then the amendment that we have just adopted directing the President to take over these distilled liquors will still be a part of the Robinson amendment? Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair, that is correct.

Mr. PENROSE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ASHURST answered "Present."

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the roll call has begun and can not be interrupted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the calling of the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	McNary	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	Hale	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	Hitchcock	New	Smith, Mich.
Borah	Hollis	Newlands	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Husting	Norris	Smoot
Broussard	James	Owen	Stone
Calder	Johnson, Cal.	Page	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Penrose	Thompson
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Phelan	Tillman
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Trammell
Cummins	Kendrick	Poindexter	Underwood
Curtis	Kenyon	Pomerene	Vardaman
Dillingham	King	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Fernald	Knox	Reed	Walsh
Fletcher	La Follette	Robinson	Watson
France	Lewis	Shafroth	Williams
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gerry	McKellar	Sherman
Gore	McLean	Simmons

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to see if I can find a path out of this forest primeval with reference to these amendments. We are now about to vote upon a reconsideration of the vote had upon yesterday by which the amendment of the Senator from Iowa was adopted. We have since that time adopted an amendment by 65 to 12, I believe, providing for the purchase of these liquors and the payment for the same by the Government. If we should reconsider this vote, as we will, and that provision should go out, would it at all affect the Robinson amendment with reference to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah? As I understand, the amendment of the Senator from Utah was offered to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas and would be a part of it, notwithstanding the fact that we will reconsider this particular amendment.

I should like to ask the Senator who moved to reconsider if that is not the fact?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I can only say this: My understanding is that my motion to reconsider is limited to a single proposition. We voted upon that proposition as a distinct proposition, and therefore the motion to reconsider must be limited to that proposition.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator what is the object of the Senator in moving to reconsider this vote, in view of the fact that we have since adopted an amendment which annuls entirely as a legal proposition, it would seem, the effect of that amendment? The amendment of the Senator from Iowa provided that the liquor should not be taken out of bond; but we have since adopted an amendment by which the President may take it out of bond and pay the owners for it. Now, what is the object of the Senator in securing a revote upon that proposition?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Because the Senate having adopted it and put it into the bill, I desire to take it out.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to know why the Senator wants it taken out, in view of the fact that he voted to put it in.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I stated my reason this morning. I did not happen to have the good fortune to have the Senator from Idaho in my audience.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I heard the Senator.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. STONE. May I say that I am quite sure that the Senator voted for what we may call the Smoot amendment on the theory that the so-called Cummins amendment might remain in the bill, preventing the taking of bonded whiskies out of bond. If that is not done, however, then the other matter should be taken up for subsequent consideration.

Mr. BORAH. A light begins to dawn upon me.

Mr. STONE. It has dawned as far as I am concerned.

Mr. BORAH. I say upon me, because, as I understand it now, we voted for the amendment of the Senator from Utah for fear that the Cummins amendment might remain in the bill; but in case the amendment of the Senator from Iowa goes out, then we will have another reconsideration and take out the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. STONE. I say we ought to. I do not know whether we will or not. That is my opinion.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, it seems to me to be impracticable to reconsider the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa at this time for this reason. I will read the amendment as it is now perfected. It is called the Cummins amendment:

> No distilled liquors or spirits now in bond in the United States shall, during the existing war, be withdrawn to be used as a beverage, nor shall there be imported into the United States during said war any distilled liquors.

What is the result of the reconsideration of that amendment? It is, of course, to say that distilled liquors now in bond during the existing war can be used as a beverage; but more important than that even is the proposition that there may be imported into the United States during the war distilled liquors.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. My motion does not apply to that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, it does not?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No. The question was divided when it was submitted to the Senate, and we voted separately, first upon the bond proposition and second upon the importation proposition.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, the Finance Committee has recently reported a bill which, so far as it relates to the importation of liquors, prohibits the importation of whiskies, wines, beers, or anything of an alcoholic character, so that a bill is pending here with a unanimous report, which I joined in making, that goes a great deal farther than the Cummins proposition. For that very reason I voted against it when it was up here yesterday.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the motion of the Senator from Georgia should prevail, and then this part of the Cummins amendment should be stricken out, the balance of it, with reference to importation, will remain as a distinct and separate proposition.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to inquire of the President of the Senate as to what the motion to reconsider by the Senator from Georgia involves? I will ask that the matter to which it refers may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read it.

The Secretary read as follows:

> No distilled liquors or spirits now in bond in the United States shall, during the existing war, be withdrawn to be used as a beverage.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is the first part. That is all that the motion to reconsider goes to?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is all.

Mr. JAMES. Let me ask the Senator a question. Which would he prefer, the provisions of the bill reported by the Finance Committee, which prohibits the importation of all alcoholic liquors—whiskies, wines, beers, and so forth—or the provision that merely prohibits the importation of whisky?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The difficulty about that situation, Mr. President, is that that bill has not been passed, and this provision has been adopted. That is just the difference between having a provision adopted and one that is in the chaotic condition of not even being presented to the Senate as yet.

Mr. JAMES. In which place does the Senator prefer to handle questions affecting the revenue, through a revenue committee or just haphazard, as the matter might come into the Senate?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I think this matter came up in a regular way. This measure came over from the House. The House put a provision in it with relation to limiting the use of intoxicating liquors; and inasmuch as that is true, all of these matters are germane to this bill, as much so as if it were a revenue bill or any other kind of a bill.

It seems to me that since the amendment of the Senator from Utah has been adopted substantially all the objections that have been made have been eliminated. For that reason I hoped at the time the Senator from Georgia first attempted to make his motion to reconsider that he would not do so until the amendment of the Senator from Utah was disposed of. That having been disposed of and having been adopted, as these liquors are to be paid for, I can not see why we should emasculate this section and take out the provision of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa what reason he would now urge for retaining his amendment in the bill, the Senate having voted to purchase all of these distilled liquors? It is certain that the two are inconsistent with each other. If there is not a reconsideration and the striking out of one, we shall have two directions in the same bill inconsistent with each other. If the Government purchases the intoxicating liquors, is there anything to be gained by preserving in the bill the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, there is nothing inconsistent between the two proposals. If the President takes out all the bonded liquor, there will be no spirits to which my amendment could apply; but until he does that my amendment would still prevent the withdrawal of these liquors to be used as a beverage.

Mr. McCUMBER. But, Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah does not leave it discretionary with the President. He is compelled to proceed to purchase the spirits at the time this bill goes into effect.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not so construe it.

Mr. McCUMBER. The word "shall" is used. It does not use the word "may."

Mr. CUMMINS. I am trying to prevent the use of this liquor as a beverage. That is all I have been trying to do. There is no harm at least in leaving the original prohibition in it. It can not do anybody any harm, at any rate, and if for any reason the President does not acquire these liquors for six months to come we will prevent their withdrawal in the meantime.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, it seems to me there is considerable harm in having a proposition in a bill directing that distilled liquors shall not be removed from bond, and having another provision in the same bill directing the President to purchase all of the distilled liquors that are now in bond.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from North Dakota must know that my amendment related to withdrawing the liquors to be used as a beverage.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am assuming that having voted for that, and then having voted that the President shall take the liquors out of bond and pay for them, the Government will not sell them again for beverage purposes, so I can not see the necessity of retaining them both.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator see any legal inconsistency in these two propositions?

Mr. McCUMBER. I certainly do.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator think that the clause in the bill with reference to the purchasing of these liquors will be in it when it finally comes out of conference?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, I can not say as to that; neither can the Senator. It might be that they would eliminate both of them in conference; but at present there are two inconsistent provisions.

Mr. BORAH. It is not necessary, then, for the friends of the proposition to begin to eliminate in advance. Why should we take out this provision when we do not know which one of the provisions will satisfy the conferees?

Mr. McCUMBER. We should take it out because we should pass an intelligible bill. We should not pass in the Senate a bill containing two provisions that are absolutely at variance with each other. One or the other should be adopted. I voted for the Cummins amendment, and if it shall remain in the bill I shall vote for it; but I could not vote for both of them consistently.

Mr. BORAH. Did not the Senator also vote for the Smoot amendment?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; I voted for the Smoot amendment. I have assumed, therefore, that this was to be the sentiment of the Senate and the other would be removed from it. I still would insist that we should not send this bill from the Senate with those inconsistent provisions.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the first part of the Cummins amendment provides that no alcoholic beverage shall be imported into the United States during the existing war. That has no relation to the withdrawal from bond. The latter part provides that no part of the distilled spirits now in bond in the United States shall be withdrawn during the war to be used as a beverage. So that if the Government buys this liquor it could not, in that event, withdraw it to be used as a beverage. Otherwise it could be withdrawn by the Government to be used as a beverage. There is no inconsistency between them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider, on which the yeas and nays have been requested. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. I am informed that he would vote the same way that I shall vote upon this proposition, and I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I again announce my general pair with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] and withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I make the same announcement with reference to my pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] and withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] and vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and vote "yea."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 44, nays 39, as follows:

YEAS—44.

Bankhead	Harding	Martin	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	Hitchcock	New	Smith, Ga.
Broussard	Hollis	Newlands	Smith, Md.
Calder	Husting	Penrose	Stone
Chamberlain	James	Phelan	Swanson
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Pittman	Tillman
Culberson	Knox	Pomerene	Underwood
Dillingham	Lewis	Ransdell	Wadsworth
France	Lodge	Reed	Warren
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Robinson	Watson
Gerry	McLean	Simmons	Williams

NAYS—39.

Ashurst	Hale	McNary	Shields
Beckham	Johnson, Cal.	Myers	Smith, Mich.
Borah	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nelson	Smoot
Brady	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Thompson
Cummins	Kellogg	Owen	Townsend
Curtis	Kendrick	Page	Trammell
Fernald	Kenyon	Poindexter	Vardaman
Fletcher	King	Shafroth	Walsh
Gore	La Follette	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gronna	McKellar	Sherman

NOT VOTING—13.

Fall	Hughes	Smith, S. C.	Weeks
Gallinger	Kirby	Sterling
Goff	Overman	Sutherland
Hardwick	Saulsbury	Thomas

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. STONE and Mr. POINDEXTER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. ASHURST. Let the question be stated.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We can not understand here what the question is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is on the adoption of the first clause of the Cummins amendment, the vote by which it was adopted having just been reconsidered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the name of Mr. ASHURST, and he voted "yea."

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The roll call has started.

Mr. OWEN. The Secretary did not call the first name, I think, Mr. President.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; he did.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A response has been made to the roll call. The Chair can not stop the roll call.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] and withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] and withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] and vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to pairs, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am informed that my pair, the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], if present would vote "nay." I therefore feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 43, as follows:

YEAS—39.

Ashurst	Hale	McNary	Shields
Beckham	Johnson, Cal.	Myers	Smith, Mich.
Borah	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nelson	Smoot
Brady	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Thompson
Cummins	Kellogg	Owen	Townsend
Curtis	Kendrick	Page	Trammell
Fernald	Kenyon	Poindexter	Vardaman
Fletcher	King	Shafroth	Walsh
Gore	La Follette	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gronna	McKellar	Sherman

NAYS—43.

Bankhead	Harding	Martin	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Hitchcock	New	Smith, Md.
Broussard	Hollis	Newlands	Stone
Calder	Husting	Penrose	Swanson
Chamberlain	James	Phelan	Tillman
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Pittman	Underwood
Culberson	Knox	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Lewis	Reed	Warren
France	Lodge	Robinson	Watson
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Simmons	Williams
Gerry	McLean	Smith, Ariz.

NOT VOTING—14.

Fall	Hughes	Saulsbury	Thomas
Gallinger	Kirby	Smith, S. C.	Weeks
Goff	Overman	Sterling
Hardwick	Ransdell	Sutherland

So the first clause of Mr. Cummins's amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, a short time ago the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] offered an amendment, which was adopted, by which the President was "directed to take over for and on behalf of the Government of the United States all distilled liquors that are held in bond at the time this act goes into effect, and he is hereby authorized to pay the owners of such liquors the actual cost of the same plus a profit not exceeding 10 per cent."

When that amendment was offered I favored it for the reason that at that stage of the proceeding the Senate had voted to prohibit distilled liquors.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must inquire what is before the Senate?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am just making a statement to be followed by a motion to reconsider. Under the situation as it presented itself, then, I felt that it was nothing but right if we were to practically confiscate the liquors involved to take them over and do it actually and pay for what we were taking. The Senate has now voted to reconsider what is known as the Cummins amendment and has voted it down. Under the circumstances it seems to me that the Smoot amendment should also be reconsidered.

I do not believe that this is the time to consider the question of purchasing all the distilled liquors in the country which are now in bond. I think the revenue situation is critical at this time. I believe this would involve the raising of at least a billion dollars. I do not believe it should be done in this rather haphazard way. The question of raising the revenue with which to pay for the liquors has not been considered. The Finance Committee has framed a bill which contemplates taxing the liquors and raising revenue, and if we have to turn around and elimfnate over $200,000,000 of revenue per annum and at the same time raise another half a million dollars for the purchase of the liquors, then we have got to reframe that bill and undoubtedly it would result in the issuance of a billion dollars in bonds.

I therefore, Mr. President, move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Utah was adopted.

Mr. LODGE. I voted for the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] because the Robinson amendment as it then stood included the Cummins amendment, which provided for taking the whisky in bond, and although that liquor was the property of distillers it seemed to me that it was not well to take it without due compensation. I do not know that it would be worth while for me to advance as a reason that I considered it a violation of the Constitution, but it did not seem to me to be entirely honest to take property, if it was the property of distillers, without paying for it. The Senate has now reversed its action on a part of the Cummins amendment relating to that matter, and it seems to me that the Smoot amendment no longer serves any useful purpose and had better be reconsidered also.

I do not care to go into the reasons particularly, because they have been stated very compactly and well by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], but the taking of that liquor and paying for it and then distilling it into alcohol, which would cost the Government about $6 a gallon, or something of that kind, seems to me to be a rather large expenditure of money to enter upon at this moment.

We have completed a revenue bill which carried $1,670,000,000. The bill as it came from the House carried $1,800,000,000. In both measures the taxes on liquor are important and component parts, and now suddenly not only to throw out those taxes, which form a part of the structure of both bills, but to make an enormous expenditure which has nothing whatever to do with war purposes and brings no conservation of any kind, seems to me to be unwise. In order to carry on this war successfully, at the back, the great support of everything, is the money, and I do not think there is anything to-day that warrants the great loss of revenue which is implied in the amendment of the Senator from Utah, together with the great expenditure which is also needed in order to pay those persons whose property has been taken.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah is not unmindful of the fact that the program is going along just as it was mapped out yesterday at the time the Senate recessed, but I do want to say just a word in answer to what has been said in relation to this amendment.

The Senator from Massachusetts states that the alcohol is going to cost the Government of the United States under this amendment some $6 a gallon. It would cost the Government of the United States $6 a gallon, providing the Government of the United States had to pay what the distillers expect to get for the spirits in bond from the people of the United States if this bill becomes a law. All the liquor interests are happy. The distillers wanted this provision in the bill. They intend to make enough out of it to liquidate all of the distilling companies in the United States if the bill becomes a law, and with that provision in it you will find that every distiller in the country will immediately advance the price of his distilled spirits. With the 208,000,000 gallons now and what will be put in bond before the passage of the bill the distillers will make two or three dollars a gallon and wind up at the end, perhaps, with five or six dollars a gallon profit, and there is in sight a profit to them of at least $500,000,000.

If you adopt this amendment of mine, the President of the United States will pay back the cost of producing it at a profit not to exceed 10 per cent. Then after redistillation the price will not be based upon the price the distillers intend to sell to the American public, but it will be upon what it actually costs plus a profit not to exceed 10 per cent.

It is not going to cost the Government of the United States so much money. I can not say exactly what it will cost the Government, but of the alcohol that will be taken out by redistillation every gallon will be wanted by the Government of the United States, and if we get into this war, as no doubt we will be compelled to do, we will have to buy more alcohol for munitions than we will ever get out of the distilled spirits in bond to-day.

Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that it costs not to exceed 5 cents a gallon to redistill these spirits, and remember, too, that it takes 2½ pounds of alcohol to make 1 pound of smokeless powder, and where are we going to get it? Are we to pay the distillers a profit of 100 per cent over and above what they claim it will cost them or shall we give the President of the United States power to purchase it all at a cost which is absolutely fair to the distillers of the country, and then it is in our possession?

Mr. President, I hope the Senate will consider this upon its merits, and I hope the Senate will vote to include this amendment in the bill. I feel like promising the Senate, if it does so, there will be no more distilled spirits manufactured in the United States for beverage purposes. This will be the end of it. This will be the end of King Alcohol.

I wish to say now to those who believe in the prohibition cause to vote against this amendment means that they are voting for the future distilling of liquors to be sold for beverage purposes in the United States. Put this in the bill and it is doomed; the American people will never consent again to its manufacture for the purpose of selling to the people of the United States for beverage purposes.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I make free to state the real legal status of this amendment as I see it. I am one of those to whom the Senator aptly alluded as having figured in something of a program. I am one of those who participated in the arrangement to bring before the Senate the reconsideration of this subject that Senators may have a calm moment to reflect upon the consequences of these amendments as well as upon the result of their vote.

Mr. President, when the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] was adopted and then there was added the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], we were practically in the position of having by the amendment of the Senator from Iowa appropriated whiskies which were in bond when, if we had done so, every one in this body will recognize we would open a very serious question as to whether we had not taken property without providing just compensation. To overcome that constitutional difficulty as well as to meet the abstract sense of justice the amendment tendered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], equivalent to an expression that the Government then should pay for what was appropriated, was passed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield, knowing the Senator will not take very much of my time in view of the short time allowed me under the rule.

Mr. REED. About three days ago the Senator made a very great speech in which he pronounced the Constitution dead. I am glad to know that he has resurrected it for the purpose of the present moment.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the eminent Senator from Missouri during all that debate was constantly asserting I was announcing that the Constitution was suspended. I was constantly saying in return, and I was insisting, that certain provisions had their operation suspended in time of war different from that in which they were executed in time of peace. The only thing that really seems dead to me constitutionally is the capacity of my friend from Missouri to constitutionally understand the distinction I presented before the Senate.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will pardon me, it would require some one who had been dead and had gone into the upper heavens and received celestial information ever to detect that distinction.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I accept my eminent friend from Missouri as wholly complying with that standard, for he constantly tenders me spiritual unction.

Mr. President, I return to the subject. As I understand it, it is that having reconsidered the Cummins amendment and practically restored the property back to the owners, which property we had previously appropriated, there is now no need of making provision for the payment of that which we have already redelivered to the proprietors, and we are now merely wresting the Government from the financial obligation of paying for that which we have heretofore decided we shall not have but shall remain the property of its possessor. Otherwise, sir, we will be paying vast sums, millions, for that which we would not possess.

In his last observation the Senator from Utah makes a very pertinent remark. It is that there should be some provision providing how the Government may obtain the alcohol or the spirits for munition purposes. Mr. President, I concede that; but, sir, we need not now buy all the whisky or buy all the spirits. If the time shall come when we shall need these, then let us take the steps at that time for such quantity as we shall actually need by contract, or if opposed by avarice we can then commandeer it, as provided by now existing law. That, sir, is the situation as I behold it, and I sustain the motion of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] for a reconsideration.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I am opposed to the reconsideration of this amendment. When it was before the Senate I voted against it under a misapprehension. I thought we were paying too much, and for that reason I voted against it. I believe, however, with the Senator from Utah, that if the United States pays for this liquor at this time the people of the United States will never again permit it to be manufactured for beverage purposes in this country.

Mr. President, I think that as a matter efficient in war making we are justified in taking this liquor over and making it into alcohol, because that would be a salvage, coming high, but we can afford to pay the price in order to end the manufacture and distribution of distilled liquors in this country. No man knows just what the cost is in the way of national efficiency; no man knows just what the cost is in the destruction of human life, but we all know that it is very, very large; and this measure, even if it does cost $200,000,000, $300,000,000, or $400,000,000, is an economical step in promoting the efficiency of the American people for war-making purposes and for peace purposes as well.

I am opposed to the reconsideration and I hope the Senate will maintain the principle already laid down in the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I can not understand how Senators by a vote of probably 4 to 1 will indorse a proposition which seems as plain as that which was presented by the Senator from Utah and then immediately thereafter almost wish to reconsider it for the purpose of killing that provision.

Mr. President, with that provision out of the bill it means that the 200,000,000 gallons of whisky that are now in bond will be sold to the people, and it will be done to the detriment of the efficiency of our Nation. It will mean that the $2,500,000,000 of expenditure that is made every year by the people in taking into their mouths that which steals away their brains will continue. It is a question as to whether a few million dollars which can prevent that will be voted by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, it has been estimated, according to a print I saw, that it would cost not to exceed $80,000,000 for the Government to take over all the liquor that is now in bond. The Senator from Utah has calculated that it would amount to $75,000,000. Is it possible that when we start in for the purpose of indemnifying or paying the people who were to lose this liquor and to save the bankers from the losses which they would sustain by reason of having certificates as collateral security for the payment of debt, when we go to that extent, immediately Congress turns around and says, "No; we will not have anything to do with it, but will resort to the old way of letting this great expenditure go on, to the detriment of the people of the United States, to the detriment of the soldiers if they ever drink it"?

Notwithstanding that, it seems to me, as a measure of conservation, the way of getting at it is equitable. I do not see why any person should change his mind. There was one Senator who said, "What is the use of keeping both provisions in the bill when they are practically the same and relate to the same subject matter?" I have no doubt that he voted as he did on the motion to reconsider the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, solely because of this other provision, which he was heartily in favor of. Is it possible that, as a conservation measure, when we are dealing with the question of distilled liquors we are going to open wide the door and let this liquor be sold in these times when every energy of the people is necessary, and where in war time the very salvation of our country is dependent upon keeping it from the people?

Mr. President, I shall vote against the motion to reconsider.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I have always voted against prohibition measures in this body. But I have not been regardless of the evil of the alcoholic traffic and I have not been opposed to its regulation and control. I believe that the use of alcohol should be controlled just as the use of any other poison should be controlled. But I have felt that in the legislation thus far proposed no proper consideration has been given to the equities of those who have built up businesses and produced alcoholic commodities under the sanction of the law in quasi partnership with the National Government. I have also felt that radical and intemperate action would not be sufficiently considerate of that class of people who, using intoxicants, from which the Government receives a substantial part of the profits, have formed the drink habit, which humanity requires should be treated scientifically as a malady rather than as a crime. I have feared that radical prohibition would encourage the drug habit and substitute a worse malady for the alcoholic malady.

I have also feared, and my experience has confirmed the fear, that extreme laws would result in their evasion and that we would have a government of spies throughout the country, whose function it would be to secure the punishment of such evasion.

But, Mr. President, the consciousness of the enormity of the evil has been growing upon me and I have been approaching the conclusion to vote for extreme measures rather than fail altogether of accomplishment. The amendment of the Senator from Utah, which proposes that the Government take over and pay for the existing stock of whisky in bond, is the first rational suggestion that tends toward a recognition of the equities of the people who have produced commodities under the sanction of the law. I believe that the amendment which he has offered should remain in the bill, and I intend to support it. If we can only follow this up hereafter by some moderate and progressive action which within a reasonable period will secure the reduction of the use of alcohol to those mild beverages which cheer but do not inebriate, we can in a rational and fair and just way, in a considerate and humane way, deal with this subject, and later on we can proceed to absolute prohibition if experience points that way.

I have not been willing to identify myself with the prohibition propaganda because it has been in the hands of radicals, as all such propagandas are. I have hoped that after the period of radical agitation some rational and wise solution would be suggested by more conservative men.

I welcome the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah as a step in that direction, one which will lead ultimately to a real, practical, and just solution of this important question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Nevada has expired.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think there should be a clear understanding of the amount of money the Government would have to pay out in the purchase of distilled spirits in bond and the amount of revenue the Government would lose if the amendment of the Senator from Utah should be adopted. The Senator from Utah says that there are 208,000,000 gallons of liquor in bond. I think that his estimate is too low. My understanding is that there is in excess of 232,000,000 gallons in bonded warehouses; but I will for the sake of argument admit his estimate and for the sake of easy calculation take an even lower estimate. Assume that there are only 200,000,000 gallons in bond, 8,000,000 less than he claims, and assume that the Government would under his amendment have to pay only $1 per gallon, or 25 cents a quart—and surely that is an extremely low figure—that would mean that the Government would have to pay for the 200,000,000 gallons of untax-paid spirits out of the Treasury of the United States, $200,000,000, to say nothing about the cost of redistillation, which would be at least 20 cents per gallon.

But the Government, if it purchases this liquor, will lose the tax, and that amount would have to be added to the cost of the liquor. Under the present law the tax is $1.10 a gallon, and under the revenue bill which the Finance Committee has just favorably reported to the Senate an additional tax of $1.10 a gallon is imposed, making the total tax $2.20 a gallon. If the amendment of the Senator from Utah is adopted, the loss in the tax on these 200,000,000 gallons would amount to $440,000,000. Added to the $200,000,000 which the Government would have to pay for the spirits in bond, the total would be $640,000,000.

In the revenue bill reported by the Finance Committee it is estimated we will realize from distilled spirits for the fiscal year 1918 $278,000,000. If this amendment passes we will get nothing from this source and will have to raise at least $200,000,000 additional revenue to pay for the commandeered liquor. So that, in some way or other, we shall, if this amendment is adopted, have to scurry around and find a way to raise at least $478,000,000 more than is provided for in the present revenue bill.

Therefore, Mr. President, taking into consideration the matter of revenue only, it is clear to my mind that in the conditions which now confront us the adoption of this amendment would create a very serious situation, to say the least, especially because of the fact that the bill as reported necessarily had to impose heavy burdens on the people.

Mr. President, there is another view of this matter besides that of revenue. It is obvious, if this amendment is adopted, the prohibition question will be injected into this war situation, because if the Government shall buy all of the liquor now—and no more liquor is permitted to be distilled—that would mean absolute prohibition as to liquors in the States that now permit the sale of liquor.

Mr. President, I do not wish to elaborate the views which I expressed a little while ago, but I wish to repeat that, in my judgment, we could not do anything that would more disturb the unity and harmony of the sentiment that now is arrayed in behalf of the great war in which we are engaged and engender discord and dissension where there should be harmony and cooperation than to inject this irritating question, upon which people feel so deeply, into this war situation. Because of the revenue condition and because I believe from the bottom of my heart that it is to the interest of the public welfare in this situation that we should not do that which will, in my judgment, so divide and chill the ardor of a considerable part of our people, especially in some of the larger and more populous States, I think this amendment ought to be reconsidered.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have been listening for several days to Senators discussing the prohibition question and I have been somewhat surprised to ascertain the universality of the sentiment in this body in favor of "bone-dry" prohibition all over this country. Now, for the first time in the history of the United States, the Senate of the United States has an opportunity to go on record and make good the assertion that it has been making here ever since the discussion of this proposition began.

I voted for the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to entirely eliminate the use of distilled liquors. I was not satisfied with it; I did not think it was entirely just; and it did not dispose of the proposition as a finality. When the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] offered his better amendment, an amendment that would dispose of this subject I believe for all time, I was very glad to have the opportunity to support it. It went through the Senate with only 11 or 12 votes against it. If the Senate meant what it said by that vote, if it was playing square with the people of this country, if it was not merely jockeying to get in a position to strike a blow at prohibition and the very societies that it was assuming it had been serving all this time, then it seems to me that it is incumbent upon the Senate now to make good what it has done; to vote now against the reconsideration of this proposition, to leave this food amendment in this proposed law, to keep it in the law, and then we shall have taken the first great step that means the total annihilation of the liquor traffic in the United States.

We all know that the great evil of intoxication flows almost entirely from the use of distilled liquors, and that very little intoxication comes from the use of beer or the use of wine. If we strike the dealthblow to King Alcohol in a vote to-day, we shall find little difficulty in disposing of that remnant of the liquor traffic in the United States in a very short time.

The amendment which has been adopted is fair to the distillers. It takes possession of everything that they have produced; it pays them what it cost to produce it in addition, and 10 per cent profit. If the Government could get out of this with a billion-dollar expense, it would be the cheapest bargain and the best bargain that the Government of the United States ever entered into with the liquor interest. I hope, Mr. President, to see it disposed of.

I am going to vote against the reconsideration of that proposition, and to stand by the colors in favor of prohibition. The Senator from Utah has correctly stated the position of the distillers when he says that they were all happy when we in the Committee on Finance decided that there should be no further distillation. Anyone who looked at the reports in the newspapers would have noticed that immediately distillery stocks mounted upward when we had prohibited any more distillation. Why? Because, Mr. President, they could dispose of their liquor. I sincerely hope that we can do justice to the prohibition cause in this vote.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, it seems to me that we have lost sight of the fact that this is a bill to enable the Government to fight a great war. Here we have come in, every man riding his own particular hobby, every man espousing his own particular reform, and willing, at any expense to the Government, to carry it through. I ask the Senate to come back to the proposition that we are in a great war. We are making the most desperate efforts that this Nation has ever been called upon to make. This war may last for five years; it may bring the Nation to the verge of bankruptcy, and it may cost us millions of lives of our citizens. The great question is whether this country, confronted by this emergency, will permit itself to be turned aside to carry through the fads and fancies, or, if you please, the reforms—the pet reforms—of individuals.

The chairman of the Finance Committee has shown that to permit the Smoot amendment to remain in the bill will cost the Government $600,000,000 at a minimum. Where are we going to get that money? By levying additional taxes on a people already overburdened with taxes. The Smoot amendment compels the President to buy this whisky, whether the Government has any use for it or not. There is already a provision in the bill permitting and requiring the President to commandeer the stuff if it is needed for public use; but the Smoot amendment compels him to buy it, compels this Nation to load itself with $600,000,000 additional burden in this war. I do not see how a sane man can look at that situation and calmly vote to retain this amendment in the bill when we are confronted by one great emergency, when we are making sacrifices in all directions, when we are burdening the Government with debt and are burdening the people with enormous taxes. I hope the reconsideration of the amendment will be carried.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I had not felt like saying anything on this subject until the debate had reached the present situation, when it seems as though it is my duty to express my sentiments in reference to the matter. The country ought to know, and I think does know, that this is called a conservation bill. The Senators with great unanimity, as it seemed, agreed that no food or food products shall be used during the pending war for the manufacture of alcoholic liquors. I say that seemed to be the almost unanimous sentiment of the Senate until the President suggested that the prohibition ought not to apply to beer and wine. Then, with usual servility, a majority of the Senate changed its mind and concluded to eliminate beer and wine. They, however, adhered to the thought that no more food should be used in the manufacture of distilled spirits. They could easily do that, because there was no opposition anywhere. The distillers themselves all over the country welcomed it, because it meant multiplied profits on the ample supply which they had already in bond, which profits would more than offset any loss which they could sustain by reason of the suspension of manufacture for a few years. They could suspend their distilleries, but their stock of liquors would multiply in price. Why should they complain?

This purchase proposition is a food-conservation measure. The Government must have large quantities of alcohol to prosecute the war. It can obtain it from the whisky or the spirits already produced or it can use food, which is needed for other purposes, to accomplish the same end. The alcohol is already in the distilled spirits, but some Senators present the argument that it is going to cost the Government much money to take over these distilled spirits and convert them into alcohol.

Mr. President, the price of whisky now, as I understand it, is $1.40 a gallon after the tax of $1.10 is paid to the Government. Under this proposition the whisky would cost the Government 30 cents a gallon, which would be a reasonable price for the liquor out of which this alcohol could be made. The distillers, of course, can well afford to pay the tax of $1.10 a gallon and the proposed additional tax of $1.10, because they can readily add the amount to the retail price. They are indifferent as to the amount of Government tax levied so long as it is not prohibitive. At present after paying the Government tax they sell whisky at $1.40 a gallon. One dollar and ten cents of that amount is tax, so that I repeat the selling price without tax would be 30 cents a gallon. That is all the Government should pay. At 30 cents a gallon the Government would pay $60,000,000 for the 200,000,000 gallons now in bond. It would not thereafter receive the $2.20 per gallon on this amount of spirits. But under no circumstances would all of it be released from bond in one year. It could not be. So that this year's revenue would not be lessened by $500,000,000. One-third of that amount would be a maximum figure. The Government could, however, better spend $300,000,000 of the people's money to buy this whisky for munition purposes than to allow the distillers to take four times that amount from the pockets of a portion of the people.

Senators do not properly consider all the elements which enter into this problem. I repeat, that I had not expected to say anything about it, but it seems to me that most specious arguments are made for the evident purpose of favoring an already favored class in this country, namely, the great producers of distilled spirits.

I have no personal feeling in this matter—none at all; I do not believe I am prejudiced; but I do believe that the end accomplished by the amendment of the Senator from Utah would be real conservation, and would at the same time help, as has been said so frequently, the efficiency, not only of our soldiers and sailors, but of the people themselves who are to support the Army and the Navy.

Mr. President, I hope that the motion to reconsider will not prevail, and that the country may know that the Senate is controlled only by the highest motives of good to the people, and not by any unworthy influences which have come in overnight and effected a change in the minds of Senators who seemed so steadfast in their convictions but yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, I desire to say that I do not agree with either the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] or with the chairman of the Committee on Finance [Mr. SIMMONS] touching the effect of this amendment upon the revenues of the country. The chairman of the Finance Committee states that it would cost $200,000,000 for the Government to purchase the whisky now in bond. I think that estimate is twice as high as it ought to be. I think that $100,000,000 would be nearer the mark. It costs about 25 cents in ordinary times to produce one gallon of distilled spirits. It would cost about 5 cents per gallon to convert this whisky into alcohol suitable for the manufacture of munitions of war.

Now, Mr. President, I will take the Senator's own figures. Assume that it cost $200,000,000 to condemn and pay for the whisky now in bond. That would not be an entire loss. When redistilled there would be a salvage amounting to something like $100,000,000 on that assumption. Not only that, but the redistillation of this whisky and its use in the manufacture of munitions would dispense with the necessity of converting other grain into distilled spirits for use in the manufacture of munitions.

The chairman of the Committee on Finance says that this amendment would cause the Government a loss of $420,000,000 in revenue. Of course, if the law remains as it is, and if we double the existing tax, distilled spirits would in due course of time render into the Treasury of the United States a revenue of $420,000,000. The chairman of the Finance Committee proceeds on the theory that the distillers pay this tax; he proceeds on the theory that the whisky bears the burden of the tax. Why, Mr. President, the distiller, indeed, pays the tax in the first instance, but who pays it in the last analysis? It is the man who consumes the whisky.

All that can be said in favor of the tax on whisky as a revenue measure is that it is a convenient method, a convenient agency, for the collection of a large amount of revenue. That is all. If we abolish the tax on whisky it does not dry up the sources of revenue. The $420,000,000 remains in the hands of the people; it is available through the agency of taxation; it can be brought into the Treasury in the form of revenue, and by a much juster tax than licensing distilled spirits to go out on their mission of destruction.

It is estimated that the amount of whisky now in bond when sold to the retailer will cost the consumer $2,500,000,000. Suppose, sir, the Government should lose $620,000,000, as suggested by the chairman of the Finance Committee. Would there not still be a saving of $1,900,000,000 in the hands of the people of this country, not only to carry on the ordinary processes of business, but available as a source of revenue, if the Government in its time of stress should desire to lay hands upon it? Instead of drying up the fountain of revenue, it will allow to remain in the hands of the people, available for taxation, a vast sum, approximately $2,000,000,000.

I repeat, Mr. President, there is no weight in the argument that the so-called Smoot amendment deprives the Government of one single dollar of revenue. Whatever argument may obtain against this proposal, the one touching revenue is a fallacy, and has no foundation in fact or in finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in the interest of accuracy, I want to put some figures in the RECORD. They will serve to correct some figures that I myself gave from my estimate. Mr. Gates, the Assistant Commissioner of Internal Revenue, gives me this information: It now costs about 30 cents a gallon to manufacture alcohol. The average cost of the whisky now in bond is 75 cents a gallon. It would require about 5 cents a gallon to convert this whisky into alcohol. Therefore alcohol made in this way would cost about 80 cents a gallon, instead of 30 cents a gallon. That would be a loss of 50 cents a gallon net. Assuming now that the Government can take the whisky over at cost—and my own opinion is, as a matter of law, that it will have to take it at the market price—if there be 230,000,000 gallons, and if there be 50 cents loss on each gallon it converts into alcohol, then there would be a loss of $115,000,000 on account of the acquisition of the whisky.

I do not know whether there is any loss in converting whisky into alcohol, but I simply make this statement because a while ago I was speaking without investigation, as many others have done, and I presume this statement is accurate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] more clearly describes my frame of mind on the motion to reconsider than I can express it myself. I believe that at some time we will meet this question, and that, if injustice be not done, the Government must expend some money. It is a sane and an equitable proposition which is contained in the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. It will work no injustice. Whatever the cost may be, whether it be 30 cents a gallon or 80 cents a gallon, at last it will be worked out in a specific sum of money.

I am gratified beyond my weak powers of expression to observe the praiseworthy spirit of frugality that manifests itself this afternoon for the first time in the four or five years I have been here. I wish I could indulge the hope, Mr. President, that it would continue; but I have small anticipation, except, I wish to remark incidentally in the few minutes I am allowed for the discussion of this question—the five-minute rule still applying—that I am still living in hopes that at some time, Mr. President, the light of pitiless publicity will be applied to what occurred between the time of adjournment last night and the roll calls which have been had in the Senate here to-day.

I hope, Mr. President, that sometime the American people may faintly realize the power of an invisible government that can reach out into the United States Senate and overnight compel it to reverse its vote, as if it were a mere playhouse upon a mimic stage and not a parliamentary body, in which sober affairs of life and death, peace and war, are being considered.

I voted, and will vote again, for such an amendment as that offered by the Senator from Utah. I believe in paying what is just for property rights that may be eventually interfered with by such legislation.

Who is holding up food legislation now? It is the distillers and the brewers of this country, at whose doors lies the delay since last night. I know the power of the liquor interests of this country; and when it has once been demonstrated, Mr. President, that they can reach even into the United States Senate and overnight can reverse the sober vote of Senators, it will not be many years until the American people will themselves reach out in turn to seize this power, and by the strong voice of a constitutional amendment put it where it belongs. We can well afford to lose this struggle this day in the hope that ultimately it will lend to a proposed constitutional amendment such power that it can no longer be stayed.

No greater argument was ever offered in a parliamentary body than that offered to-day in the course of our votes. A constitutional amendment submitted to the several States and ratified by them would place it beyond the power of the House and the Senate longer to be mere phrasemongers and jugglers with words.

A food-conservation measure! Yes; to wage war! Certainly. If it be conceded for argument's sake that the more drunken a race is the more warlike and powerful it is, then there is an argument to be offered here worthy of consideration. I think if this country is to be saved it will be saved by sober men and not by the unfortunate drunkards of our race. The course of the argument here to-day, Mr. President, has been that this is a food-conservation measure designed to aid us in conducting the war. Certainly it is; and only if liquor be food is there nourishment in bond that ought to be drawn out and be used, not to be hoarded by the Government, but to be administered to our soldiers in order that they may cope with the enemy across the sea. If it is not, then all grains used in its production are wasted, and the proposed restrictions ought to be applied.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I do not quite understand the purport of the remarks of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. He seemed to intimate that there was some influence at work which changed the minds of certain Senators overnight, and by that process, which is a very simple one if it is correct, he determines the motives which govern Members of this body in voting one way or another.

In discussing the Myers amendment yesterday afternoon which barred the making of vinous, malt, and spirituous liquors, making the country "bone dry," I observed that I was opposed to it, among other reasons, because it took property without compensation. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] introduced his amendment, by which all distilled spirits in bond were to be kept in bond during the period of the war. The object of that was to increase the efficiency and power of our people, because we know that distilled spirits, spirituous liquors, are detrimental to their health and undermine their efficiency. Then—and I see no inconsistency in this—when the Senator from Utah proposed that the Government purchase all spirits in bond, instead of tying them up, one was in conscience and in good faith, if he so thought, released from further supporting the Cummins amendment. He might have been quite willing to tie up the spirits; but if he could at one blow destroy the spirits and at the same time compensate the owners of the spirits, then, indeed, he would accomplish a double purpose, both equally advantageous to the State.

I believe in compensation. I do not believe in taking a man's property without due process. This property was built up under governmental protection. The Government was a party, or, if you please, particeps criminis, in the creation of distilled spirits, and has been taking its revenue, just as is urged now, from this source. We are the sinners, as much so as those who are accused here as marching under the banner of John Barleycorn, and we must atone that sin. One way of atoning a sin is to pledge ourselves to pay the price and compensate those whom we have, if you please, led astray.

Therefore I am going to support—and I see no inconsistency in it—the amendment of the Senator from Utah; and I trust that it shall prevail.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I had supposed that it was pretty generally agreed that during the pendency of the struggle in which we are now engaged the use of distilled liquors ought to be prevented throughout the country. There has not been very much difference of opinion or very much debate over that particular phase of the liquor question. Whatever difference of opinion has obtained has been with reference to beer and wine; but apparently it has been the consensus of opinion of the people that, so far as distilled liquors were concerned, they ought not to be permitted to be used, certainly during the pendency of this war, and in my judgment at no time.

Now, Mr. President, what is the situation with reference to it? We find in bond between 275,000,000 and 300,000,000 gallons of liquor—a sufficient amount to supply the people of this country for a very long period of time. It would seem desirable either to confine that liquor where it can not be used—to corral it, as it were, and hold it—or else to purchase it, and thereby in that way withhold it from use. If we are to carry out what is undoubtedly the public opinion of this country with reference to this liquor almost regardless of those who hold different views upon the liquor question in time of peace, how are we to do it?

In the first place, the question was presented in the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, withholding this liquor from the public, restraining it in bond until the war shall have closed. Some of us supported that; but the constitutional question was raised in regard to it, and some believed that it was in a measure a taking of private property even to restrain its use during that time. I do not, and did not, hold that opinion. I do not believe it is a violation of the Constitution to withhold this property, during an exigency of the national life, for a stated period of time. I do not think it constitutes a taking within the sense of the Constitution. But, Mr. President, there were those who did believe and sincerely believed that it was a violation of the Constitution, and if they so believed it was undoubtedly their duty to vote against the Cummins amendment. I still hold to the proposition that we may save the Government without destroying our Constitution.

Then came the second proposition, and that was to purchase the liquor and to pay for it. We have therefore the two propositions submitted to the Senate—the one to corral this liquor; the other, if that be unconstitutional, to take it over and pay for it. That leaves just one proposition to be considered, and that is the question of expense upon the part of the Government.

Is it worth while for us to incur this extra expense upon the part of the Government rather than to have 275,000,000 or 300,000,000 gallons of red liquor in use during the pendency of this war? In my humble opinion, we can not expend the amount of money which it has been said will be necessary—some placing the amount higher and some lower—to better advantage to the people of the entire country in this struggle than to do this thing.

Mr. President, there is much more in this in the way of conservation than the mere question of the drinking of the liquor and of the injury which it will do to the particular individual who imbibes it. It is eliminating and taking out of our social life, with all its waste and wreckage, during this war, this tremendous evil. It is an evil, which can not be confined in its effects simply to those who make use of the liquor which they may desire to imbibe. Therefore it is a simple question of the cost of putting down this tremendous evil and thus doing away with the effects which it will otherwise have during this war. It ought to be remembered, too, that we will be getting rid of the distilled-liquor question. Once the amendment goes into effect, so far as distilled liquors are concerned, the Nation will never return to its former status. The value of that is incalculable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). The time of the Senator from Idaho has expired. The question is upon the motion to reconsider submitted by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES].

Mr. CURTIS. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as before as to my general pair and its transfer to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] and vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. Understanding that he would vote as I shall on this proposition, I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] and withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement made on earlier votes, I have a pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who is absent. I therefore withdraw my vote, as I do not know how he would vote on this question.

Mr. BRADY (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN]. As he is not in the Chamber, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. THOMPSON. I desire to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is detained on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 52, as follows:

YEAS—25.

Bankhead	Hitchcock	McLean	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Husting	Penrose	Stone
Broussard	James	Pomerene	Tillman
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Reed	Underwood
Culberson	Knox	Simmons
France	Lewis	Smith, Ariz.
Gerry	Lodge	Smith, Ga.

NAYS—52.

Ashurst	Hale	Martin	Sheppard
Beckham	Harding	Myers	Sherman
Borah	Hollis	Nelson	Shields
Calder	Johnson, Cal.	New	Smith, Mich.
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Newlands	Smoot
Cummins	Kellogg	Norris	Swanson
Curtis	Kendrick	Owen	Thompson
Dillingham	Kenyon	Page	Townsend
Fernald	King	Phelan	Trammell
Fletcher	La Follette	Pittman	Wadsworth
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Poindexter	Watson
Gore	McKellar	Ransdell	Williams
Gronna	McNary	Shafroth	Wolcott

NOT VOTING—19.

Brady	Hughes	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Fall	Johnson, S. Dak.	Smith, S. C.	Walsh
Gallinger	Kirby	Sterling	Warren
Goff	Overman	Sutherland	Weeks
Hardwick	Robinson	Thomas

So the motion to reconsider was rejected.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and agreed to, the following:

Provided further, That the collection of all taxes on distilled spirits now in bond shall be suspended so long as this act is in force; and the distiller, in event that said distilled spirits shall be taken over by the Government, as herein provided, shall be discharged from all obligations for any and all taxes levied and assessed against said distilled spirits.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have the Secretary state the amendment again. I did not catch the first part of it.

The Secretary again stated the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, the purpose of that amendment is perfectly clear. When whisky is placed in bond the distiller has to give a bond, with approved securities, that he will tax pay that whisky within the eight-year period. Of course, there are millions of gallons of whisky the time of the payment of the tax upon which is expiring and will be expiring during the coming months. If this amendment is not adopted you will require these bonds to be paid, and yet the purpose of the Government under this provision is to commandeer this whisky; so that if this amendment is adopted it will merely suspend the payment of this tax until the Government takes over the whisky, which I think is perfectly fair, and I do not see that anyone could make any objection to it.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky if the adoption of his amendmen would not place the owner of the distillery where he would be free, now and in the near future, to dispose of a great deal of his whisky and be relieved from the tax thereon?

Mr. JAMES. Not at all, because whenever the amendment of the Senator from Utah is adopted the Government takes over this whisky. It can not be taken out of bond, and no whisky can be taken out of bond until it is tax paid. I merely suspend the tax payment of this whisky, and I do not suppose anybody wants to require the distiller to pay a tax upon the whisky that the Government itself is going to take over. The most that could be said for that proposition is that you intend to pay it right back to him.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JAMES. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I am rather in sympathy with the position that the Senator from Kentucky takes, but I am fearful that this amendment will do more than that stated by the Senator. I want to read the amendment to the Senator and then call his attention to where I think there is a loophole in it, although I do not mean, of course, that the Senator intended it:

Provided further, That the collection of all taxes on distilled spirits now in bond shall be suspended so long as this act is in force; and the distiller, in event that said distilled spirits shall be taken over by the Government as herein provided, shall be discharged from all obligations—

And so forth. Now, the bill may become an act of Congress; and under this amendment, just as soon as it becomes an act all the taxes are suspended on distilled spirits in bond.

Mr. JAMES. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, it may be some time before the President of the United States can take over the distilled spirits in bond. That being the case, at any time between the passage of the act and the time the President may take over the distilled spirits the tax is suspended, under this amendment, and in that case they can take all of the spirits out of bond under this provision.

Mr. JAMES. Oh, not at all. They have the warehouse receipts. They take the warehouse receipt, which is a statement of the number of barrels of whisky that the distiller owns there. He must tax pay that whisky. As I understand it, the amendment of the Senator from Utah directs the President to take over this whisky.

Mr. SMOOT. It does.

Mr. JAMES. It provides that none of the whisky shall be taken out of the warehouse. Then, what is the necessity of requiring the distiller to pay the tax on whisky that he can not take out of the warehouse?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator and I do not see this amendment alike. My amendment simply provides that the President is directed to take over distilled spirits in the bonded warehouses. It does not say how soon it shall be consummated, but your amendment provides a suspense of taxes upon the passage of this act.

Mr. JAMES. I am perfectly willing for the Senator to suggest any amendment he wishes. All I want to do is this: If the Government is going to take over this whisky it ought not to require the distillers to go around, and the banks, and all of the sureties, to try to borrow money to tax pay whisky to prevent it from confiscation, when the Government has already legislatively declared that it is going to take it over.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I suggest that this language would meet the point in mind:

The owners of distilled spirits in bond which are taken over by the United States shall be relieved of all obligation to pay any tax thereon.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that after the words "distilled spirits," at the end of his amendment, he add this:

Provided, That no distiller shall take the spirits from a bonded warehouse without paying the tax.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I think the Senator is mistaken about his own amendment, which has just been handed to me by the Senator from North Dakota. The Senator's amendment provides—

That the President of the United States be, and hereby is, directed to take over, for and on behalf of the Government of the United States, all distilled liquors that are held in bond at the time this act goes into effect.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. You direct the President to do that thing—take over all distilled liquors in bond at the time of the passage of this act.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. Now, the President is not going to refuse to obey the direction of Congress when you direct him to take over every particle of whisky that is held in bonded warehouses at the time this act takes effect. All that my amendment does is simply to suspend these bonds that the people have given under the laws that then existed, that they would tax-pay this whisky; but I have no objection to any amendment the Sentaor wants to suggest that will make it clear, if it is not already so.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will just withdraw the amendment for a moment I will take up the question with him, and he can present it again in a few moments.

Mr. JAMES. Just let the amendment be pending. That is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as pending. The question recurs upon the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, it seems to me that this amendment would have to be acted upon before that question could be taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of that opinion.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I notice that the Senator's amendment refers to suspending the tax on liquors "now in bond." I suggest that the Senator leave out the word "now," and say "on liquors in bond at the time of the passage of this act."

Mr. JAMES. I have no objection to that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I thought the Senator would have no objection to that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not understand what the Senator refers to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The amendment refers to liquors now in bond. I want to make it refer to liquors in bond at the time of the passage of the act.

Mr. JAMES. Of course it could only refer to the time of the passage of the act.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say to the Senator that there was an act passed some time ago where the word "now" was used, and it was construed by the court to apply to the conditions existing at that time. There was, however, some additional language in that act.

Mr. JAMES. I have no objection to that. I will modify the amendment as suggested by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, while there is nothing immediately pending before the Senate, I want to express the hope that the Senate will be able to dispose of this section of the bill and all of the amendments thereto before adjournment this evening. I believe that the majority sentiment of the Senate favors remaining in session until this section is finally disposed of; and I want to say to the Members of the Senate that I am going to request them to remain in session until it is disposed of.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will it be in order to offer to the amendment proposed by the committee an amendment such as was offered by the Senator from Utah, and adopted, before the vote is taken upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask the Senator from Iowa to state the first part of the interrogation again. The Chair did not hear the first part of the Senator's sentence.

Mr. CUMMINS. The inquiry is this: Will it be in order to offer an amendment to the committee amendment prior to the vote upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas, as amended?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To which part of the committee amendment does the Senator allude—the part proposed to be stricken out or the residue of the committee amendment?

Mr. CUMMINS. Well, presently we shall have to vote upon this question: Shall the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas be substituted for the amendment proposed by the committee?

Now, I should like to see the same kind of amendment adopted to the committee amendment that has already been adopted to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas, so that we may be able to express our opinion fairly and fully as to the merits of the two amendments, but I doubt whether it is in order, and that is the reason why I ask the question.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Chair indulge me to reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Iowa?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will be glad to hear the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. It certainly could not be in order. The pending question is the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, and two questions can not be pending at once. Until that is disposed of the amendment to the committee amendment could not be in order.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the committee amendment is offered as a substitute for the provision of the bill. That is the original situation on which we are acting. We can amend the committee amendment, and we can amend the House provision, but so far as amending the committee amendment by putting into it the same thing that is in the amendment that is offered to the substitute I do not see how we can get at it.

Mr. NORRIS. The amendment of the Senator from Arkansas is a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Oregon. We have been amending the proposed substitute. It is a general rule of parliamentary law that where a substitute is offered both the substitute and the section to which the substitute refers are subject to amendment, so that each one can be perfected before the final vote is taken between the two.

Mr. LODGE. But the amendment of the Senator from Oregon is an amendment to the House text. The House text is the original proposition, and the amendment of the Senator from Oregon is a second proposition. Each of those is a separate question. Each can be perfected.

Mr. NORRIS. No; the contest is between the substitute offered by the Senator from Arkansas and the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon. There is a contest between those two. We have been perfecting one of them by amendments for a day or two. We ought to have the same privilege of perfecting the other before the final contest is disposed of.

Let me illustrate, Mr. President, by taking the case before the Senate. We have adopted to the Robinson amendment the so-called Smoot amendment. If we are prohibited from offering a similar amendment to the Chamberlain amendment, then Senators who desire to vote between those two propositions will be in this dilemma: They may prefer the Smoot amendment to the Chamberlain amendment rather than to the Robinson amendment. In other words, there are Senators who want the Smoot amendment and who want the Chamberlain amendment, and if that is the ruling of the Chair they are prohibited from voting their sentiments. That is a parliamentary impossibility.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Nebraska will permit the Chair, it occurs to the Chair that the way to reach that would be for the Senate to vote down the Robinson amendment and then the question would come up on the Chamberlain amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. On the other hand, there are Senators who prefer the Robinson amendment to the Chamberlain amendment, so that they would not be able to vote their sentiments. In other words, there ought to be permission given, and I think that is a general proposition of law, so that when a substitute is offered you can perfect both the substitute and the matter to which the substitute is directed.

Mr. JAMES. I ask that the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky will be read.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Kentucky proposes the following amendment:

Provided further, That the collection of all excise taxes on distilled spirits in bond at the time of the passage of this act shall be suspended so long as this act is in force, and the distiller in the event that said distilled spirits shall be taken over by the Government, as herein provided, shall be discharged from all obligations for any and all taxes levied and assessed against said distilled spirits: Provided, however, That the owner of the distilled spirits shall not withdraw any part thereof without the payment of the excise tax in force.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs upon the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas as amended.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, to recur a moment to the question of amending the Chamberlain amendment, there is the House provision. The Chamberlain amendment is to strike out and insert. Those are two questions. We can perfect the House text. We can perfect the Chamberlain amendment. We have here an amendment pending to the Chamberlain amendment. We can not consider two questions at once.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the motion to strike out and insert under our rules is well recognized in the Senate. Each is regarded for the purpose of amendment as a question. Therefore we have two questions pending before the Senate. One has already been settled; that is, the portion to be stricken out has been perfected. We are now perfecting the portion that is to be inserted. In order to do that the Senator from Arkansas moves a substitute, but he does not make a technical motion to strike out and insert. It is not recognized in the Senate practice to have one motion to strike out and insert superimposed upon another motion to strike out and insert. Therefore the motion of the Senator from Arkansas is to be considered as a simple amendment, as a substitute. We are now perfecting the language that is proposed to be inserted, and the only way to perfect that is by amendment. Until the pending amendment is disposed of no other amendment can be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from New Hampshire, but may I call his attention to this further point? The desire is to put the amendment of the senior Senator from Utah into the Chamberlain amendment. If we substitute the Robinson amendment for the Chamberlain amendment and that amendment goes in it becomes part of it, of course. If the Robinson amendment fails, the Chamberlain amendment is open to amendment. Nothing is lost.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say now at this point what I intend to do. If the Robinson amendment is not agreed to—that is, if it is not substituted for the Chamberlain amendment—I propose to offer the same amendment to the Chamberlain amendment that I offered to the Robinson amendment, and I shall also move to perfect the House provision before we vote on it.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I ask that the Robinson amendment, the one we are about to vote upon, be now read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read it.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the words proposed to be inserted by the committee insert the following:

SEC. 12. That from and after 30 days from the date of the approval of this act no person shall use any foods, fruits, food materials, or feeds in the production of distilled liquors, except for governmental, industrial, manufacturing, scientific, or medicinal purposes; nor shall there be imported into the United States during said war any distilled liquors: Provided, That the President of the United States be, and hereby is, directed to take over, for and on behalf of the Government of the United States, all distilled liquors that are held in bond at the time this act goes into effect, and he is hereby authorized to pay the owners of such liquors the actual cost of the same plus a profit not exceeding 10 per cent: Provided further, That the collection of all excise taxes on distilled spirits in bond at the time of the passage of this act shall be suspended so long as this act is in force, and the distiller in the event that said distilled spirits shall be taken over by the Government as herein provided shall be discharged from all obligations for any and all taxes levied and assessed against said distilled spirits: Provided, however, That the owner of the distilled spirits shall not withdraw any part thereof without the payment of the excise tax in force. Any person who willfully violates this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, under the ruling of the Chair it would not be in order to offer an amendment now to the so-called committee or Chamberlain amendment. I prefer the Chamberlain amendment to the Robinson amendment as it stands, without the Smoot amendment added. I am very much in favor of what is known as the Smoot amendment, but the only way to get the Smoot amendment and the Chamberlain amendment under the parliamentary situation is to vote against the Robinson amendment now, and if it is defeated, then offer the Smoot amendment to the Chamberlain amendment.

I wanted to say that much in order to make plain the vote I am about to cast on this question, and I think it will probably make the parliamentary situation clear to others who feel as I do as between these two amendments.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it not within the parliamentary rule to perfect the amendment offered by the committee by proposing an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest to the Senator the situation is that the Senator from Arkansas moved an amendment, which is in lieu of the amendment reported by the committee. The committee propose certain matters to be inserted after striking out a certain portion of section 12. The Senator from Arkansas proposes matter which has been amended now and is submitted as amended in lieu of the committee proposal. Therefore the question is whether you favor the amendment, as completed, offered by the Senator from Arkansas or the committee amendment. If you prefer the committee amendment, you will vote against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas, and if that is rejected we can deal with the committee amendment as we see fit by offering amendments to it or otherwise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the view heretofore announced by the Chair, and the Chair adheres to that ruling.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Utah a question in relation to his amendment that we have adopted. It provides that the President is directed to take over this alcohol at cost and a profit not exceeding 10 per cent. The Senator intends to allow the President to say, then, whether the owner of this liquor shall have 1 per cent or 10 per cent, as I understand it?

Mr. SMOOT. That would be a fair construction of the amendment, but I think it is virtually a direction to the President to pay not to exceed 10 per cent.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think in that case we ought to say at cost plus 10 per cent profit, if that is the intention of the Senator.

I wish to ask, further, Mr. President, for I think this method of procedure is going to result in great confusion when it is applied, does the Senator intend to leave to the President the absolute authority to fix the cost of this liquor?

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment provides that the President shall have the authority to ascertain the actual cost. As to how he will do that I can not say, but I take it for granted that the cost of distilled spirits is known by everybody who is in the business. I do not think there could be any contention as to the cost. They are all staple articles.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course it may be that the ordinary kind of whisky is made approximately from the same kind of material, but where whisky has been in bond all sorts of periods, from one year to eight years, where it has been made in many different distilleries, and where the ingredients of it have been brought forth in many different markets at many different prices, I think it would be very complicated for the President to take a barrel of whisky or each barrel of the contents of a bonded warehouse and establish the cost of it.

I wish to suggest further that in every other instance, as far as I recall it, when we have given the President the power to commandeer an article we have provided that he might fix the price in the first instance; but if the owner was not satisfied with it he could go into court and get some sort of judicial proceeding to determine the cost.

Mr. SMOOT. That is only in cases where the President is authorized to commandeer the plant making the particular article named. Then it becomes a question of cost as to whether he shall take so much for overhead expense, so much for wear and tear of the plant, so much for unforeseen expenses. In that case I think it is absolutely right that it should be left to the court, but in this case there is only one product, and the price of it is generally known all over the United States by those engaged in the business.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think it would be quite an unsatisfactory proceeding, Mr. President, to make the President of the United States fix the price of whisky all over the country in the different bonded warehouses. I do not think it is a very congenial task for him, but I hope for the best.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, for the purpose of perfecting the pending amendment, as I do not believe there is any difference between the pending amendment and the so-called Chamberlain amendment except a provision for the control of the manufacture of malt and vinous products, I offer as an amendment to the pending amendment that portion of the Chamberlain or committee amendment dealing with that question. It is found in House bill 4961, section 12, being subdivisions (b) and (c) thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of the amendment:

(b) Whenever the President shall find that limitation, regulation, or prohibition of the use of foods, food materials, or feeds in the production of vinous, malt, or fermented liquors, or that reduction of the alcoholic content of any such liquors is essential, in order to assure an adequate and continuous supply of food or feed, he is authorized, from time to time, to prescribe and give public notice of the extent of the limitation, regulation, prohibition, or reduction so necessitated. Whenever such notice shall have been given, and shall remain unrevoked, no person shall, after a reasonable time, which shall be prescribed in such notice, use any foods, food materials, or feeds in the production of such vinous, malt, or fermented liquors, except in accordance with the limitations, regulations, and prohibitions prescribed in such notice, or to produce any such liquors having an alcoholic content in excess of the amount prescribed therefor in such notice. When the question arises as to whether any particular product is suitable for food or feed, the question shall be determined by the President, and his determination shall be conclusive for the purposes of this section.

(c) Except as otherwise herein provided, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall be charged with the administration of this section, and he is authorized, with the approval of the President, to require the taking out of such permits, the keeping of such records, the execution of such bonds, and the observance of such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the execution of the same.

Mr. LODGE. That amendment, as I heard it read, is the committee amendment—the Chamberlain amendment—for which we are now considering the substitution of the Robinson amendment. It seems to me impossible to add it to the Robinson amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, it is only a part of the committee amendment; it is not all of the committee amendment, and it is different in that respect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, before this vote is taken I desire to say a word or two about the amendment proposed by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], which is now describing its shining course of glory under the attractive nomenclature of the Smoot amendment. This amendment proposes to direct the President of the United States to commandeer and to take charge of 250,000,000 gallons of distilled spirits in bond, and to pay the owners of that property the cost of its manufacture to them, respectively, plus not over 10 per cent.

I appreciate the difficulties that confronted the acute mind of my friend from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] when he discussed this matter a moment ago; but difficulties of that kind do not seem to attract the attention of many Senators with any degree of seriousness at this juncture.

Mr. President, I have just one thought to express in this connection, and I confine what I have to say to that one thought, because time forbids that I should undertake to enlarge upon the subject, so as to give expression to other thoughts which I regard as equally pertinent.

Under this Smoot amendment the President of the United States is authorized and directed to take charge of this great aggregate of distilled spirits and to pay the owners what it costs them to produce the spirits they own plus not exceeding 10 per cent.

Mr. President, suppose it should be true, as it is more than likely to be true—in fact, almost certain to be true—that the owners of these manufactured products held in public bond houses under a statutory contract with the Government of the United States, might be able to dispose of their possessions at 20 per cent profit or some other larger profit than 10 per cent? An owner may, probably will, have numerous purchasers appearing and offering to pay him as much as 20 or 25 per cent, or some other price above the 10 per cent spoken of in this proposed statute; but then comes the President, clothed with the extraordinary powers which you are conferring upon him, takes the man's property, and pays not exceeding 10 per cent, or it may be only 8 per cent or 5 per cent profit, as the President or his agent sees proper. Mr. President, if that is not the taking of private property for public uses without just compensation, then I do not know what the Constitution means in that regard.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the amendment now offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], it seems to me, will raise the whole question at issue between the Members of the Senate. The so-called Robinson amendment deals only with distilled liquor, and the part of the committee amendment which the Senator from Nevada offers deals with vinous and malt liquors, leaving to the President the power of using foodstuffs in their manufacture and fixing the alcoholic content. So, it seems to me, if Senators now vote for the amendment to the Robinson amendment, which has been offered by the Senator from Nevada, the Senate will determine by its adoption that vinous and malt liquors are to be regulated by the President of the United States fixing the amount of foodstuffs that may be used in them, as well as the alcoholic content. If the Senate votes down the amendment of the Senator from Nevada, then it leaves the Robinson amendment to be finally voted on, dealing only with distilled liquors. So it seems to me, though it is rather an anomalous method of procedure, it will determine the question and enable the Senate to settle the whole matter on a vote on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have a petition here, addressed to the Senate and signed by many pastors of many of the leading churches of the District of Columbia, asking for the prohibition of spirituous and malt liquors for beverage purposes. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD with the names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection it will be so ordered.

The petition referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 25, 1917.

To the UNITED STATES SENATE.

HONORABLE SIRS: We the undersigned, composing a committee of clergymen of the various religious bodies, Jew, Gentile, Roman Catholic, and Protestant, in the city of Washington, D. C., meet from time to time to consider all subjects pertaining to the general welfare of our city. By unanimous agreement we urge as a war measure for the conservation of foods and the sobriety, health, and the reliability of our Army and Navy, that you prohibit the manufacture, sale, and gift of spirituous and malt liquors for beverage purposes within our country's domain. For this we do most earnestly petition and pray.

Abram Simon, Eighth Street Temple, Jewish; C. C. McLean, minister Douglas Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church; Charles Wood, minister Church of the Covenant, Presbyterian; Roland Cotton Smith, St. John's Church, Protestant Episcopal; Ulysses G. B. Pierce, All Souls' Church, Unitarian; George A. Miller, minister Ninth Street Christian Church; F. J. Prettyman, minister Emory Methodist Episcopal Church South; L. E. Purdum, minister Ingram Memorial Congregational Church; Charles F. Steck, pastor Epiphany Lutheran Church; W. W. McMaster, pastor First Baptist Church; John M. Cooper, assistant pastor St. Matthew's Roman Catholic Church; John Van Schaick, Universalist Church of Our Father.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, with reference to this matter, I merely desire to say that I am opposed to the amendment as proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. I am opposed to it because I do not want to place, and I do not think Congress ought to place, that responsibility on and discretion in the hands of the President of the United States. If Congress wants the brewing of beer and the making of wine prohibited, we ought to say so. If we do not want it done, we ought not to put such a tremendous responsibility as that upon the President, where he will be subjected to all sorts of pressure from both sides of this proposition. I am opposed to that amendment, and I am in favor of the Robinson amendment as it now stands in preference to the Chamberlain amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, just a word in explanation of my vote. I shall vote for the Robinson amendment without the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], not because I am opposed to prohibition—to "bone-dry prohibition"—for I would be glad to strike out the words "distilled liquors" and to insert the words "alcoholic liquors." As I understand, we had a vote on that yesterday. I believe, however, if I understand the parliamentary situation, that if the pending amendment, which is the Robinson amendment, shall be adopted, we still have an opportunity to vote on the House provision. While I shall vote for the Robinson amendment without the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada, it is not because that suits me at all, but because I shall have another opportunity to vote for the House measure, which is a "bone-dry" provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. REED. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] on this question. I understand, however, that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote, and I will therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I desire to make the same announcement as I did on a former vote, that I am paired with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] and vote "yea."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] and not knowing how he would vote on this question if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] I withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I desire to make the same announcement as previously, that I am paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I will withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], which I transfer to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr LODGE (when the name of Mr. WEEKS was called). My colleague [Mr. WEEKS] is unavoidably detained from the city. If present, he would vote "nay." As has been stated, he is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRADY. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN]. However, if he were present he would vote the same way as I shall vote on this question, and I therefore vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 46, as follows:

YEAS—34.

Beckham	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Stone
Colt	Kellogg	Newlands	Thompson
Cummins	Kendrick	Norris	Tillman
Fletcher	Kenyon	Owen	Trammell
Gore	King	Pittman	Walsh
Hollis	Lewis	Poindexter	Wolcott
Husting	McKellar	Shafroth
Johnson, Cal.	McNary	Sheppard

NAYS—46.

Ashurst	Gerry	Myers	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Gronna	Overman	Smith, Mich.
Borah	Hale	Page	Smoot
Brady	Harding	Penrose	Swanson
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Phelan	Townsend
Broussard	James	Pomerene	Underwood
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Curtis	Knox	Reed	Warren
Dillingham	La Follette	Robinson	Watson
Fernald	Lodge	Sherman	Williams
France	McLean	Shields
Frelinghuysen	Martin	Simmons

NOT VOTING—16.

Calder	Hardwick	Saulsbury	Sutherland
Fall	Hughes	Smith, Ga.	Thomas
Gallinger	Kirby	Smith, S. C.	Vardaman
Goff	McCumber	Sterling	Weeks

So Mr. PITTMAN's amendment to Mr. ROBINSON's amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to the committee amendment. I want to perfect the House provision, and for that reason I offer this amendment.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the House provision has already been perfected under the ruling of the Vice President yesterday. The Vice President ruled that the House provision had the right of way and might be amended first. It was amended, and then we proceeded to perfect the part to be inserted, and we have now perfected that; and I make the point of order that the House provision can not be further amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must overrule the point of order. It is amendable at any time prior to the prior vote.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not think it is necessary to take the time of the Senate to have the amendment read. It is exactly the amendment that was offered to the Robinson amendment by myself, and adopted. This is an amendment perfecting the House provision.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask that the amendment be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Utah proposes to amend the House text as follows: After the word "beverage," the last word in the amendment agreed to, and before the penalty clause, insert:

Provided, That the President of the United States be, and hereby is, directed to take over, for and on behalf of the Government of the United States, all distilled liquors that are held in bond at the time this act goes into effect; and he is hereby authorized to pay the owners of such liquors the actual cost of the same, plus a profit not exceeding 10 per cent thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now recurs on the committee amendment, as amended.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. That comes now as a substitute for the House provision, as I understand it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is denominated the committee amendment as amended is the Robinson amendment as amended. The question is whether it shall take the place of the House text as amended.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If that should be adopted in place of section 12 of the House bill, then would it come up as a section to be voted on?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it would be adopted.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What I am trying to get at is this: Some of the Senators have asked me when the provision under the unanimous-consent agreement for making ten-minute speeches would be in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Never, we hope.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will that be in order now, or at any time?

Mr. PENROSE. Some of us hope the time will never come.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I agree with the Senator so far as that is concerned.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry concerning the actual parliamentary status. The question now is upon the committee amendment as amended by the Robinson amendment, and as further amended by the Smoot amendment, is it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. What was known as the Robinson amendment was amended in two or three particulars; among others, by the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah. The same identical amendment which the Senator from Utah offered to the Robinson amendment was offered and adopted to the original House text.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But what are we voting on now? That is what I want to know.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the vote comes, if there be no other amendment, it will be, actually speaking, a question between the House text as amended and the Robinson text as amended.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But which would be "yea" and which "nay"?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators who want the amendment will vote "yea." Those who want the House bill as amended will vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS. But they are both amendments, Mr. President. The committee amendment is an amendment to the House provision. The Robinson amendment is an amendment to it. I thought we had voted on the Robinson amendment instead of the committee amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH and Mr. ROBINSON addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair can probably get the view of the Chair to the Senator from Mississippi. There was a House text. The Senator from Oregon, on behalf of the committee, offered an amendment. The Senator from Arkansas offered an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Striking it out and substituting.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In lieu of it. Now, that has already been adopted by the Senate; so that the only question now pending before the Senate is the vote between the House text as perfected and the Robinson amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. There was adopted by the Senate, as an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas, the provision of the Senator from Iowa that no distilled liquors shall be imported into the United States during the war. I will ask whether that amendment is also in the House bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; it is in the House text.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I move to amend the House provision by inserting, after the word "alcohol," in line 19, the words "or alcoholic beverages." That is what is intended to be reached by the legislation, and if we are going to vote upon the question, it ought to read in the proper way.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is in the amendment once.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I withdraw the amendment, then.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the parliamentary situation is easy to understand if the Senate recognizes that the motion is now the motion of the committee, through the chairman, to strike out and insert. The part to be stricken out is the House provision. The part to be inserted is now the amendment of the Senator from Oregon, as amended by the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas. It is to strike out the House provision and insert the Robinson amendment, so called.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, do I understand that the amendment now pending is that of the Senator from Washington?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; he withdrew it.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I desire to offer the same amendment which I offered to the amendment which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] offered to the substitute offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the House text of the bill as amended, following the Smoot substitute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire it read?

Mr. JAMES. It has already been read to the Senate. There is no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. CURTIS and other Senators called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary question. The House provision contains the Cummins amendment unmodified. I take it that if the Robinson amendment is not now substituted for the House text, the motion to reconsider, of which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] yesterday gave notice would be in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not now in possession of the facts necessary to enable him to rule. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. CURTIS and other Senators called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). On these matters I am paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER.] If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay." As the Senator from New York is absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as before as to my pair and its transfer and vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair as heretofore, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I desire to make the same announcement as heretofore with reference to my vote. Having a pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] and vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when Mr. WEEKS's name was called). My colleague [Mr. WEEKS], as I have already stated, is absent from the city. He is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FERNALD. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—45.

Bankhead	James	Overman	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Johnson, Cal.	Penrose	Stone
Broussard	Jones, N. Mex.	Phelan	Swanson
Colt	Knox	Pittman	Tillman
Culberson	La Follette	Pomerene	Underwood
France	Lewis	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Reed	Warren
Gerry	McLean	Robinson	Watson
Harding	McNary	Sheppard	Williams
Hitchcock	Martin	Simmons
Hollis	New	Smith, Ariz.
Husting	Newlands	Smith, Ga.

NAYS—37.

Ashurst	Gore	Myers	Smoot
Beckham	Gronna	Nelson	Thompson
Borah	Hale	Norris	Townsend
Brady	Johnson, S. Dak.	Owen	Trammell
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Page	Vardaman
Cummins	Kellogg	Poindexter	Walsh
Curtis	Kendrick	Shafroth	Wolcott
Dillingham	Kenyon	Sherman
Fernald	King	Shields
Fletcher	McKellar	Smith, Mich.

NOT VOTING—14.

Calder	Hardwick	Saulsbury	Thomas
Fall	Hughes	Smith, S. C.	Weeks
Gallinger	Kirby	Sterling
Goff	McCumber	Sutherland

So the committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unanimous-consent agreement is at an end.

WAR REVENUE.

Mr. SIMMONS. If it is in order at this time, I wish to ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 4280) to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes, be recommitted to the Finance Committee. This is made necessary by reason of the agreement of the Senate to the bill pending which has just been reached.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I wish we could have order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina moves that the revenue bill be recommitted to the Committee on Finance. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Under the circumstances it will be necessary to hold the bill in the Finance Committee until there has been final action upon this bill, because until there is final action upon this bill the Finance Committee will not know how much revenue will be necessary to meet the expenditures of the Government.

Mr. HUSTING. I desire to have printed in the RECORD a speech delivered by Senator OWEN, of Oklahoma——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we can not hear a word the Senator is saying.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I insist upon the regular order. I should like to get the pending bill disposed of in some sort of way or shape.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon made the announcement that he would not permit the bill to be laid aside for the purpose of introducing bills, resolutions, or other routine matters.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to Senators that I will make a motion to adjourn until 12 o'clock Monday when we do finish this day's work, so that Senators may have an opportunity to get rid of routine business.

Mr. HUSTING. I have the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Over the objection of the Senator from Oregon, for the purpose for which the Senator from Wisconsin rose he has not the floor.

Mr. HUSTING. I should like to ask the Senator to permit me to make this request.

Mr. PENROSE. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not responsible for objections. The Chair simply stated the fact.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Regular order!

CONSERVATION OF FOOD AND FUEL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4961) to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I submit the following unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. PENROSE. Let it be read for information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT.

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 1 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Wednesday, July 11, 1917, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill H. R. 4961, a bill to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel, and that at not later than 5 o'clock p. m., on said calendar day, will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill itself through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the said hour of 1 o'clock p. m., on said day, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than 5 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I do not think I can agree to the unanimous-consent agreement. In my judgment the bill is of such surpassing importance and the consideration thus far has so proceeded through only a portion of it, so that it would be impossible for the Senate to consider the bill in the way it should be considered by 1 o'clock on Wednesday. We have all had a good deal of experience in the fixing of unanimous-consent agreements, and particularly as to the limitation of debate carried in the agreements. Unfortunately, there is no limitation placed in such agreements upon the introduction of amendments after the debate has been limited. The bill is of such tremendous importance, there are so many amendments which I am quite sure will be offered from the floor in addition to the committee amendments, that I think it is impossible for the Senate to conclude an intelligent consideration of it by Wednesday.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It may be the Senator can suggest a later date when he thinks the bill will have an opportunity to be more fully discussed?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That would be almost impossible for me to do, much as I should like to do it. I have not the slightest intention of delaying the intelligent consideration of the bill. When Monday or Tuesday or Wednesday comes and we see how far we are progressing with the consideration of amendments it may be possible to fix a day. Thus far we have not even finished the consideration of the committee amendments.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Does the Senator make an objection?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, it is because of the great importance of this bill that it seems to me the Senate ought to be willing to fix a time when it will vote on the bill itself. I wish the Senator instead of objecting might suggest a later date.

Mr. PENROSE. I think we have worked pretty hard all day, and if the Senator will bring this matter up on Monday he would do better than to try to force it this evening.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania has been very kind in his efforts to assist in reaching an agreement by unanimous consent in reference to the amendment just disposed of. I am satisfied if we had not gotten this one question settled to-day, limited by a unanimous-consent agreement, we might have been discussing it for weeks.

Now, Mr. President, I dislike very much to file a motion for a cloture rule; I know how the Senate feels about it, yet it seems to me that after three weeks of discussion there ought to be a time fixed now to vote on the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I notified the Senate the other day that I would file a motion for cloture this evening if I failed to get a unanimous-consent agreement. I am going to extend the time for filing that motion until Monday in the hope that the Senate will get rid of much of the bill on Monday, and I will then file it whether I succeed in securing its adoption later on or not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I simply desire to say the Senator is slightly inaccurate when he says the bill has been under discussion for three weeks.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Since the 18th of June.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was not reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry until June 27.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. We commenced discussing the bill before the Senate and it was made the unfinished business on the 18th of June.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was then referred to the Agricultural Committee as it came from the House, and something like 60 amendments were suggested by the committee, and the Senate has not even finished the consideration of those committee amendments.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. We have been discussing the bill since the 18th day of June.

Mr. PENROSE (exhibiting). Here are some of the amendments to be offered to the bill. They have not even been read in the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. And I do not think we will get along any faster in the future than we have done in the last three weeks unless some agreement is reached.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator that the section of the bill which it has been claimed heretofore has been causing delay has been disposed of under the unanimous-consent agreement. It can not be reserved even for a separate vote when the bill is out of Committee of the Whole.

I should like to see the bill passed. I am very anxious to have it passed. I know it is a very important measure and that time is of the essence in the matter. So I should like to see the Senator from Oregon either file his motion for cloture this evening or else keep the Senate in session for quite a while this evening in the hope that we may go on and consider some of the many amendments that the Senator from Pennsylvania has shown and that have not even been read.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. At the suggestion of the Senator from Washington, I will file the cloture motion this evening, and then the Senators who are responsible for the delay in disposing of the bill can assume that responsibility by a record vote.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask to have the motion read.

Mr. REED. I wish to inquire if that is a cloture motion.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is.

Mr. REED. I thought the Senator and I had an understanding that he would not file that motion——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. But I was requested to do it by the Senator from Washington. It was suggested that I should do it, and it is in accordance with the original proposition I made on Thursday when the unanimous-consent agreement was entered into. I suggested a few moments ago that it might be well to postpone making the motion, but, at the suggestion of the Senator from Washington, I will file the motion now and ask that it be read.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I just want to have a plain understanding. When I gave my consent to the unanimous-consent agreement to consider the committee amendment which has just been disposed of I very explicitly requested an understanding with the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not recall having made any agreement, but the RECORD will show.

Mr. REED. The RECORD will show what transpired. I have such a high regard for the Senator from Oregon that I could not think him guilty of any bad faith; but I say to him now he will recall he exacted from me an agreement that I would not object to a unanimous consent to vote some time next week.

Mr. GORE. At a certain date?

Mr. REED. No; there was no date mentioned. He asked me——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator——

Mr. REED. If it is to be done, it is all right; only you will not get any unanimous consent——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If there was any misunderstanding about that at all, and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] suggests to me that a misunderstanding might have arisen as to what would take place, and as to what I intended to do, I will postpone making this motion for a cloture in order to avoid any question about good faith in the matter until Monday evening.

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I make a statement? I was present when the conversation took place between the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Missouri regarding this matter, and my understanding is that the Senator from Missouri expressed to the Senator from Oregon the desire that after the section under consideration should be disposed of he hoped that the Senator would not urge the adoption of the resolution providing for cloture for a day or two at least. The Senator from Missouri, as I understood him, hoped, after a day or two's trial, the bill would either be passed or an agreement on a day to vote could be reached.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not propose to rest under the imputation of violating any agreement that I made here, whether express or implied, and in order to avoid any question about it I will withdraw the motion until Monday evening, notwithstanding the fact that the official record shows I made no such agreement, but quite the contrary.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a minute?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I was going to ask that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a minute? I desire to say to the Senator that I have not taken up any time in this debate so far. There are some portions of the bill that relate particularly to the welfare and well-being of the wheat farmers of the country, very important and very vital, and I think that those provisions ought to be carefully considered before we pass the bill. The indications are now that unless it is stopped in some way the wheat market of the farmer is ruined for this year. I shall aim to point it out when the opportunity is given, and I simply ask a reasonable time next week to do it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to laying aside the unfinished business? The Chair hears none.

Mr. REED subsequently said: Mr. President, a few moments ago, when the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] filed, or started to file, a notice of cloture, I objected and raised the point that the Senator from Oregon had promised not to introduce the cloture resolution until some time next week. The Senator from Oregon stated that that was not his recollection, and I disputed his recollection. I find on an examination of the RECORD that the Senator from Oregon was right, and that I was wrong, and I want to make my statement as public as I can in order to do justice to him. Under the colloquy that occurred between the Senator from Oregon and myself the Senator from Oregon is at perfect liberty to file his cloture resolution if he so desires.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I am not particular about doing it this evening. It may be that we can get along faster with the bill on Monday, and I will let the matter go over until Monday afternoon, and then, if necessary, I will present it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I have a joint resolution in charge which is an emergency measure. It has been favorably reported by the Committee on Mines and Mining. It provides for a suspension of assessment work on mines. I will ask for a present consideration. The committee has had it under advisement for a month or more. It is a short measure. It was unanimously reported by the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi will state it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Regarding the understanding between the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Oregon, I had forgotten what was said for the RECORD, but I heard the conversation between those two gentlemen privately, and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] was also present. My understanding was that the Senator from Oregon agreed with the Senator from Missouri that he would not press the adoption of cloture until he discovered whether or not the matter could be disposed of promptly one day early next week.

That was my understanding. While I am on my feet I desire to say that I hope for a speedy passage of this bill. I have signed the petition for cloture, and should like to see it invoked, if necessary, to bring about the early passage of the measure. I made the suggestion a moment ago to the Senator from Oregon, not for the purpose of delaying action on the bill but because I knew the Senator from Oregon would not under any circumstances break his promise, and I was also convinced that the Senator from Missouri would not want him to do so. Nor would the Senator from Missouri ask or contend for anything that he was not entitled to. It was for that reason that I went to the Senator from Oregon and called his attention to what I thought was the agreement or understanding between the two Senators. My office in the matter was as a friend to both parties, and my suggestion was offered to prevent a misunderstanding between honorable gentlemen.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution named by him?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to have it read, Mr. President.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I can explain it very quickly.

Mr. KENYON. I am going to object to doing business in this way. I object to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE-COMMERCE ACT.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2356) to amend the act to regulate commerce as amended.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. NEWLANDS, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, and Mr. CUMMINS conferees on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of the Woman's Suffrage Association of Connecticut, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution granting the right of suffrage to women, which was referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

He also presented a petition of the Connecticut Chapter of the Daughters of Founders and Patriots of America, praying for the enactment of legislation to protect the morals of soldiers and prohibit vice at Army posts, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Chautauqua Union of New Haven and the Young Men's Christian Association of Ansonia, in the State of Connecticut, praying for national prohibition, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Bridgeport, Hartford, and New Britain, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against national prohibition, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the Committee of Food Supply of Connecticut and of sundry citizens of Elliott, Conn., praying for the passage of the so-called food-control bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a petition of the congregation of the Shiloh Baptist Church, of Washington, D. C., praying for the adoption of the prohibition section of the so-called food-control bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the Woman's Methodist Missionary Society, of Aspermont; of the Woman's Missionary Society, of Naples; of the Home Missionary Society, of Newton; of the Hall County Medical Society; and of sundry citizens of Beeville, all in the State of Texas, praying for national prohibition, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Sylvester, of the Woman's Missionary Society, of Sweetwater; of the Wesley Methodist Church, of Greenville; and of the Woman's Missionary Societies of Terrell, Hermleigh, Andrews, Caldwell, Snyden, Wolfe City, Big Springs, Dallas, Bellevue, and Hempstead, all in the State of Texas, praying for the prohibition and opposing the taxing of the liquor business as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KNOX presented petitions of sundry citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I present a communication, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the communication was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MARYLAND STATE HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY,
Ashton, Md., July 2, 1917.

Hon. JOHN WALTER SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: The Society of Friends at its quarterly meeting held at Sandy Spring June 12, 1917, pursuant of its time-honored stand against the manufacture, sale, or use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, desires that your best efforts be used to bring about national prohibition to the fullest degree.

SAMUEL P. THOMAS, Clerk.
MARIANA S. MILLER.

The Enterprise Farmers' Club, of Montgomery County, at its regular meeting June 30, 1917, sends the same prayer.

SAMUEL P. THOMAS, Secretary.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented petitions of the congregation of the Moore Memorial Methodist Church, of Winona, and of the Woman's Missionary Society of Okolona, in the State of Mississippi, remonstrating against the taxing and favoring the prohibition of the liquor business as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PHELAN presented a resolution adopted by the directors of the Napa County Farm Bureau, of Napa, Cal., favoring the establishment of a minimum price for staple farm products, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MYERS presented a resolution adopted by the American Society of Equity, of Big Sandy, Mont., relative to the minimum price of wheat, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Geraldine, Mont., praying for national prohibition, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Flathead County, Mont., praying for the enactment of legislation authorizing an examination of the outlet of Flathead Lake, with a view of controlling the waters of said like, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PAGE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Johnson, Vt., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the manufacturing of all intoxicating liquors, including beer and wine, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland presented petitions of Baraca Class of Union Square Methodist Episcopal Sunday School, Baltimore; Men's Bible Class of North Avenue United Presbyterian Church, Baltimore; Evergreen Christian Endeavor Society, Baltimore; Franklin Street Memorial United Brethren Church, Baltimore; Harford County Christian Endeavor Union, Havre de Grace; Churchville Presbyterian Church; Methodist Church, Dunkirk, all in the State of Maryland, praying for the prohibition of manufacture and sale of liquors and the conservation of food products, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Cumberland, Hagerstown, Frostburg, Baltimore, Relay, Rising Sun, Rowlandsville, Liberty Grove, New Valley, Pilot, Laytonsville, Etchison, Damascus, Cedar Grove, Woodfield, all in the State of Maryland, praying for the prohibition of manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors and the conservation of food products, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Md., remonstrating against the adoption of an amendment to the so-called food bill to prohibit the withdrawal of spirits from bond, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I send to the desk a telegram and ask to have it printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SAN ANTONIO, TEX., July 6, 1917.

Senator MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Washington, D. C.:

Texas State Council of Defense adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas in the food-control bill now before Congress it is being attempted to fix the price of cotton; and

"Whereas your committee is of the opinion that to regulate or attempt at this time to fix the price of cotton would be most unfair and disastrous to the South for the reason that this is the most costly crop ever produced, and for the further reason that all farming implements and necessities were purchased prior to any attempt to fix prices on these articles by our Congress; and

"Whereas such price fixing will at this time place the cotton growers at the mercy of the domestic and foreign cotton-goods manufacturers, causing the farmer to face a nightmare and bankruptcy which overtook him in 1914; and

"Whereas the exigencies of this war do not call for any legislation touching price fixing as to cotton and not being an administrative measure: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the secretary of this council be requested to wire our Senators and Representatives to oppose any legislation fixing cotton prices at this time."

Which they request you to lay before the United States Senate and call it to the attention of the Texas delegation in Congress.

J. F. CARL,
Secretary Texas State Council of Defense.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I ask to have printed in the RECORD, without reading, a telegram from the Board of Trade of Yazoo City, Miss.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

YAZOO CITY, MISS., July 5, 1917.

JAMES K. VARDAMAN,
Care United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Whereas the action of the United States Senate having cotton placed under the food-control bill and the attempts of Lord Northcliffe, the head of the British mission in the United States, to influence the Agricultural Department of the United States to have the American cotton exchanges coordinate trading to conform with the Liverpool exchange, which practically eliminates active trading, with the avowed purpose of lowering the price of cotton, thereby placing the southern cotton farmer at the mercy of the shipper of the world, is against the interest of the entire South. Therefore we earnestly protest against such action by Congress, and hereby urge our Senators and Congressmen to do everything in their power to defeat such action.

YAZOO CITY COTTON EXCHANGE,
A. S. GARDNER, President.
W. T. PRIESTLEY, Secretary.

Mr. WARREN. I have a telegram which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KOOI, WYO., July 6, 1917.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Senate Office, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

According to the Billings Gazette, July 5, Senator WALSH, in hearing before Public Lands Committee, advocates opening of public lands to reduce the price of coal, and submits letter from C. O. Meyer, manager Billings Utility Co., which are in line with facts. More coal mines in a district where production is far in excess of demand spells disaster for the Sheridan fields. What we want is more railroad cars and prices will regulate themselves. Mines in this district now working one-third to one-half time account car shortage.

PETER KOOI.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a telegram from Memphis, Tenn., dated July 5, signed by the president of the Saunders Grocery Co., Clarence Saunders, referring to business transactions which I think are very important. I will not take time to read the telegram, but I ask to have it printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMPHIS, TENN., July 5, 1917.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Member Senate Committee on Commerce, Washington, D. C.:

We are wholesale grocers dealing in a general line of food products, selling direct to the retail trade. Prior to April 1 we had in our stock a quantity of Octagon soap. Before we had sold out this particular lot of Octagon soap Colgate & Co., of New York City, who are the manufacturers and distributors of this particular brand of soap, advised us of an advance in price, naming us a revised jobbing cost price and a revised retail selling price, which retail selling price they requested that we adhere to strictly, even on the stock that we had in our warehouse and which was bought before the advance in price. We quote from their letter, which quotation is as follows: "It is understood that the retail prices are to apply to jobbers' present stock as well as to future purchases. We believe it is to the best interests of all concerned to adhere to the above selling prices and we will consider those disregarding them undesirable customers." We direct your attention in particular to the two words found in the first sentence which we designate as "present stock," which clearly indicated the desire of Colgate & Co. that we take for ourselves an extra profit on what stock of soap we had on hand at that time by advancing the price on same in conformity with their notification of such advance. Had we done this we would have received more than a legitimate profit on that particular lot of soap; also had we advanced the price on that particular lot of soap, the retailer having had to pay such an advance, would necessarily have been compelled to have added to his retail price that he might have maintained his regular margin of profit. We refused to advance our price on Octagon soap until we had disposed of the stock we had on hand. We were notified by the personal representative, Mr. Roy Freeman, of Colgate & Co. that we would henceforth be considered undesirable customers, "for the reason that we had failed to put into effect immediately an advance in our reselling price on Octagon soap. We were further notified by Mr. Roy Freeman, of Colgate & Co., that he had no option whatever in the matter and was acting under orders from headquarters in notifying us that we would not receive any further shipments of soap from Colgate & Co. Two words in the last sentence of the quotation that has been referred to as being part of Colgate & Co.'s letter in which they notified us of the advanced price we call special attention to. Those words are "undesirable customers." The preceding portion of that sentence explains on what grounds wholesale grocers will be considered by Colgate & Co. as undesirable customers. We disregarded the notice of Mr. Roy Freeman, acting for Colgate & Co., that we would not receive any more Octagon soap, and we submitted on the last day of March to Colgate & Co. an order for another carload of Octagon soap and washing powder. We received no definite word directly from Colgate & Co. until we had sent them a telegram under date of April 20, this reading as follows: "When are you going to ship our car of soap? Answer." Seven days later, and which was under date of April 27, we received in answer to our telegram of April 20 a telegram, signed Colgate & Co., reading as follows: "Answer your wire. Have been forced to consider your account undesirable." We have not yet received the car of Octagon soap that we ordered from Colgate & Co. The purpose of this telegram is to present for your consideration some vital trade facts in your avowed endeavor to restrain speculation and exorbitant profits that you may be advised of the high-handed methods that are in practice by the various manufacturers of the country.

Much talk has been made about the price of wheat; much talk has been made about controlling the price of cotton; much talk has been made about controlling other products, but nowhere have we seen any talk about controlling the manufacturer. Will it be fair that the man who raises cotton, that the man who produces other everyday essentials of food be told by positive law what he shall do and what he shall not do and allow the manufacturers of the country who deal in soap necessary for cleanliness, even if it can not be eaten, and the manufacturers of other items just as necessary, we ask again, will it be fair to allow these manufacturers to tell us as wholesale grocers or others who may be in the same line of business what price we and they shall obtain in the resale price of their products? If we have not got a law now that will make it possible for a wholesale grocer or a retail merchant to so conduct his business as will afford the consuming public the lowest possible price that can be effected by up-to-date methods and close scrutiny of all details, won't it be possible, in the consideration of the food bill that is now before Congress, that there be incorporated in that bill such provision as will make it impossible for a manufacturer to be so high handed in his methods as will allow him to control the wholesale grocers' resale price and the retailers' price down to the consumer? Is the manufacturer to be the mighty lord of our country, while everybody else in every walk of life makes sacrifices and gives up part of his heretofore freedom? Patriotism, we believe, should dwell in the manufacturer's office as well as in the most humble place of the wholesale grocer and the retail merchant, and certainly if a wholesale grocer pays a manufacturer the price that he asks for his goods, such a wholesale grocer most assuredly should have the protection of the law in naming his own price, even if the law does not now give him the right to have such protection in his rights of free merchandising as will make it a crime for a manufacturer to dictate to a wholesaler grocer or to a retail merchant what profit he shall charge to him who may buy from him. The writer of this telegram can furnish data upon data showing the injustice, showing the domineering spirit that prevails in manufacturing circles as it concerns those who buy from the said manufacturers. The writer can show that the firm of which he is president is conducting practically the largest wholesale grocery business in Memphis; he can show that this is being done at an overhead expense account of approximately 4 per cent out of our sales less than similar institutions. Is it patriotism that we keep this extra 4 per cent, or is it not a higher order of patriotism that we be allowed under the law by its protection to pass this saving of 4 per cent on through the retailer's hands down to the consumer? We have been forced ever since we have been in business by the browbeating of various manufacturers to exact of the retailer a higher per cent of profit than was necessary for us to show satisfactory earning power. But what could we do except to submit to the domination of the manufacturer when he stood with a stick drawn at our heads with the warning that if we didn't do like he said to do we could not buy any more goods from him? What would it have booted us had we acted stubborn and sold goods at a margin of profit which we could have afforded to have sold them? Had we not been able to have received any further goods we would have been out of business and the manufacturer would still be in with a shouldering applause of those wholesale grocers who have a top-heavy expense account. The writer of this telegram will appear before any committee in Washington at his own expense and elucidate the facts that have been broadly touched upon in the foregoing truth. He will be glad to render such a service to the consumers of the country. Should it be desired that the writer appear before any committee and give any further information, a telegram indicating such desire will receive personal response of the writer at Washington at the appointed time.

SAUNDERS-BLACKBURN GROCERY CO.,
By CLARENCE SAUNDERS, President.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have a telegram from a wholesale house in Tennessee. I am informed by both Senators from that State that the institution is a large and reliable one. The telegram gives some startling information as to the methods that are being taken not only to boost prices of food but to coerce dealers into raising prices. In my judgment, it discloses facts which are absolutely violative of the antitrust laws of this country, and I commend the telegram to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry having in charge this bill, and I commend its consideration to the Department of Justice.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is that telegram from the Saunders-Blackburn Grocery Co.?

Mr. REED. It is; and if the Senator has presented a similar telegram, I will withdraw my request.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is the same telegram, I think, as the one just presented by me; and while I quite agree with what the Senator from Missouri says with reference to it, I hardly think it ought to be printed again in the RECORD.

Mr. REED. I learn that the Senator from Florida has placed in the RECORD the same telegram as the one offered by me. I did not know it had been sent to other Senators. I withdraw the telegram, but will let my remarks apply to the telegram submitted by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I present a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Florida, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate memorial No. 1.

Senate memorial requesting Congress to use their efforts to have the port of St. Andrews properly fortified against the enemies of the United States.

Whereas the port of St. Andrews and vicinity have a population of over 10,000, and located there are great milling plants, one of which is known as the German-American Lumber Co., and practically owned by German capital; and

Whereas the said port has a depth of 23 feet over the entrance bar, sufficient to permit large hostile men-of-war to enter; and

Whereas the greatest portion of the population are within 5 miles of deep water outside in the Gulf of Mexico and in easy gun range of even the smaller war vessels: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That our Representatives in Congress be and are hereby respectfully requested and urged to exercise every honorable means at once to have Congress request the proper authorities to take immediate steps for the protection of the said port of St. Andrews by proper fortifications upon the lands that are reserved by the United States Government at the entrance to the said harbor; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be requested to mail each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress under his seal a copy of these resolutions.

Approved, April 19, 1917.

—

House memorial 1.

To memorialize the Congress of the United States to pass and submit an amendment of the Constitution of the United States to the several States proposing nation-wide prohibition of the manufacture, sale, barter, or exchange of all alcoholic or intoxicating liquors or beverages.

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to pass and submit an amendment of the Constitution of the United States to the several States proposing nation-wide prohibition of the manufacture, sale, barter, or exchange of all alcoholic or intoxicating liquors or beverages.

Be it further resolved, That the Florida delegation in Congress be, and it is hereby, requested to use all honorable means to bring about the passage of this amendment.

Be it further resolved, That the secretary of state be instructed to mail a copy of this resolution to each of the Florida Senators and Representatives in Congress of the United States.

Approved April 20, 1917.

—

House memorial 2.

A memorial to the Congress of the United States, to be presented by and through the congressional delegation from the State of Florida at Washington, D. C., requesting that the reservation known as the Choctawhatchee Reservation in West Florida be withdrawn and that the land therein be restored to homestead entry, and that all citizens be allowed to make homestead entry thereon in compliance with the laws of the United States.

Whereas the Choctawhatchee Reservation, which is composed of land that is especially suitable for cultivation for all kinds of agricultural purposes; and

Whereas, by reason of the topographical condition of the land, it is not desirable as a forest reserve; and

Whereas there are a large number of homestead settlers interspersed throughout the reserve who are deprived of privileges that they would otherwise receive in the way of education and other useful and beneficial training by reason of the isolation brought about by the determination of the United States authority to set apart this land as a reserve; and

Whereas the people of the whole western section of the State desire that the land should be opened to homestead entries: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, First, that our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States be, and they are, earnestly requested to present this memorial to the Congress of the United States and to use every effort to induce Congress to withdraw the Choctawhatchee Reservation and cause the land therein that has not already been homesteaded made subject to homestead entry under the laws of the United States now in force relating to and governing the entry of land for homestead purposes.

Resolved further, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senators and Members of Congress of the United States certified copies of this resolution under the great seal of the State.

Approved May 15, 1917.

—

House memorial 3.

A memorial to memorialize the Congress of the United States to place into effect the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors during the existence of the present state of war between the United States and the Imperial German Government.

Whereas this Nation is now facing a crisis in the grain supply and it is vitally necessary that steps be taken to conserve every bushel of grain possible, so that it may be used for the greatest benefit of our people and allies for food. And quoting from statistics carefully gathered it has been estimated that the war prohibition measure would save enough grain alone to make a loaf of bread a day for each of 11,000,000 fighting men. This alone is a convincing argument of the vast benefits that would accrue from putting grain into the use of furnishing food when it is going to be so badly needed: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida in biennial session assembled, That we memorialize the Congress of the United States to prohibit the manufacture of intoxicating liquors or beverages during the war now being waged against the Imperial German Government.

When we consider the greatly increased price the people of this country will have to pay for bread, to say nothing of the vast amount that will be wasted in the consumption of these alcoholic drinks, it is a question as to whether there would be any actual net revenue derived from the taxes on alcoholic drinks. Viewing the question, therefore, from every standpoint of public good, and our vital needs, there is not a single argument against the war prohibition measure, while there are many sound, economic, and beneficial reasons in its favor.

In these times it is the duty of our national legislators to the people to conserve wherever possible the country's food supply, and where there is found such a tremendous wastage in the manufacture of products not needed, it is our duty to stop this wastage and allow the grain to be diverted to food purposes; be it further

Resolved, That our Representatives in the Congress be respectfully requested to use all honorable means to bring about this result; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state shall furnish each of our Representatives with a copy of this memorial.

Approved May 21, 1917.

—

House memorial 4.

To memorialize the Congress of the United States to impose graduated income taxes; to regulate profits on war supplies and services, including transportation, and to enact legislation regulating profits on necessities of life.

Whereas many hundreds of thousands of American citizens are to be conscripted to fight the war of our country;

Whereas the labor of our country is called upon to exert its highest and most efficient efforts to feed and maintain our soldiers and people, as well as our allies;

Whereas our soldiers and laborers must have a proper supply of wholesome food and other necessities to perform the highest and most efficient service;

Whereas any excess profits by persons, firms, or corporations is unpatriotic and will operate to the great disadvantage of the interests of the people of these United States;

Whereas justice in taxation does not mean equality in the amount of money paid in, but means equality in the effect of the tax upon the people who pay it and equality upon the protection and promotion of the interests taxed;

Whereas large incomes spent frivolously set an example that is detrimental to the best interest of the country in the present crisis and has a tendency to withdraw labor from necessary fields: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida in biennial session assembled, That we memorialize Congress—

To conscript dollars as well as men through the imposition of large graduated income taxes that will totally absorb all incomes over $100,000 per annum until all war debts and bonds are paid.

To enact laws that will compel the furnishing of war supplies or war service, including transportation, at a reasonable profit, same to be fixed by Congress.

That Congress enact legislation preventing excessive profits on the necessities of life, enabling them to reach the consumer from the producer at a reasonable profit during the war.

That our Representatives in Congress be respectfully requested to use all honorable means to bring about these results.

And that the secretary of state shall furnish each of our Representatives a copy of this memorial.

Approved May 28, 1917.

—

House memorial 5.

A memorial to the Congress of the United States of America asking that it adopt the Old Spanish Trail Highway—the Ocean-to-Ocean, Gulf-Coast Highway—from Miami and Tampa, Fla., to Los Angeles, Cal., as a national military highway—to regrade, widen the same, and erect and maintain the bridges thereon where said highway crosses navigable streams; to use Federal convict labor and obtain the use of State convicts in the construction of said military highway from those States only through which said highway passes.

Whereas a state of war now exists between this Government and a foreign nation; and

Whereas along the southern Gulf Coast States there are very few forts or other protection against invasion by a foreign army; and

Whereas there is more seacoast unprotected in said section than in any other part of our country; and

Whereas there are few railroad facilities in said section suitable for the transportation of troops from one coast of the United States to the other and the local dirt roads are not passable by heavy motor-driven trucks sufficiently large to carry heavy guns from one section to another; and

Whereas we believe it to be one of the most important assets in time of warfare and one of the most lasting in time of peace to have said military highway—as a preparedness measure—for internal protection of our homes against foreign invasion: Be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Congress of the United States be and hereby is memorialized to make such appropriations and to pass such legislation as to empower the Government to take over the highway known as the Old Spanish Trail Highway from Miami and Tampa, Fla., through the Gulf Coast States to California; to take charge of able-bodied male State convicts in Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and California, and to place also to work on said road all able-bodied male Federal convicts now in prison who were sentenced from said States, and to put said work in operation at once, and to push the same to a speedy completion.

Resolved further, That the Florida Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to place this important matter before their representative body for immediate action; and that a copy of this resolution be sent to each Representative from Florida.

Approved May 26, 1917.

—

Senate concurrent resolution 5.

Senate concurrent resolution requesting the War Department to guard the bridges and terminals of the C. H. & N. Railroad.

Whereas the harbor of Bocagrande, Fla., is the most southern deep-water harbor, except Key West, in the United States; and

Whereas the facilities for loading and discharging large cargoes at said harbor may become of great value to the United States Government during the present war with Germany; and

Whereas the railroad terminals, including the bridges across the Myakka River and Gasparilla Pass are exposed to destruction by hostile enemies: Therefore, be it

Resolved (the house concurring), That the War Department at Washington be urged to take immediate steps to properly safeguard the railroad terminals and bridges above mentioned.

Approved April 21, 1917.

Senate concurrent resolution 13.

Be it enacted by the senate (the house concurring), That our Senators and Representatives at Washington be requested and instructed to use all honorable means to have New Smyrna, Volusia County, Fla., made a port of entry.

That the secretary of state is hereby instructed to furnish each of our Senators and Representatives at Washington with a copy of this concurrent resolution.

—

Senate concurrent resolution 16.

Whereas the official map of 1916, issued by the United States Land Office at Washington, does Florida injustice by representing the south end of the State to be water and swamp under the general title of "The Everglades," with Lake Okeechobee as a part of it, showing but a narrow strip of Dade, Broward, and Palm Beach Counties as being dry land and habitable, and the same appearance of water applying in full to Monroe County and in part of Lee, De Soto, Osceola, and the new county of Okeechobee; and

Whereas the impression this fact makes is seen in a statement appearing in connection with a map printed recently in Viereck's Weekly, of New York City, in connection with the following description of Florida: "The map accompanying should be of interest to every reader of Viereck's Weekly. It is a photographic reproduction of the large map which hangs in our office. Each tiny dot represents a city, town, or village where we have subscribers. You may notice that in the State of Florida there are not many dots; but as Florida is largely covered by the Everglades (great swamps inhabited only by the picturesque Seminole Indians) our agents have had considerable difficulty in doing business there." And

Whereas Northern papers are regularly printing similar stories, as for example a recent interview in the Daily Globe, of Atchison, Kans., with a man who spent the past winter in Dade County—on the narrow white strip down as land in the Government map—and who said: "Florida hasn't a thing except climate. In the south half of the State you have to blast a hole in the rock to plant an orange tree. I couldn't find any man who owns orange or grapefruit groves who isn't anxious to sell. Rattlesnakes are so thick that when inhabitants of the town go out at night they have to have torchlights on the end of their canes, or carry flash-lights to frighten snakes off the sidewalks. The snakes are big rattlers, 6 to 10 feet long, and men, women, and children have to wear leggins or boots." And

Whereas the author of this libel on Florida can point to the Government map to verify his claim that it is swamp and water and accordingly the abode of reptiles and poisonous insects; and

Whereas a recent book entitled "What About Florida?" in a chapter devoted to "The Everglades" declares, among other things, that "Because the Seminoles live on the edge of the Everglades is not to be taken as the best evidence that other people can thrive there. Even with drainage, the territory is low, the saw grass is high, the mosquitoes physically gigantic in size, the air laden with noxious vapors at times, the atmosphere heavy and inert, and there is everything enervating calculated to depress and not have that exhilarating influence that one feels in a higher altitude or in a northern climate. Health and living conditions are of paramount importance. It is impossible to conceive that this will ever be satisfactory in this part of Florida"; and

Whereas the author of this book can point to the Government land map to verify his claim that it is water and swamp, regardless of the fact that there are wide areas of dry prairies and woodlands over which automobiles can travel in any direction without difficulty; and

Whereas it is not necessary to go north to find Florida discredited, as not long ago a Georgia paper said there was "nothing in Florida except oranges and sick Yankees"; and

Whereas Florida gets it coming and going, through the deceptive methods of certain land companies, followed by victims indulging in wholesale condemnation and misrepresentation, and now the Federal Government's map spreads a swamp over the south part of the State, which can be pointed to as evidence that that part of Florida is not habitable; and

Whereas the State has no publication to enumerate her resources and no specimens of resources to illustrate and support her claims to greatness, but depends upon private enterprises, which in some cases have worked incalculable injury; and

Whereas some of the fraternal societies have not entered the State because of a belief in her unhealthfulness; and

Whereas Dr. Wilson, founder of the Royal Arcanum, one of the great fraternal societies of the North, is now a resident of Florida, and recently said that "the idea is widespread that Florida is unhealthy, but by coming here I find that Florida is one of the healthiest States in the Union. I came here in my 79th year to live out the balance of my life, and you can take it from me that I now wouldn't care to live anywhere else, and it will be my pleasure to urge others to come. I stayed away only because I heard too many conflicting stories about the State": Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of Florida authorize the preparation, printing, and circulation of a handbook to accurately and fully describe the advantages of the State, and also collect specimens of the natural and economic products of the State for display at fairs and expositions to convince visitors that there is more in our State than swamps, insects, and reptiles; and further be it

Resolved by the Legislature of Florida, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to take the necessary steps to have forthcoming issues of the United States Land Office map, and any other misleading maps issued by the Government, so corrected as to at least show that Lake Okeechobee is not surrounded by water.

Approved May 24, 1917.

—

House resolution 20.

Whereas the Ladies' Civic League of Bushnell, Fla., has organized a movement for and has secured the necessary land to establish a memorial park and monument at or near the scene of Dade's massacre in Sumter County, Fla.; and

Whereas the scene of Dade's massacre is one of the historical points of this State and should be marked by such fitting memorial; and
Whereas there has been introduced in the Congress of the United States of America a bill making appropriation for such memorial: Be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the movement on the part of the Ladies' Civic League of Bushnell, Sumter County, Fla., to establish a memorial park and monument at or near the town of Bushnell in the said county of Sumter for the purpose of marking and preserving the historic spot where Maj. Dade and his men were massacred during the late Indian war, be, and the same is hereby, approved; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state is hereby authorized and requested to send a copy of this resolution to Hon. H. J. DRANE, at Lakeland, Fla., representing the first congressional district of this State; a copy to each of our United States Senators, Hon. PARK TRAMMELL and Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER; and a copy to the Ladies' Civic League at Bushnell, Fla.

Approved May 21, 1917.

—

House concurrent resolution 15.

Whereas the improvement of waterways of this country is one of the most vital needs of the Nation for the development of its commerce, both in peace and in time of war; and
Whereas at this particular time the development of our waterways is one of the most important pieces of work that the Federal Government could undertake; and
Whereas the rivers and harbors bill, which failed to pass during the last session of Congress, was the most constructive piece of legislation ever attempted along this line, and its failure to pass meant that millions of dollars' worth of work would be left uncompleted at the end of the fiscal year, which would necessitate additional expense in taking the work up anew when appropriations are again made: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That our Representatives in Congress be urged to use every effort to have a bill in substance similar to the one drafted at the last session of Congress, and passed by the House of Representatives, enacted into law at this special session of the Sixty-fifth Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to our Representatives in Congress and to the Chief of Engineers, Washington.

—

STATE OF FLORIDA,
Office of Secretary of State, ss:

I, H. Clay Crawford, secretary of State of the State of Florida, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of senate memorial No. 1 and house memorials Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and senate concurrent resolutions Nos. 5, 13, 16, and house resolutions Nos. 15 and 20, passed by the Legislature of Florida, session of 1917, and filed in this office.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State of Florida, at Tallahassee, the capital, this the 20th day of June, A. D. 1917.

[SEAL.] H. CLAY CRAWFORD,
Secretary of State.

—

TALLAHASSEE, FLA., June 20, 1917.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: I inclose herewith copies of memorials and resolutions passed by the legislature of 1917.

Yours, very truly,

H. CLAY CRAWFORD,
Secretary of State.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a petition of the congregation of the First Congregational Church of St. Petersburg, Fla., praying for national prohibition during the war, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GRONNA. I present several telegrams and ask that they be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FARGO, N. DAK., July 7, 1917.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.:

We earnestly protest against the eliminating of beer and wine from the food-control bill. We want our grain conserved for food, and not converted into intoxicants which would destroy our boys that we are sending to the front. Please do all in your power for the bill.

Prof. G. R. Vowles, Fargo College; J. D. Penhiter, B. G. Tenneson, August Hanson, Christ Sydness, Rev. Wuffestark, Rev. G. A. Schoberg, Rev. A. Mehus, Prof. Waldron, Rev. E. O. McCracken, H. C. Thomsen, J. W. Jones, M. V. Larson, S. J. Syverson, O. S. Hadland, V. J. Baldwin, J. M. Johnson, Oscar Herrier, Rev. E. Bernstson; J. W. Riley, superintendent of schools; H. O. Lund, James Johnson, G. F. Hoff, E. G. Hedland, A. T. Nestern, George Martinson, Fred Acton, A. J. Westerdale, C. D. Hedland, Otto Comes, Arthur Moer, O. T. Korsund, H. H. Vidger.

—

BARTLETT, N. DAK., July 7, 1917.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.:

We the undersigned urgently request you to do all in your power to prevent the eliminating of wine and beer from the food-control bill.

G. W. WHITINER, C. E. WEBER.
THOMAS HYDE, B. W. NORTROP.
ALFRED SOHLIN, H. E. ADLER.
J. C. JOHNSON, F. B. FREEBERG.
JOE CLARK, A. M. ENNEY.

NEW ROCKFORD, N. DAK., July 6, 1917.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.:

We protest against the elimination of the wine and beer clause in food-control bill.

Twenty-two members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and Hitchcock, Goss, Rodenberg, Davidson, Hayes, Rager, Maxwell, Manley, Reynolds, Johnson, Terpening, Hudson, Maddux, Crawford, Coe, Perry, Adams, Carson, Reed, Ritchie, Biggs, Mahin, and Whitcome.

—

JAMESTOWN, N. DAK., July 6, 1917.

Senator A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: We the undersigned, representing the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Jamestown, protest against the eliminating of wine and beer from the food-control bill. We urge you to use your influence against same.

Yours for victory,

Mrs. M. S. RILEY,
Mrs. P. W. EDDY.
Mrs. W. E. BOISE.
Mrs. FRED WANNER.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD without reading a letter concerning the food production bill now in conference.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

—

NEW YORK STATE COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE,
Ithaca, N. Y., July 6, 1917.

Hon. THOMAS P. GORE,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am writing you concerning the Lever food-supply bill, H. R. 4188, Calendar No. 59, which carries appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for cooperative work between the Department of Agriculture and the States. Our immediate interest is in the paragraph carrying the appropriation of $4,348,400 "for increasing food production and eliminating waste and promoting conservation of food by educational and demonstrational methods through county, district, and urban agents and others." You undoubtedly know that in anticipation of the passage of this act officials of the Department of Agriculture wrote to the various States indicating expected apportionments to each State for cooperative work in agricultural and home economics county agent work. For New York State the original apportionments were indicated as follows: For county agent work, $59,300; for women's county agents, $50,500; for home economics in cities, $53,400. This was based on the original request of five and one-half millions for the above item. When Congress reduced this amount to $4,348,400, on which we understand both Houses agreed, and the item seemed, therefore, to be assured, we were informed that, according to the redistribution of funds, the following items would very probably be available for work in this State: For county agent work, $47,000; for women's county agents, $44,700; for home economics in cities, $20,000. In order that these funds might be of any use whatever this season, it was necessary for us to make our plans immediately, as the growing and preserving season is now under way. Because of the seeming certainty that these funds would be available, we have drawn up a State program in cooperation with the New York State food-supply commission for the placing of food-conservation agents and of additional agricultural agents in counties throughout the State. Our State council of defense, of which the governor is chairman, has approved our budget, showing the joint State and Federal funds. Furthermore, we have taken steps in nearly all of the counties of the State and in the larger cities to perfect organizations so as to place the agents immediately upon the receipt of the funds. Other State organizations throughout the State have adapted their plans to our program, and it will mean a disastrous disturbance of the entire food-conservation program in this State if these funds are not forthcoming and if they are not received soon. The situation is extremely acute, in view of the fact that communities throughout the State are insisting on having service. It would seem impossible that we should have to inform people throughout the State that this work can now not be done because of failure of Congress to make the appropriations available.

Furthermore, in view of the assurances that the funds would be forthcoming, we have held a special training school of two weeks in length to give the final preparation to the first lot of food conservation agents who are to go out, and we have announced a second training conference of similar length for the remaining number.

I realize that you are doing all that you can to further this legislation. I thought it might be helpful if you knew how much the States were depending upon this legislation, and the fact that entire State programs are being jeopardized by the delay in obtaining the funds. If there are other persons to whom this information should be sent we should be glad to write to such persons.

Yours, sincerely,

A. R. MANN.

THE COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

Mr. THOMPSON. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably without amendment Senate resolution No. 96, submitted by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] on the 6th instant.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. It simply authorizes an investigation.

Mr. KENYON. Let the resolution be read.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-fifth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee or any subcommittee thereof may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. UNDERWOOD:

A bill (S. 2617) authorizing the restoration of John T. Melvin, a lieutenant (junior grade), to the active list of the Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN:

A bill (S. 2618) to aid our Government in war against Germany by producing foodstuffs and to aid farmers and give employment to the unemployed and encourage agriculture; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. BRANDEGEE:

A bill (S. 2619) to reimburse the State of Connecticut for expenses incurred in protecting bridges over waterways on main railroad lines under direction of the commanding general Eastern Department; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PHELAN:

A bill (S. 2620) granting a pension to Arthur Johnson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 2621) granting an increase of pension to Francis Mathews (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 2622) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Galbraith (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 2623) defining the status of citizens of the United States who have entered the military or naval services of certain countries during the existing war in Europe; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2624) for the relief of occupants of certain premises within the naval station at Pensacola, Fla.; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. SMITH of Maryland:

A bill (S. 2625) for the relief of Mary J. Higgs; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

WAR REVENUE.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 4280) to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL DEFENSE.

Mr. WATSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1786) to amend certain sections of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

THE CENTER MARKET.

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 97), which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

Whereas the Government owns the Center Market, located between Seventh and Ninth Streets, near the Mall, in the District of Columbia, and it is imperative that foodstuffs be furnished to the people of the District free from excessive prices caused by speculation and middlemen: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia is hereby requested to investigate and report to the Senate upon the advisability of taking over the Center Market, putting it into the hands of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and authorizing them to either furnish the use of the market free to parties who, under their supervision, will sell the products of the farm with a reasonable profit approved by the commissioners, or, if necessary, authorize the commission to purchase foodstuffs and furnish them to the people of the District at cost.

Resolved further, That if for any reason the Center Market can not be used by the Government, then said committee is requested to consider and report to the Senate upon the advisability of some other action by the commissioners which may free the people of the District of Columbia from excessive charges for food products and supplies.

EMPLOYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. McKELLAR submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 98) which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-fifth Congress to send for books and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee or any subcommittee thereof may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

SPEECH OF SENATOR WALSH.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have here a copy of a speech delivered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] before the Bar Association of North Carolina on the question of the power given by Congress to the President in time of war. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHO IS AFRAID OF A DICTATOR?

[Delivered at Asheville, N. C., July 4, 1917.]

"In times of extraordinary peril to the Republic, generally in consequence of the exigencies of war, it was customary in ancient Rome to appoint a dictator who, for a brief period, never longer than six months, exercised supreme power. He was a temporary despot, armed with full authority to adopt what measures he thought expedient, without consulting the Senate, and to dispose of the lives and fortunes of the citizens without appeal.

"As an institution the dictatorship has generally been regarded as a restoration pro hac vice of the regal authority. The belief has been indulged that resort to it by the Romans amounted to a confession on their part that a republican form of government is unsuited to the stern necessity of a war involving the national life.

"The very name by which the official was designated, who thus exercised over his fellow citizens the power of life and death, has become odious. The most autocratic ruler of our times would resent being referred to as a dictator, though at one time the chief executive of some of the South American Republics assumed that title.

"Machiavelli considered the dictatorship, however, as one of the most essential features of the republican constitution of Rome, and one which contributed most to the greatness of the State. His views are thus paraphrased by a modern writer:

"Popular governments particularly need provision for prompt and efficient action in critical times, from the fact that the normal action of the administration, requiring cooperation as it does of many wills, is feeble and slow. If the constitution does not provide for the necessary concentration of authority, the constitution will be broken when the stress comes and the requisite action will be taken regardless of the fundamental law. Thus, however, a precedent will be created in a good cause which may later be followed in a bad. The Roman dictatorship, therefore, carefully limited as it was by well-defined methods of creation and termination, furnishes a model for all free governments.

"Macaulay was not able to dispel the suspicion with which anything emanating from the Florentine philosopher is quite universally regarded, yet an eminent American commentator upon political theories, ancient and modern, William A. Dunning, professor of political science in Columbia University, remarks concerning the sage reflections to which your attention has been invited that 'this judgment upon the necessity of dictatorial power in republics was as sound as it is unusual.'

"If it be true that to promote the success of the war the President is being invested with the sweeping authority with which a dictator was clothed, as some timorous souls and captious critics proclaim, it does not follow that there is any departure from the just principles upon which republican institutions rest nor that any violence is being done to the Constitution through which our liberties are made secure.

"It is certain that powers startlingly vast have been and are being conferred upon him, so extensive, as compared with those ordinarily exercised by the Chief Executive or even with those ever delegated any President, that a catalogue and review of the acts approved and bills under consideration by which the investiture has been or is to be accomplished can not fail to awake your interest. If the enumeration shall excite, I trust the discussion may allay, your alarm.

"1. By the Army reorganization act, approved June 9, 1916, the President is authorized in time of war or when war is imminent to order any individual or institution, having the facilities to comply, to furnish any supplies or equipment for the Army he may order, in preference to any other commitments, at a price to be named by him. In case of default he may seize and operate the plant.

"2. By the same act he is authorized to construct and operate a nitrate plant and to develop and install a hydroelectric system to furnish power necessary to the operation of such plant.

"3. By the Army appropriation bill approved August 29, 1916, the President was empowered in time of war to take possession, assume control, and utilize, in whole or in part, any railroad system for the movement of troops or for any other purpose connected with the emergency.

"4. By the Navy appropriation bill approved March 4, 1917, the President may, in time of war, command any person or corporation having the facilities to comply to produce for or deliver to the Government ships or any war material, prior commitments notwithstanding. In case of refusal he may seize and operate the shipyard or other plant controlled by the recusant.

"5. By the so-called espionage act approved June 15, 1917, the President may—

"(a) In case of war or threatened war, direct the seizure of any vessel in our waters, may remove the officers and men therefrom, put others in charge, and exclude from it any persons not specially authorized by him.

"(b) In time of war or national emergency, forbid anyone to enter upon or fly over any place in which anything is being prepared, constructed, or stored for the use of the Army or Navy.

"(c) During the present war, to forbid exportations except at such time or times and under such regulations and orders and subject to such limitations and exceptions as he may prescribe.

"6. By the act of May 12, 1917, the President was authorized to seize every enemy vessel in our ports and to operate the same.

"7. The selective-draft act does not require but authorizes the President to raise the great army which we are now assembling, and to devise and call into being much of the administrative machinery through which the additional troops are to be secured. It vested in him discretion to accept or reject Col. Roosevelt's offer to raise one or more divisions of volunteers, and gave him authority to exempt many classes at will from the draft and to make regulations to free military camps from the evils of easy access to saloons.

"8. A bill which has passed the Senate, generally referred to as the food-survey bill, authorizes the President at any time during the war to close grain exchanges which decline or neglect to purge their transactions of operations in futures.

"9. Another has passed the House which rests in the President full control, through rules and regulations to be promulgated by him, over the manufacture, shipment, sale, and distribution of high explosives.

"10. Another bill, which has received the sanction of both Houses, empowers the President during the war to direct that preference in shipment be given to any commodities the movement of which he may deem it wise to expedite.

"11. Food-control bills now under consideration in both Houses of Congress authorize the President during the war—

"(a) To license the importation, exportation, manufacture, storage, or distribution of food, feed, and fuel; to prescribe regulations governing the business of licensee, violations of which are punishable criminally.

"(b) To purchase such necessaries at a price to be fixed by him, or by proceedings in court if the owner is dissatisfied, and to sell them; and to require any person having storage facilities to supply the same for the keeping or preservation of any necessaries so purchased, compensation being made in like manner.

"(c) To requisition and take over any factory, mine, or other plant in which such necessaries may be manufactured, produced, prepared, or mined, similar provision being made for compensation.

"(d) To make regulations governing operations on boards of trade and grain exchanges, observance of such being assured by penal provisions.

"(e) To guarantee a minimum price for agricultural products.

"(f) To prohibit the use of foodstuffs in the production of beverages, alcoholic or nonalcoholic.

"The foregoing list is not exhaustive, but is sufficiently portentous.

"Of the necessity or wisdom of this legislation it is scarcely appropriate that much be here and now said. The history of the chapter of the espionage act authorizing the President to declare embargoes may move those to suspend judgment who might be disposed to be critical. By a very decisive vote the Senate substituted for the language of the bill giving to the President plenary power a restrictive amendment, offered by the senior Senator from Georgia, providing that whenever the President should determine that exports to any neutral country were finding their way to the enemy he might interdict shipments to such country. Thereafter Senator MARTIN, majority leader, moved a reconsideration of the vote, asking an executive session, and when the doors were again opened the Senate had restored and approved the language of the bill as it had been reported by the committee.

"Consideration of the power to enact legislation such as that referred to is more appropriate to the present occasion, however interesting might be a recital of the reasons urged for and against it or a justification from a standpoint of public policy of those who advocated it. It was quite generally assailed as violative of constitutional limitations in many of its features with vigor, ability, and persistence. And it must be admitted that the fate of much of it, when it shall ultimately be tried out in the courts, is involved in no little doubt. As a whole, it must be sustained, if it is to be sustained at all, as a legitimate exercise of the war power of Congress. Elaborate arguments appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in justification of the food-control bill, most of them the work of gentlemen not Members of either House, in which is advanced the view that that measure is warranted by the interstate-and-foreign-commerce clause of section 8 of Article I. But the contention is idle, as the bill is framed on no such theory. It contemplates an administration of all the food and fuel resources of the country, that part which never leaves the State in which it is produced as well as that which passes into interstate or foreign commerce. More in detail concerning that particular measure hereafter. It suffices for the present to say that if it can not be sustained under the war power it must fail. Jefferson declared that he had stretched the Constitution until it cracked to effect the Louisiana Purchase. Let us pursue the inquiry as to whether the fundamental law has been thus far unduly strained to win the war against Germany.

"The war power is vested in Congress through the following provisions of the Constitution. Congress shall have power—

"To declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water.

"To raise and support armies.

"To provide and maintain a Navy.

"To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces.

"To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions.

"To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia and for governng such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States.

"An obligation on the part of the Nation to wage war is implied in section 4 of Article IV, which provides that 'The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion, and on application of the legislature or of the executive (when the legislature can not be convened) against domestic violence.'

"It is equally implied in the last paragraph of section 10 of Article I, as follows:

"No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any duty of tonnage, keep troops or ships of war in time of peace, enter into any agreement or compact with another State or with a foreign power, or engage in war, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent danger as will not admit of delay.

"And the obligation is enforced by the inhibition of the first paragraph of the same section, as follows:

"No State shall enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation, (or) grant letters of marque and reprisal.

"Perhaps if no mention of the subject had been made in the Constitution at all, the power to defend itself by force of arms would be deduced from the fact that by that instrument a nation had been created. The right of self-preservation would be easily inferred. That the Nation, the Federal Government, was to wage war whenever resort to the arbitrament of arms became necessary or unavoidable is a necessary conclusion from the whole scheme of government designed by the framers of the Constitution. It accordingly made the President 'the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States and of the militia of the several States when called into actual service of the United States.'

"That this is a tremendous power which has been thus vested in Congress no one can doubt; that in the granting of it a wide field of legislation was opened to Congress must be recognized, a field the limits of which, so far as they can be scanned by the judicial eye, expands with the ever-increasing complexity of the life we call or once called civilized and the development of military science. It must be clear that it was intended that, so far as the necessities of the case required, any war in which the Republic might be engaged should be waged with all the power and the resources it could command, and that Congress must have been endowed with power to utilize them to the limit to bring the conflict to a speedy and successful issue.

"It could not have been considered that it would be necessary, and accordingly no authority was granted to effect any radical change in our system of government; but, short of that, it must have been the purpose of those who took from the States the power to wage war and lodged it in the National Government to endow that Government with all the authority necessary to bring a war in which it might engage to a successful conclusion, at least all such authority as had customarily been exercised by democratic governments to such an end and particularly by the Government of Great Britain, whose system was uppermost in the minds of the men who gave us our Constitution. Von Holst says that the clause which makes the President Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States invests him, as such, with all the power which the King of England enjoyed as the commander of the land and naval forces of the United Kingdom. Willoughby says, section 715:

"The constitutional power given to the United States to declare and wage war, whether foreign or civil, carries with it the authority to use all means calculated to weaken the enemy and to bring the struggle to a successful conclusion. When dealing with the enemy, all acts that are calculated to advance this end are legal. Indeed, the President in the exercise simply of his authority as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, may, unless prohibited by congressional statute, commit or authorize acts not warranted by commonly received principles of international law; and Congress may by law authorize measures which the courts must recognize as valid, even though they provide penalties not supported by the general usage of nations in the conduct of war. Thus during the Civil War in certain cases the provision by congressional statute for the confiscation of certain enemy property or land was enforced, though such confiscation was not in accordance with the general usage of foreign States.

"Even in dealing with its own loyal subjects, the power to wage war enables the Government to override in many particulars private rights which in time of peace are inviolable.

"The power to wage war carries with it the authority not only to bring it to a full conclusion but, after the cessation of active military operations, to take measures to provide against its renewal. As the court says in Stewart against Kahn: 'The measures to be taken in carrying on war and to suppress insurrection are not defined. The decision of all such questions rests wholly in the discretion of those to whom the substantial powers involved are confided by the Constitution.'

"The case referred to is found in Eleventh Wallace, 493.

"The power to wage war having been conferred upon Congress the further power is expressly granted by the last paragraph of section 8 of Article I of the Constitution to 'make all laws which shall be necessary or proper' to carry into execution such authority. What measure may be necessary or proper, in the language of the Supreme Court in the case referred to, rests wholly in the discretion of Congress. 'Let the end be legitimate,' Marshall said in McCulloch against Maryland, 'let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited, but consist with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional.' (4 Wheat., 421.)

"It is not necessarily fatal to an act of Congress passed pursuant to the war power that it curtails the rights of the citizen as they are ordinarily enjoyed in times of prosperous peace. Few of our rights are altogether unlimited, even those guaranteed by the first 10 amendments to the Constitution. Of these it was said in Robertson v. Baldwin (165 U. S., 275) that they were not—

"Intended to lay down any novel principles of government, but simply to embody certain guaranties and immunities which we had inherited from our English ancestors, and which had from time immemorial been subject to certain well-recognized exceptions arising from the necessities of the case. In incorporating these principles into the fundamental law there was no intention of disregarding the exceptions, which continued to be recognized as if they had been formally expressed. Thus the freedom of speech and of the press (Art. I) does not permit the publication of libels, blasphemous or indecent articles, or other publications injurious to public morals or private reputation; the right of the people to keep and bear arms (Art. II) is not infringed by laws prohibiting the carrying of concealed weapons; the provision that no person shall be twice put in jeopardy (Art. V) does not prevent a second trial, if upon the first trial the jury failed to agree or if the verdict was set aside upon the defendant's motion (United States v. Ball, 163 U. S., 662, 672); nor does the provision of the same article that no one shall be a witness against himself impair his obligation to testify if a prosecution against him be barred by the lapse of time, a pardon, or by statutory enactment. (Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S., 591, and cases cited.) Nor does the provision that an accused person shall be confronted with the witnesses against him prevent the admission of dying declarations or the depositions of witnesses who have died since the former trial.

"It may be justifiable to dwell in this connection, for the purpose of enforcing the point made, on the so-called censorship clause of the espionage bill, eventually rejected by Congress, repeatedly declared in the effective newspaper campaign waged against it, and quite commonly believed to be violative of the first amendment, forbidding the enactment of any law abridging the freedom of speech or of the press.

"In the form in which it was finally voted on in the Senate it read as follows:

"In time of war the President is hereby authorized to prescribe and promulgate rules and regulations for the purpose of preventing the disclosure to the public, and thereby to the enemy, of information with respect to the movement, numbers, description, and disposition of any of the armed forces of the United States in naval and military operations, or with respect to any works intended for the fortification or defense of any place; and whoever, in time of war, shall willfully violate any such rule or regulation shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to limit or restrict, nor shall any regulation herein provided for limit or restrict, any discussion, comment, or criticism of the acts or policies of the Government or its representatives or the publication of the same.

"The conference committee recommended the following:

"When the United States is at war the publishing willfully of information with respect to the movement, numbers, description, or disposition of any of the armed forces of the United States in naval or military operations, or with respect to any of the works intended for the fortification or defense of any place, which information is useful to the enemy, is hereby prohibited; and the President may from time to time by proclamation declare the character of such above-described information which, in his opinion, is not useful to the enemy, and thereupon it shall be lawful to publish the same. In any prosecution hereunder the jury trying the cause shall determine not only whether the defendant did willfully publish such information, but also whether such informed was of such character as to be useful to the enemy.

"It will be noted that no provision was at any time made for the appointment of a censor, nor was any authority to be given to anyone to blue-pencil any newspaper or prohibit in advance the publication of any matter its managers might choose to insert in it. The proposed law made it penal to publish information concerning the movement of the troops and news of like character, that, reaching the enemy, might prove disastrous to our cause. Does the freedom of the press imply the right to print without penal responsibility such information? Possibly at this very hour some thousands of the gallant sons of this State are embarking on transports on their way to the western front. Can it be that there is no power in the Federal Government to protect the men thus called to the service of the Nation from ruthless destruction at sea by enemy submarines, by appropriate legislation, making it a penal offense to make public through the press when they depart, by what route they travel, and by what convoy they are guarded? It is no answer to say that the newspapers of the country will patriotically refrain, have refrained, from publishing such news, interesting as it would prove to their readers. Why should we take the risk that every newspaper will resist the chance to make a "scoop"? Besides the loyalty of not a few newspapers published in this country—only a few and those of no great character—is not above suspicion. Why should we not hold all such strictly responsible for the publication of information that may spell some horrible disaster to our forces? These comments may seem a defense of the policy of the statute rather than an exposition of the power to enact it, but they are made to enforce the point that the freedom of the press does not imply the right to print anything and everything.

"It does not, and no one will contend that it does, extend so far as to warrant the publication or to afford immunity for the publication of matter that is libelous or obscene or blasphemous. Similar provisions in State constitutions do not invalidate laws that forbid the circulation of papers carrying advertisements to promote the sale of intoxicating liquors or noxious drugs or other articles the indiscriminate sale of which is by the law-making power justly held to be inimical to the public welfare. A number of the States have prohibited the sale of newspapers devoted largely to the publication of scandals, immoral occurrences, and the like. These prohibitory statutes have been uniformly upheld, the decisions fully justifying the declaration of a standard work that 'it is universally conceded that there is some limitation of the right of free speech and free press. Such limitation is fixed by common-law principles and statutory declarations of the police power.' The same authority continues, 'Statutes required to protect the public morals or general welfare of the people do not infringe this constitutional right.' (8 Cyc., 892.)

"Cooley declares that the constitutional guaranty does not extend to 'publications injurious to private character or public morals or safety.' (Cooley Const. Lim., 615.)

"Story, in combating the idea that the press is subject to no legislative restraint, inquires: 'Is it contended that the liberty of the press is so much more valuable than all other rights in society that the public safety, nay, the existence of the Government itself, is to yield to it? Is private redress for libels and calumny more important or more valuable than the maintenance of good order, peace, and safety of society?' (Story, 1887.) Following the discussion, he observes that the 'right of government to punish the violators of these "public rights and public liberties" flows from the primary duty of self-preservation.'

"One Johann Most, a product of the kind of government to preserve the world from which we have entered into the present war, held a latitudinarian view of the free-press amendment to the Constitution, but the Court of Appeals of New York refused to accept his idea that it protected him in the promulgation through his newspaper of the notion that the evils of society were to be redressed through murder and assassination. Commenting on the principle to which he appealed, that court said:

"It places no restraint upon the power of the legislature to punish the publication of matter which is injurious to society according to the standards of the common law. It does not deprive the State of the primary right of self-preservation.

"As there is an implied limitation on the right to speak and print, arising from a condition of war, so there is a limitation on the right to contract guaranteed by the fifth and the fourteenth amendments.

"It has been held that the right to dispose of one's property is of the essence of the right to his property and is protected by the due-process clause of the amendments referred to. Its comprehensive character was expounded in Allgeyer v. Louisiana (165 U. S., 578, 589), as follows:

"The liberty mentioned in that amendment means not only the right of the citizen to be free from the mere physical restraint of his person, as by incarceration, but the term is deemed to embrace the right of the citizen to be free in the enjoyment of all his faculties; to be free to use them in all lawful ways; to live and work where he will; to earn his livelihood by any lawful calling; to pursue any livelihood or avocation, and for that purpose to enter into all contracts which may be proper, necessary, and essential to his carrying out to a successful conclusion the purposes above mentioned.

"Yet contracting with the enemy in time of war can not be tolerated, and before Congress adjourns it will pass a 'trading with the enemy act,' making all commercial intercourse with alien enemies criminal. Indeed, it was said in Knoxville Iron Co. v. Harbison (183 U. S., 22) that 'the right to contract is not absolute in respect to every matter, but may be subjected to the restraints demanded by the safety and welfare of the State and its inhabitants.'

"In fact, all our prized liberties so carefully guarded by the first 10 amendments to the Constitution are held subject to the all-embracing war power of Congress. Confiscation statutes passed during the Civil War were assailed in Miller v. United States (11 Wall., 268) as contrary to the fourth and fifth amendments. Touching the contention made in that behalf, the court said:

"But if the assumption of the plaintiff in error is not well made, if the statutes were not enacted under the municipal power of Congress to legislate for the punishment of crimes against the sovereignty of the United States, if, on the contrary, they are an exercise of the war powers of the Government, it is clear they are not affected by the restrictions imposed by the fifth and sixth amendments. This we understand to have been conceded in the argument.

"The court then entered upon an inquiry as to whether the acts in question came within the compass of the war power, and, finding they did, sustained their validity, and in that connection said:

"Of course the power to declare war involves the power to prosecute it by all means and in any manner in which war may be legitimately prosecuted.

"While there was a dissenting opinion in that case, the principle announced in the majority opinion, as recited above, is not only approved but elaborated in that filed by the justices withholding their assent from the judgment, Justice Field saying:

"It is evident that legislation founded upon the war powers of the Government, and directed against the public enemies of the United States, is subject to different considerations and limitations from those applicable to legislation founded upon the municipal power of the Government and directed against criminals. Legislation in the former case is subject to no limitations, except such as are imposed by the law of nations in the conduct of war. Legislation in the latter case is subject to all the limitations prescribed by the Constitution for the protection of the citizen against hasty and indiscriminate accusation, and which insure to him, when accused, a speedy and public trial by a jury of his peers.

"The war powers of the Government have no express limitation in the Constitution, and the only limitation to which their exercise is subject is the law of nations."

"That the provision that Congress shall pass no law depriving one of life, liberty, or property without due process of law did not forbid the confiscation of the property of an alien enemy by direct legislative act was decided by the Supreme Court in Brown v. United States (8 Cranch, 120).

"In fact, the great writ of liberty itself may be suspended when, in case of rebellion or invasion, the public safety may require it. Other rights appertaining to the person of the citizen are at best but shadowy if he can not secure a writ of habeas corpus for the purpose of having an inquiry into the cause of his detention. The Constitution recognizes the right to suspend the writ as falling within the powers granted to Congress by section 8, the war powers heretofore referred to. The succeeding section, in which reference is made to the writ, imposed limitations upon Congress and sets bounds to powers granted.

"Not only the rights of individuals but the rights of the States may be restricted in the exercise of the war power by Congress. The case of Stewart v. Kahn (11 Wall., 493), heretofore referred to, is illustrative.

"The right of a State to make laws regulating the procedure in its courts, and particularly to enact statutes of limitation, is recognized as fundamental in our system. Equally indisputable is the proposition that in normal times the Federal Government has no right to prescribe rules for the conduct of business in State courts, to enact statutes of limitation to be observed by them, or laws that operate to toll those the State commands its courts to observe. Yet the Supreme Court, in the case referred to, in an opinion assented to by all the judges, sanctioned an act of Congress passed in 1864, which provided that any statute of a State resisting the Federal authority by force of arms, to the contrary notwithstanding, no suitor should be denied a recovery in its courts because of delay in bringing his action occasioned by conditions growing out of the state of war. That law, it was held, was enacted in a proper exercise of the war power, the court remarking, as quoted by Willoughby, that—

"The measures to be taken in carrying on war and to suppress insurrection are not defined. The decision of all such questions rests wholly in the discretion of those to whom the substantial powers involved are confided by the Constitution.

"It is not at all improbable that in the administration of the act authorizing the President to lay embargoes a preference may be given to the ports of one State over those of another. It is conceivable that the submarine menace may grow so alarming as to make it necessary to assemble merchant ships undertaking trans-Atlantic voyages at one or more ports, from which convoy shall be provided, as was customary with the nations uniting in the Armed Neutrality League during the troubles out of which it grew.

"It may be prudent to forbid the departure of vessels for Europe from any other port that the precious cargoes they might carry of food and supplies for the armies of the allies in the field and their civilian population might not be on the voyage 'in the deep bosom of the ocean buried.' It may become advisable to refuse insurance under the war-risk insurance act except to vessels thus sailing from the ports from which convoy is to be furnished or following lanes patrolled by the destroyer craft of the allies. It is scarcely to be conceived that the authors of the Constitution intended that Congress should be hampered in the exercise of the war power by the provision of section 9 of Article I, referred to. In other words, many of the restrictions and limitations of the Constitution are to be understood as yielding to the necessary, that is to say, the appropriate exercise of the power conferred on Congress to make war, the right of self-preservation being paramount.

"This does not mean that the Constitution or any of its provisions are suspended during war. It merely means that an exception is to be implied in all cases in which a conflict arises through the legitimate exercise of the war power which Congress is charged by the solemn adjuration of the Constitution to wield. It is not strange, perhaps, that having lived the peaceful career that has characterized our Nation, the depths of the vast war power never having been sounded except during our unfortunate civil strife, an impression should obtain that Congress is proceeding in total disregard, if not in defiance, of the Constitution, effecting a revolution in our system of government. But it is in the light of the adjudications to which reference has been made, in recognition of what the war power means, that the measures attacked must be considered.

"If the food-control bill is not vulnerable it will be vain to assail any other unit of the war legislation. It authorizes the President, as it was passed by the House, to buy and sell food and fuel, denominated as 'necessaries'; to license anyone engaged in the importation, exportation, or storage of such necessaries, and to make rules and regulations under which the business of such licensee shall be carried on; to guarantee a minimum price to the producers of nonperishable agricultural products; to regulate or suppress hoarding of and transactions in such necessaries on boards of trade, and to prohibit the use of foodstuffs in the production of alcoholic beverages.

"Read in the light of prevailing conditions and current history, of which the court takes judicial notice, the purpose of the bill is to stimulate the production and to conserve the food and fuel resources of the Nation. The productive capacity of our allies has been materially reduced by the ravages of three years of war. They maintain enormous armies in the field, made up, for the larger part, of men who would normally be employed in the basic industries. Multitudes who, had peace prevailed, would be tilling the fields 'sleep the sleep that knows no waking,' and others in distressing numbers are helpless cripples. Still others, making a veritable army in point of numbers, are drawn from their ordinary avocations to produce the horrible enginery of war. The capacity of the countries associated with us is overtaxed to produce food and fuel, at least adequate to meet the demands of the occasion. Even in normal times they draw largely on foreign supplies for food not now available to them because of the exigencies of the war. Their soldiers fighting our battles, their people, who by their labor maintain the forces in the field, must lose their efficiency unless nurtured with food which we alone can supply. Famine among them would be more deadly than all the fiendish ingenuity and ferocious valor of the common foe. The right of our Government to supply their troops with the necessary munitions can not be doubted; and if munitions for the army, then certainly food for the army and as well for the civilian population, that must have it to conduct the industries through the operation of which alone the army can maintain its existence as such. No one questions our right to supply them with money by way of loan that they may more effectively carry on the war, and if we may supply them with money, why not with food, as an appropriate means of bringing ultimate success to their and our arms?

"As indicative of the extent to which they are obliged to rely upon us for subsistence, note the following table of our exports of foodstuffs for the past five years:

1912	$418,737,763
1913	503,111,639
1914	430,713,457
1915	961,568,583
1916	979,697,253
1917, to Apr. 30	992,777,055

"Prominent in the strategy of the war, taking perhaps first place in it, is the effort of each side to shut off the food supplies of the other. To this end the allies maintain their blockade of the German ports and the central powers carry on their relentless submarine operations. Argosies from our shores laden with foodstuffs have been sunk beneath the waves, victims of the assassins of the seas. It is the part of prudence to assume that our losses from that source may increase. Every cargo that goes down must be made up from our store or the pinch of want will be felt among the people whose necessities it was destined to relieve.

"Unfortunately the reports reaching us concerning the condition of the crop in the countries with which we are allied are not reassuring. All or nearly all of them drew on Germany for their potash, an essential ingredient of most fertilizers. We have been importing 250,000 tons of potassium salts from Germany annually, most of it for use in the production of fertilizer extensively used in all the eastern and southern States. That country has hitherto enjoyed a practical monopoly of that mineral, and now that none of it is obtainable from the ordinary source the price of potash has risen from $35 to $475 per ton, a price that makes the use of it for agricultural purposes prohibitive.

We are building an enormous fleet of merchant vessels, the construction of which will involve the expenditure of three-quarters of a billion dollars that we may get supplies, largely foodstuffs, to the people with whom destiny has for the time being linked us.

It can scarcely be doubted that it is within the power of Congress, under the circumstances, to stimulate the production of cereals that there may be a surplus which the ships being constructed under its authority may carry to the nations battling with us to "make the world safe for democracy." But the necessities of the situation are not met if we do no more than increase production. Britain, France, Italy and Portugal, among our allies, are all clamoring for bread which we alone can supply, and unfortunately jealousies have been aroused among them in their eagerness, springing from their necessities, to make ample provision for their people, respectively. It is well known that the spectacular rise in the price of wheat in May last, when it reached $3.40 in Chicago, was occasioned by the placing of large orders by the Government of one of those countries and through the competition in which they engaged with each other. If there is not a phenomenal crop, sufficiently bounteous to supply fully all needs, and dealing is unregulated, they will bid against each other and buy at famine prices with money loaned to them by our Government.

"Moreover, the neutral nations of Europe have scarcely been less clamorous. In normal times they import foodstuffs in vast quantity from our shores, and to no little extent their rural population, as in the countries at war, have been drawn into the industries other than agriculture that have felt the stimulating effect of war demands. Switzerland, Denmark, and Sweden have each sent deputations to present to our Government the necessities of their people in the matter of foodstuffs and to urge governmental action here or to cultivate public opinion looking toward more liberal treatment of their people in their efforts to secure a part of our surplus.

"If we should allow importers from those countries to compete unrestrictedly in our markets it might be that their resources not having been wasted by the war, our allies would be outbid by them and the people of the former suffer from the lack of nourishment necessary to enable them most efficiently to prosecute the war. And finally it is easily conceivable that in the dire straits to which they may be reduced, they, with the neutral nations, may draw off so large a part of our crop as they want, the fruitful parent of social disorder would stalk through our crowded industrial centers and riot and revolution follow in its wake. At the approach of such conditions, hoarding would be resorted to and the evil intensified, while the food speculator would find the season propitious for the prosecution of his business in its most nefarious form.

The food-control bill provides, as heretofore stated, for licensing all persons through whose hands foodstuffs pass after leaving the farm and for the conduct of their business under regulations to be prescribed by the President. It authorizes him to buy at a price to be named by him, or by the district court in case his price is not accepted, and to sell at his discretion. If it may be fairly argued that such procedure is calculated more certainly to bring the war to a speedy and successful conclusion, the act which authorizes it is within the powers of Congress. Justification for it need not be found in any other provision of the Constitution. It is sufficient that it is an appropriate war measure within the scope of the powers enumerated in the Constitution authorizing the National Government to wage war.

"It is advanced, however, that a feature found in the food bill and others authorizing the President to make rules and regulations having the force of law, the violation of which is punishable as a penal offense, is an unwarranted delegation by Congress. But this objection is so completely answered by the decision in United States against Grimaud, 220 United States, 506, that it is quite unnecessary to dwell upon it. In that case an act of Congress was sustained making it punishable to violate rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture concerning the use of the forest reserves.

"Some Members of Congress, feeling genuine alarm at intrusting one man, however able and patriotic he might be, the vast power given and being given to President Wilson by the legislation reviewed, made a vain effort in the case of some of the measures to intrust the administration of the law to a board, but it found no great favor anywhere and was practically abandoned. It was quite urgently insisted upon for a time in connection with the railway bill, by which the President was authorized to direct that a priority in shipment be given certain commodities or consignments. But it was speedily recognized by all that as to the movement of troops, equipment, and supplies the President and his representatives at the head of the Army and Navy Departments ought not to be required to go before a board to establish that the military situation required that priority be given such freight either generally or in specific instances. So it was soon appreciated that it would be impracticable to require an order from such a board to expedite the shipment of coal to munitions factories or steel to shipyards, or a multitude of articles necessary to manufacturers engaged in supplying the Government with arms and equipment. Such a board would be obliged to hear representatives of the Army and Navy Departments on the urgency of the case and, possibly, interested parties in opposition. The whole strategy of war would have to be unfolded to such a board, whose views might not coincide with those of the men actually directing it. It might at any time become necessary to hurry a consignment of flour to France because of conditions in that country with which the President had become familiar through the State, War, and Navy Departments. It would be intolerable to have an administrative board determining against the Commander in Chief that the exigencies of the situation did not require the expedition for which he asked. The more the plan was studied the less practical and practicable it appeared, and it was rejected eventually by an overwhelming vote.

"For like reasons it will be recognized that the power to proclaim an embargo upon exports to any particular foreign country, neutral or ally, could not be reposed in a board which might decline to accept the view of the President concerning the necessity or propriety of a line of action either was desirous of pursuing. Should there seem to be occasion for holding suspected persons against whom no substantial proof can be adduced, it is more than likely that, as in the War between the States, the President will be authorized to make due proclamation of the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus. It seems that when authority is to be exercised under acts of Congress, justifiable only as war legislation or designed to aid in bringing the conflict to a speedy close, it can be nowhere so appropriately lodged as in the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, upon whom rests the responsibility for the military operations as a whole.

"I have heard Senators, Republicans as well as Democrats, confess to arriving in the morning at the Chamber swearing they never would consent to giving a particular power to the President in connection with the war, to depart i. the evening in a more pliant mood and returning next day to vote for the further grant. And so it is being demonstrated in the grandest Republic of modern times that they were long-headed statesmen who designed the constitution of the greatest republic of the ancient world.

The Roman people never had cause to feel that the republic had suffered or its virility or permanency been impaired because when the enemy were at their gates the word of Cincinnatus was made the supreme law. Neither have the American people any just ground for apprehension that Woodrow Wilson will seek to retain or the Congress of the United States hesitate to recall the extraordinary powers with which it has invested him, when the occasion for their use shall have happily passed away and a triumphant democracy shall have assured a lasting peace to the world.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m., Saturday, July 7, 1917) the Senate adjourned until Monday, July 9, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE.

MONDAY, July 9, 1917.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, lend us Thine aid this day as we face the problems that confront us. Give to us grace to work out the problems according to the Divine will. Give us, we pray Thee, an ever-increasing appreciation of moral values. May we know out of our own history and out of all history that the true, the beautiful, and the good must at last prevail. Help us to square our action with the Divine law. Give us Thy favor in the performance of our task. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Thursday, June 28, 1917, was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

WOODING TRAIN-CONTROL SYSTEM.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting the report of the Chief of the Division of Safety relative to the test of the automatic train-control system of the Wooding Railway Warning Device Co., Denver, Colo., etc., which, with the accompanying papers and illustrations, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting certified copies of the findings of fact and conclusions filed by the court in the following causes:

The cause of Minnie E. Fife, daughter, and Elizabeth Creager, widow (remarried), of William W. Brady v. United States (S. Doc. No. 59); and

The cause of Pauline W. Bryant, daughter of James M. Willett, deceased, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 60).

The foregoing communications were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

DEATH OF SENATOR LANE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Superintendent of the United States Indian Service, regarding the death of Senator LANE, of Oregon. The communication will be incorporated in the RECORD.

The communication is as follows:

BLACKFEET AGENCY,
Browning, Mont., June 28, 1917.

CLERK OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I transmit herewith copy of the resolutions passed by the business council of the Blackfeet Tribe of Indians on June 2, 1917, regarding the death of the honorable Senator HARRY LANE.

Respectfully,

THOMAS FERRIS, Superintendent.

—

At a session of the business council of the Blackfeet Tribe of Indians duly called by Supt. Thomas Ferris, held on the 2d day of June, A. D. 1917, at Blackfeet Agency, Mont., the following resolutions were duly passed and adopted:

Whereas the Blackfeet Tribe of Indians have heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. HARRY LANE, a Senator from the State of Oregon; and

Whereas this tribe of Indians feel that in expressing this mark of respect know how futile it is to address words, idle words, to the family in this moment of supreme anguish, with which it has pleased God to visit the family, and shall not say more than that the loss of pure, good, useful Senator and exponent of justice and fair play for the American Indian is a source of deep sorrow to the numerous friends who have had the privilege of knowing him and to none more than families in deep sympathy and affection; and

Whereas the said late Senator HARRY LANE has done much toward the better treatment of the Indians in general; and

Whereas he was instrumental in the investigation of this reservation and brought to it a better service and improvement in all respects of its economics, social, temporal, industrial activities: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this council communicate these resolutions to the Tomahawk for publication and copies to the family and to the Senate of the United States.

ROBT. J. HAMILTON,
Chairman Blackfeet Business Council.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a resolution of the Kauai Chamber of Commerce, of Hawaii, pledging support of the President and the country during the period of the war, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Alameda County Council of Defense of California, favoring a suggested plan that the Federal Government take over the idle lands in the country and farm them for the people of the Nation as an emergency war measure, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, during the past month I have received 240 letters, which I now send to the desk. Some of these are signed by one person, others signed by more, the aggregate number of signers being about 735—all, I believe, residents of Wyoming.

These letters are identical in form and substance, and evidently all were prepared on the same typewriter or printing press, and all were mailed in the same kind of envelopes, evidently addressed and stamped at the headquarters of an association or bureau, although mailed in various post offices.

I ask that the text of one of these letters, with the number of its signers, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to lie on the table and one of them was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHEYENNE, WYO., May 21, 1917.

Hon. F. E. WARREN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Two hundred million bushels of grain suitable for food are used annually in this country to manufacture beer and whisky. The United States and its allies are in acute need of all the food that can be produced. In the liquor business 150,000 men are employed, while the farmers are combing the country for men to tend and harvest the crops.

The products made by the employees of breweries and distilleries make workmen less efficient and fighters less dependable and resolute. Right now we need every man physically and mentally at his best.

Common sense demands that prohibition be put through as a move to help win the war. "We can keep our powder dry by making our country dry!"

The people of Wyoming urge and expect you to work for the suspension of the liquor traffic during this crisis.

Very sincerely,

RALPH HAROLD BOLIN
(And 9 others).

Mr. WARREN. I have three short telegrams signed by officers of labor unions. They are very short, and they refer to matters now being discussed. I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SHERIDAN, WYO., June 26, 1917.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We, the members of Local 820, urgently request you to vote against the prohibiting of beer and wine.

W. C. DUNNING,
Secretary.

—

SHERIDAN, WYO., June 26, 1917.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We, the members of Local Union 273, urgently request you to use your utmost influence protesting against the prohibition of beer and wine and vote against the bill.

F. T. WARNSTEDT,
Secretary.

—

SHERIDAN, WYO., June 26, 1917.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Sheridan Trades' Council urgently requests you to vote against the prohibiting of beer and wine.

GEO. HAYWOOD,
President.

Mr. WARREN. I present a number of telegrams protesting against prohibition, and I ask that the substance be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Washington, D. C.:

In behalf of the malting industry of the United States we respectfully protest against the prohibition provisions in the food bill already passed by the House of Representatives. They will not only force every malting company into bankruptcy but will bring about social and economic disruption which our country can ill afford to face at this critical moment. The time within which malsters will be obliged to go out of business is so short in the bill that it seems almost superfluous to call your attention to it. Instead of 30 days most malsters would require from six to eight months to liquidate, and even then their plants will be practically useless for other purposes. We do not believe this is a time appropriate for such legislation, and above all, beer and light wines should not be prohibited; the dairy interests will suffer from the loss of dried malted grains and malt sprouts now used in balanced rations in cattle feeding, thereby lowering the milk production of the country in quantity and quality when it is so much needed. The amount of grain used for malting is so small—less than 1 per cent of the crop—that its conservation for direct use as food is overshadowed by the benefits derived from the use of the malted grains as feed for dairy cows. Numerous other industries will be likewise affected, and the revenue needed for the war will have to be levied on business generally in such a manner that the goose which is responsible for the golden egg may have to stop laying. We ask you to bear all this in mind and to vote against war prohibition on the ground that it is uncalled for, uneconomic, unexcusable, and fraught with grave dangers to business as a whole. Reform legislation when advisable and necessary is commendable, but when it is sentimental, emotional, unjustly confiscatory, and against the principles of democracy, it jeopardizes the stability of our Government.

MALTSTERS' BUREAU OF STATISTICS,
Representing the Malting Industry of the United States.

—

NEW YORK N. Y., June 29, 1917.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Washington, D. C.:

While a most representative delegation of the world's foremost hotel and restaurant proprietors are preparing to leave for Washington tonight at the request of Commissioner Hoover to volunteer their personal services in the conservation of food and solve its problems, it is unbelievable that the Senate, in its great wisdom and fatherly guardianship of all our American peoples, even though your majority might in normal times favor a dry country, will permit this terrible war to be used as a subterfuge to impose the will of prohibition agitators, whether paid or sincere, upon the will of the great majority of temperate liberty-loving and law-abiding citizens appealing in behalf of the millions of employers in the hotels and restaurant business, and including purveyors, supply houses, and other kindred industries; also those whose enterprise is directly affected. We most respectfully urge you to help defeat prohibition measure reported in its present form. It does not actually create an economy; it does, because of sudden action, mean ruthless destruction of real estate values. It will throw over 1,000,000 men out of employment and bring misery and want to over 5,000,000 dependants; it will deny a harmless beverage to 70,000,000, and create and, at least temporarily, their resentment. It will disorganize and destroy many hotel and purveying enterprises; it will lose a tremendous, and always cheerfully paid, Government revenue; besides it will alienate the good will of millions of foreign-born citizens who will naturally resent being denied temperate beverages of their childhood. We ask you to cooperate with us for temperance and strictest regulations. We ask you to avoid the calamity of this untimely and ill-advised and undesirable prohibition. Why create panic which the war itself did not bring about? Why arouse resentment to satisfy an unreasonable minority? Look at the liberty loan with $1,000,000 subscribed from New York hotel men alone. Look at the Red Cross fund from hotel men and industries. Above all, we are for and with our country; we look to you for fair play and protection.

CHARLES E. GEHRING,
Publisher Hotel Review and Daily Hotel Reporter.

—

CINCINNATI.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The National Association of White Corn Millers registers a vigorous protest against the prohibition of the manufacture of beer. This association represents twenty millions investment and one hundred and twenty millions of annual business. Prohibition will render our mills useless and valueless and will deprive the Nation of forty millions of human food and animals of forty millions of the best stock food made. We can not successfully operate our mills without making and selling brewers' grits made from white corn.

CHAS. W. SCHMIDT,
Secretary National Association of White Corn Millers.

Mr. WARREN. I present three telegrams urging prohibition and ask that the subject matter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PITTSBURGH, PA., July 7, 1917.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Washington, D. C.:

Outside of the question of revenue, serious at this time, is the ruthless destruction of a legal business by the Cummins amendment. Other important interests besides liquor are involved.

T. H. GIVEN,
President Farmers' Deposit National Bank.

—

EVANSTON, WYO., June 24, 1917.

Senator WARREN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

If you are asking the women of America to economize in the use of foods, then the food resources should be conserved. Liquor causes the greatest waste of these resources. Therefore we respectfully and earnestly express our desire that you vote for the national prohibition amendment as a war measure.

WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION OF EVANSTON.

—

BUFFALO, WYO., July 3, 1917.

Senator WARREN,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

In order to conserve food supply, help out labor situation, add to transportation facilities, and insure better moral condition, we ask you to support the prohibition measure now before Congress.

C. J. MEKKETSON.
CHAS. GRAY MILLER.
T. C. WATT.
DAVID MUIR.
EARL SMITH.
EDWARD FURHMAN.
ROBERT WALL.
WM. HOSSIC.
SAMUEL WEST.
WM. BAXTER.

Mr. WARREN presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Kemmerer, Wyo., remonstrating against the prohibition of beer and light wines, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Board of Education of Superior, Wyo., favoring an appropriation of $150,000 for the education and Americanization of aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. THOMPSON. I present a resolution passed by the National Legislative Conference, which I should like to have printed in the RECORD without reading. It is short.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DECLARATION ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LEGISLATIVE CONFERENCE.

The National Legislative Conference, representing 22 national allied temperance organizations, met at Washington, D. C., July 2, 1917, and unanimously adopted the following:

I. Thanks for legislation achieved.

We heartily commend the Sixty-fifth Congress for the enactment of provisions prohibiting the sale of liquors to enlisted men and officers of the Army and Navy in uniform, prohibiting the possession of liquor for beverage purposes in training camps, authorizing the establishment of dry and antivice zones around the training camps, and the appropriation of $500,000 for training-camp equipment and activities.

II. Safeguarding enlisted men abroad.

We appeal to the administration to provide the same safeguards for our soldiers and sailors in foreign lands as have been provided at home.

III. War prohibition.

We urge Congress to conserve all our national resources needed to win the war by prohibiting the conversion of any foodstuffs into intoxicating liquors, by authorizing and directing the President to commandeer all stocks of distilled liquors for munitions and other governmental purposes, by preventing the importation of intoxicating liquors and the exportation of foodstuffs for the manufacture of intoxicating liquors abroad, and we oppose any except prohibitive taxes on the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors.

In view of the President's expressed fear of a filibuster on the food-control bill and of consequent serious delay in its passage, we desire to say that we have done nothing and will do nothing to delay the passage of this bill, but will press for adequate food conservation and for complete war prohibition, and will rely upon our trusted leaders in Congress to decide whether these objects can be best secured by a separate bill or by an amendment to some other measure.

We would point out that hitherto there has been absolutely no delay on account of the prohibition features of the food-control bill. In the House of Representatives the entire debate on prohibition lasted but seven hours, and the bill reached the Senate at precisely the same moment it would have reached it had there been no such debate; that is, at the opening of the Senate on the following legislative day.

IV. National constitutional prohibition.

We reaffirm our devotion to national constitutional prohibition as the ultimate of all prohibition legislation, and we hereby call upon Congress promptly to pass the pending resolution submitting a constitutional amendment to the several States for their action.

Mr. THOMPSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Dighton, Kans., praying for the enactment of a complete prohibition war measure, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KING. Apropos of the pending food legislation, I have received a letter from a prominent citizen of my State, which I desire to have read. It is very short.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read as follows:

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, June 28, 1917.

Senator W. H. KING,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: On account of the great agitation that is going on and also on account of the bill now pending in the Senate relative to the Government control of the food and grain supplies, we are absolutely up in the air as to what preparations to make regarding the conduct of our business the coming year and the handling of the grain crop in this section, as we have been accustomed to doing in the past. In explanation might say that we are operating a line of country elevators through Utah and Idaho, through which we buy grain from the farmers and distribute it to the mills or big terminal elevators and exporters who may be in the market for the products.

We contemplate the erection of a number more of the elevators during the summer in order to keep pace with the rapid development of this section the grain-growing capacity. There are a number of stations where we should increase our facilities for handling the crop, but, as stated above, under the existing conditions and uncertainty we do not know what to do. Naturally we don't feel justified in making permanent investments at this time when we can see no reasonable assurance that we will get returns on the investments.

Now, we assure you, Senator, we will very greatly appreciate any information you can give us relative to the position the Government is going to take in regard to housing the accumulation and the handling of the grain crop directly from the farmers for the coming year; also any other information you can give relative to the line of business in which we are interested.

Assuring you we will greatly appreciate as prompt response to this inquiry as you can give us, and thanking you in advance for any information you can give us, we are,

Yours, truly,

INTER-MOUNTAIN MILLING CO.,
By R. E. MILLER.

Mr. GRONNA presented a petition of the Bismarck district, North Dakota conference, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the use of all grain, fruits, and other foodstuffs in the manufacture of alcoholic liquors, to include beer and wine, and also the sale of such alcoholic liquors, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a copy of resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of East St. Louis, July 6, 1917, relating to the recent civil commotion in that city. I ask that the resolutions be printed at length, but not read.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Chicago Tribune, July 7, 1917.]

CITIZENS OF EAST ST. LOUIS DEMAND THAT LAW BE ENFORCED AND GUILTY PUNISHED.

EAST ST. LOUIS, ILL., July 6.

The citizens' committee, at the meeting called by the chamber of commerce, to-day adopted the following resolutions in condemnation of the political causes and official negligence leading to the recent riots:

"Whereas riots have occurred which have appalled our good citizens and brought shame and disgrace to our city and done incalculable injury to the prosperity and future welfare of the city; and

"Whereas these riots and the unlawful acts attending them have brought upon us the severest condemnation from the entire country; and

"Whereas there is a feeling among our own citizens that there may be a recurrence of these tragedies, and this feeling is retarding the resumption of normal conditions; and

"Whereas we believe it is necessary that the law-abiding citizens of East St. Louis take such action as will reinstate us in the good opinion of our neighbors and friends, and to assure the entire country that steps will be immediately taken for the enforcement of the law and the preservation of life and property, and that assurance be given to all of our law-abiding citizens, irrespective of race or condition, that in the future they will be absolutely secure in our midst: Therefore the following declaration is promulgated:

"We, the citizens of East St. Louis, who are in favor of law and order and the protection of life and property, in a meeting assembled declare that—

"First. Without undertaking to specifically account for the recent riots, it is necessary to state briefly what has occurred. About a month ago a riot took place in which a number of citizens, under the pretext of driving from the city all colored people located here, marched down our streets and assaulted every colored person that came in their way, and it so happened that nearly all of the negroes assaulted were of our old-time citizens and most of them law-abiding people.

"A number of vicious and lawless negroes took advantage of the excitement brought about by this riot, and, under their leadership and impassionate plea for revenge, the worst element began to organize and arm themselves for this purpose, and on Sunday evening, July 1, when it was reported among them that some one was riding through the southern portion of the city shooting into their homes, this lawless and armed band met at a late hour of the night in one of their churches on an agreed signal given.

"When the police officers learned that the negroes were assembling in the church, believing that a riot was likely to start, a number of officers were sent to dispel them, and as they reached the church these officers, without any warning, were fired upon and two of them murdered. This greatly aroused the white people and was the immediate cause of the riot July 2, in which so many people lost their lives and so much property was destroyed.

"Second. We in the most emphatic terms condemn the action of the rioters in the latter part of May. By their action they were defying the law and were administering punishment to innocent and unoffending people.

"In the same manner we condemn the action of the lawless and savage negroes who on Sunday night, July 1, armed themselves for the purpose of committing deliberate murder, and who carried out these intentions by killing two of the officers of the city.

"We are at a loss to find language to express our indignation concerning the action of the rioters on July 2; their unwarranted acts stand without a parallel in the history of our country. These rioters, without the slightest effort to discover the persons who had murdered the East St. Louis officers, directed their wrath against colored people who they knew had nothing to do with the murder. They in the most savage and brutal manner set fire to their homes and shot them down as they were fleeing for their lives. Some were not permitted to escape and lost their lives in the flames of their burning homes.

"Third. We believe that the principal cause of this riotous conduct was the laxity in the punishment of crime that has prevailed for some time past. On account of this indisposition to punish crime there has grown up in our midst irreverence for the law that has brought about the harvest that we have just reaped.

"Many criminals, both black and white, have found a congenial home in our city and have carried on their criminal acts without the slightest fear of the pains and penalties of the law. For all of this the police department of our city and those officials charged with the conservation of the law are the most to blame. They have not taken the step that should have been taken to rid our city of this lawless element, and they are to be condemned in the severest terms for the helpless and inefficient manner in which they permitted these disgraceful riots to take place in our city.

"We believe that this is largely due not from a disposition upon the part of our various police officers to fail to enforce the law, but from a lack of an organization and an understanding on the part of the head of the police department that all violators of the law, irrespective of race, politics, conditions, or associations, should be apprehended and punished.

"While we commend the action of Adjt. Gen. Dickson for the able and efficient manner in which he and the men under his direction are handling the present situation, and for which we feel extremely grateful, we must condemn the action of the militia who were in our city on the 2d day of July pretending to give to the city aid, but who were wholly inactive and in some instances aiding and abetting the rioters.

"It is said that a municipality usually receives the government that it merits. We believe that the good people of the city of East St. Louis are not without blame for the terrible experiences through which they have just passed; they have not been ignorant of the reign of crime that has been going on in the city and the failure on the part of the police officers and other officials to punish offenders, and yet they have been so engrossed in their individual affairs that they have entirely overlooked and neglected to perform a public duty, and it has taken this terrible tragedy to arouse them to a sense of the responsibility they are under to the community in which they live.

"Fourth. The good people demand that our city be rid of the criminal class that has recently infested it, that the law be strictly enforced without fear or favor, and that there be no influence in the city that can screen or immune any offender; that all law-abiding persons in our city, be they ever so humble, white or black, rich or poor, be absolutely secure in their lives, property, and the pursuit of happiness, that all persons hereafter who have a grievance, be it real or imaginary, must resort to the law for redress, and we pledge that we will see that nothing be spared to punish persons, white or black, who attempt to take the law into their own hands.

"Fifth. We demand that the police department of the city be reorganized upon such a basis that the law will be enforced as hereinabove stated. And we pledge to the mayor our entire support in so reorganizing the police department of our city and in the bringing about every reform that tends to peace and good order.

"Sixth. We demand that every effort possible be put forth to punish the persons who murdered the officers Sunday night, July 1, and to punish all of the persons guilty of murder and arson and assaults on Monday, July 2."

Mr. SHERMAN. I further present some telegrams in view of the statement made by the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] July 6, when I presented and had read with their signatures two telegrams from Chicago, Ill., the statement of the Senator being:

I would be sorry to believe that the Senator has been imposed upon.

In corroboration of the validity and good faith of those telegrams I now send a selection from some 600 telegrams in my office, comparatively small in number. Several of them I ask may be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and not read, including the names. All, with a few exceptions, are of the same kind as those read on a previous occasion. Some of these telegrams are very earnest in saying that the proposed legislation affecting intoxicating liquors is un-American.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

We are hard-working people and do not like to be deprived of our beer.
K. Doksas, J. Scharek, A. Filopoulos, D. Zlobis, M. Biliaswf, J. Schneider, Fred Sommerfield, G. Pappas, J. Pappas, F. Mersdorf, A. Boldt, N. Dannis, H. Endriats, Louis Michalik, Fred Long, T. Stoniskiaw, Michael Haijz, Anton Matje.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

Beer is healthy and wholesome; the laboring man must have it.
Max Starck, O. Schroeder, B. Stogle, F. Staroba, Hubert Schreuer, Charles Sippel, G. Swastovic, Olof Swenson, Joseph Schlitt, William Steinam, John Schlitt, Henry Spahn, Jul Scheer, Edw. Schirber, U. Sorenson.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

As American citizens we protest against that part of the food bill that prohibits the manufacture of beer and light wines.
Charles Haberle, M. Hartung, Johan Haeberle, Joe Jukner, Joseph Jarolim, Charles Hoffman, Chris Hardeegen, William Hannig, Pat Kane, Tony Hasslinger, John Hoppmann, August Haushalter, John Gungwir, Joseph Helmer, Fritz Heine.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

Radical prohibition of the manufacture of beer and light wines would deprive us of our constitutional rights as American citizens.
A. Kozinszcy, O. Zimmerman, M. Grealish, G. Krause, J. Hari, F. Schwarz, J. Alexa, A. Warga, S. Krumenaker, A. Korpitz, S. Kramer, P. Pess, L. Kabet, M. Novak, W. Linkau.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Moderate use of beer is the best weapon against drunkenness and will keep us better fitted to work and fight and win. Keep us satisfied.
J. Patterson, C. Moravec, P. Dieter, F. Weinert, J. Wopart, T. Fulton, Phil Bucky, H. Michan, W. A. Saracino, A. Willin, E. Barte, J. Dougherty, P. Bernacchi, H. Leimbeck, J. B. Helzing.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Contentment of our people depends on the safeguarding of constitutional rights. We favor light wines and brewing of beer for our country.
A. Wingate, F. Zakar, J. Smrcina, R. Telkas, L. Zamman, C. McLean, W. Pfohl, T. Wingate, G. Josephson, J. Guringer, Joe Schopech, O. Busse, Aug. Hoffmann, J. Pichlar, G. Petkus, E. A. Devic.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator L. Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

We have consumed a moderate quantity of beer every day for many years, are still in good health and able to do a good day's work. Don't take it away from us.
Anton Schimkers, J. Ringhofer, Nick Schuck, F. Sikas, P. Horvath, D. Andrulis, W. Andrulis, John Loesmandy, J. Schimkus, A. Sintich, Gus Niemeier, N. Stefane, Michael Blazek, L. Kiermeier, P. Spigt.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

We are a bunch of laboring men not able to stock up our cellars with whisky and wine for future years. Please let us have our beer.

W. Fara, F. Macek, L. Weinscheimer, A. Putz, J. Shramek, J. Ludewig, G. Jenner, E. Birkholz.

—

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

We are a bunch of laboring men not able to stock up our cellars with whisky and wine for future years. Please let us have our beer.

J. Steele, P. Reiff, W. Berkelman, H. Prinz, J. S. Ekerka, B. Johnson, H. Althammer, R. Wallet.

—

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

We are a bunch of laboring men not able to stock up our cellars with whisky and wine for future years. Please let us have our beer.

H. Reichman, J. Kubon, J. Holoway, E. Zelinka, C. Turner, J. Leichtenberg, F. Kornfind, G. Gauzer.

—

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

Modification of House amendment of Lever bill authorizing manufacture of beer and wine would best fit our sentiments.

G. Bradtkem, A. Schirmang, E. Budnick, N. Braun, F. Wernig, B. Wajerski, W. Voelz, H. Serger, J. Miskinis, L. Michorl, J. Polasky, J. Balya, Karl Haupt, L. Dominick, J. Lazarich.

—

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

Beer is healthy and wholesome. The laboring man must have it.

Frank Holy, F. Pokorny, A. Blank, Fred Piper, S. Biernat, W. Koop, F. Bardowski, S. Bartokovish, J. Hajzle, J. Gaische, F. Oreovicz, N. Zimmerman, J. Schaar, C. Catilup, R. Tomal, W. Racowsky, F. Katzian, R. Benz.

—

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

We enjoy our glass of beer, our work, and the happiness of our families every day.

Wm. Ogara, G. J. Patitz, J. Portenkirschner, Wm. Ramm, Henry Reichelt, Edw. Reigoll, John Paul, M. Peters, Louis Pakieser, Chas. Rasch, H. Reber, August Riberger, Aug. Paulat, F. H. Perle, B. Querfurth, Albert Relles, Ernst Reichau, Tobias Rist.

—

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Hon. LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The true sentiment of the people in the West is unequivocally for moderate use of brewed beverages and light wines, unscrupulous newspapers notwithstanding. Act for the people.

H. Rothenburger, P. Gromke, S. Halligan, J. Patterson, J. Murphy, J. Oldfield, A. Wielubowski, G. Seapel, F. Cerney, W. Versailes, G. Graupner, J. Turik, J. Sullivan, J. Mulhaney, V. Fara, V. Wollner, P. Dieter, J. Singer, J. Fitch, E. C. Ekanek, E. Odenback.

—

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Hon. LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

No warring nation except Turkey forbids beer and wine. Experiments are dangerous at the present time. As fellow workers and voters we emphatically protest any attempt to interfere with our rights and guaranteed liberty.

E. Paulsen, W. Jucus, J. Patterson, L. Henryickson, A. Engel, R. Menzel, J. Mauloff, W. Boll, M. Fischer, E. Hecker, F. Becker, J. Martinson, S. Clarkowiski, Otto Lexnar, J. Mueller, J. Selinka, M. Schuster, F. Seffield, Tom Rockberg, J. Petrie, J. Vohasek.

—

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Hon. LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Why send malt to England and legislate total prohibition for this, our country? We are for America first, and your undersigned constituents demand fair treatment regarding beer and light wines.

J. Skinder, H. Buchholz, A. Young, J. Mader, L. Hallman, S. Jacobs, A. Conlon, J. Pawlick, J. Schmiedt, V. Goturka, J. Gebele, C. Krauss, S. Rauch, J. Modrala, A. Stewart, M. Madigan, C. Fischer, J. Neuffer.

—

EAST ST. LOUIS, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator L. Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

We feel that the laboring interests of the country would be badly injured by national prohibition, and we ask you to oppose the measure.

THE ILLINOIS LABOR PRESS,
By BEN A. SHEPMAN,
Editor and Manager.

—

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

We enjoy a few glasses of beer every day and don't like to be deprived of it.

George Conrad, E. Diener, E. Eibie, Ernst Frank, Mike Doser, John Evans, And Dunca, M. Ceberg, Chas. Eiserer, P. Darte, Phila Emmerch, Peter Deitrich, Leo Ernst, Chas. Eifler, Andolph Erbad, John Dubberke, E. Denner, Martin Ebatt.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

As American citizens we protest against that part of the food bill that prohibits the manufacture of beer and light wines.

P. Stretski, J. Eischelberger, A. Schneider, A. Schirmang, P. Justus, A. Drigot, J. Jablonsky, L. Golub, A. Frank, D. Grink, F. Gabics, J. Tomaschko, J. Buck, P. Pauzoles, P. Stecher.

—

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

We enjoy our glass of beer, our work, and the happiness of our families every day.

J. Ulm, Herman C. Egdorf, John Klenner, Chas. Schechner, Henry Guillaume, H. Wiese, Peter Rebholz, J. Laub, H. Kuechel, A. Andrules, P. Norvid, N. Schreiber, F. Grietic, J. Hanig, J. Wilck.

—

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

We enjoy a few glasses of beer every day and don't like to be deprived of it.

J. Bominger, J. Kraemer, E. Miller, H. Wright, J. E. Heiser, C. E. Lambright, A. J. Enner, J. Reigel.

—

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

Remember the laboring class. A glass of beer is invigorating after a day's hard work.

Fred Schaerr, J. S. Zabo, A. Sieck, Andrew Santner, D. Tesarek, Louis Schlecht, Anton Stava, Geo. Sippel, H. Steinbrecher, Fred Thomas, V. Schwarz, J. Schmit, Geo. Schleichert, Frank Tausau, Albert Tischler.

—

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

Beer is healthy and wholesome. The laboring man must have it.

Fred Trost, Stanley Wagner, J. Waska, Steve Wildkatsch, Gus Wohlers, Aug. Urbahn, Joe Wagner, John Welzien, John Winkelhofer, Wm. Zahler, John Velton, Theo. Wahlberg, F. Wezauek, Joe Winkelhofer.

—

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Let those who want beer and light wines pay the revenue of seven hundred millions while the country needs the money. Be for the people first and last.

A. Goldenbogen, G. Grimsman, A. Gruninger, C. Hollengren, H. Hanke, W. Hubeny, A. Jarshishek, R. Johnson, Geo. Timke, M. Vanick, J. Vanicek, J. Voltz, F. Walters, R. Witty, E. Reinhardt, A. Schaffer, Warren Burkhard.

—

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Kill any attempt, under whatever disguise, to deprive us of our inalienable right to a refreshing glass of beer or wine and we shall never forget your services.

H. Ploen, T. Pridmore, P. Reilly, A. Saunders, P. Schultheiss, E. Sevak, Henry Weiss, John Machnick, John Peters, E. Mildenstein, Chas. Lackewicz, Frank Kallal.

—

CHICAGO, ILL., June 28, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

National prohibition would bankrupt many a community. Defeat it; it is non-American.

JOHN W. WINZENBURG.

—

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

We enjoy our glass of beer, our work, and the happiness of our families every day.

Otto Rhein, F. Santner, Jos. Schaeflein, G. Schroettenbaum, J. Schleyhofen, W. Roth, Elmer Sauser, H. Schicht, Mike Sterna, Carl Sticht, Gust Redlich, Phil Schleyer, M. Sesselman, Herman Schwarz, A. Svoboda.

—

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

We enjoy our glass of beer, our work, and the happiness of our families every day.

F. Silha, A. Smrcka, P. Klein, W. Checkas, J. Muzich, J. Hirtreiter, Tony Romaszco, A. Bull, Wm. Mathews, A. Brounz, R. Jakubunis, J. Gall, A. Ramasaukas, Wm. Heinrich, Jos. Swiatek.

—

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

We have consumed a moderate quantity of beer every day for many years, are still in good health, and able to do a good day's work. Don't take it away from us.

Aug. Mantel, Peter Michelsen, Julius Michalke, H. C. Niblo, Chas. Obermeyer, Jacob Masek, Wm. Muzika, George Mahn, Larry Nolan, John Ott, Frank Mutchler, Chas. Moersch, Tony Nelson, John Novigny, James Ott.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1917.

Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

We have consumed a moderate quantity of beer every day for many years, are still in good health, and able to do a good day's work. Don't take it away from us.

J. Harzich, J. Shuld, J. Bradke, J. Wilhelm, J. Hari, Jos. Kirsch, G. Rungger, Paul Amand, Chase Sykas, E. Schmidt, S. Knef, J. Albuja, T. Kappel, J. Heinrich, C. Mancineili, A. Vormitag, A. Kovacik, F. Schoenbeck.

Mr. BRADY. I have resolutions passed by the Lewiston (Idaho) Commercial Club relative to the duty of citizens in the present war. I ask that they be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have a telegram from Allan A. Templeton, president of the Detroit Board of Commerce, of Michigan, making certain representations with reference to the so-called profit tax of the revenue bill. I ask that the telegram may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DETROIT, MICH., July 6, 1917.

Hon. WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH,
Washington, D. C.:

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Detroit Board of Commerce, representing a membership of over 4,000, held this day, by unanimous vote, I was requested to urge you to use your utmost efforts to defeat all measures to take profits earned in former years as a basis for the computation of excess-profits taxes. It was the unanimous consensus of opinion that excess profits should not be computed until at least 8 per cent of capital, surplus, and undivided profits had been deducted for purpose of such computation. It was also the unanimous opinion that inasmuch as business activities have not taken into consideration possible taxation of this nature, profits earned in previous years should not be taxed.

DETROIT BOARD OF COMMERCE,
ALLAN A. TEMPLETON,
President.

Mr. MYERS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Missoula, Mont., praying for national prohibition, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DILLINGHAM presented a petition of sundry citizens of Dorset and Castleton, in the State of Vermont, praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented petitions of the Woman's Missionary Societies of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Plainview; of the Kelly Memorial Methodist Church, of Longview; and of the Roberts Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, of Beaumont, all in the State of Texas, praying for national prohibition, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN presented petitions of the General Synod of the Reformed Church of America and of sundry citizens of Denville, N. J., praying for national prohibition, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of Plumbers' Local Union, No. 257, of Perth Amboy, N. J., remonstrating against the prohibition of beer and light wines, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of New Jersey, praying for the conservation of foodstuffs used in making intoxicating beverages, the passage of all war-prohibition measures, and urging that no added tax be placed on liquors, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the New Jersey Conference of Seventh-day Adventists, remonstrating against the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, and also against the enactment of legislation that would result in persecution of individuals or religious sects, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. POMERENE. I have received a number of letters from manufacturers, merchants, ministers, and professional men, all citizens of my State, asking for the adoption of national prohibition. I ask that they be received and appropriately referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will lie on the table.

Mr. POMERENE presented resolutions of the South Solon Christian Endeavor Society, of South Solon; of the Pomona Grange, of Delaware County; of the Up-to-Date Grange, of De Graff; of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Ashtabula County; of the Champaign County Dry Federation, of Urbana; of the Studer Avenue School Teachers, of Columbus; of the Broad Street Presbyterian Church, of Columbus; of the First Methodist Church Sunday School, of Oberlin, all in the State of Ohio, praying for national prohibition, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a number of letters and resolutions from bankers, merchants, and manufacturers, all in the State of Ohio, remonstrating against national prohibition, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have an editorial from the St. Louis Globe-Democrat of July 7, relative to the conferring by Congress of a medal for bravery. I do not desire that it be printed in the RECORD, but I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs for their consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SWANSON, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 2477) to authorize the construction of a building for the use of the Treasury Department, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 76) thereon.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 746) to provide for the appointment of a district judge in the northern and southern judicial districts in the State of Mississippi, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

OREGON AND CALIFORNIA LAND GRANT.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2423) to amend section 9 of the act entitled "An act to alter and amend an act entitled 'An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific Railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon,' approved July 25, 1866, as amended by the acts of 1868 and 1869, and to alter and amend an act entitled 'An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Portland to Astoria and McMinnville, in the State of Oregon,' approved May 4, 1870, and for other purposes," approved June 9, 1916, and I submit a report (No. 79) thereon. I am going to ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask unanimous consent for its consideration, and I can make a statement about it that will explain it in a moment.

The act which forfeited the Oregon and California land grant last year has been sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States. Section 9 not only provided for the payment of the taxes accrued and now unpaid—that is, at the time the act took effect. The result is that much of the taxes accrued after it took effect, and there is no provision under which the taxes can be paid to the Government.

In order to save that question, and in order to comply with the wishes of the Department of the Interior, I ask that the act may be amended so that the taxes which have accrued since the act was passed may be paid.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRONNA. As I understand it, the bill would exempt certain parties who formerly owned the land from paying taxes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It does not exempt anybody, but authorizes payment of taxes which have accrued since the act of June took effect; that is all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HUSTING. I should like to ask the Senator if the bill was before the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir; it is reported favorably by the committee.

Mr. HUSTING. When?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It was reported this morning.

Mr. HUSTING. I should like to look at it before it is taken up, and I enter an objection to its consideration at this time.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I can assure the Senator that it is costing the Government a good many thousand dollars a day, because the counties will not accept any partial payment. The bill provides for the payment of taxes accrued and the interest which is accruing since the date of the act of June, 1916.

Mr. HUSTING. I should like to look at it before it is acted upon. I have not seen the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. BRADY subsequently said: Mr. President, referring to Senate bill 2423, which was reported by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] this morning relative to the taxes on certain lands in the State of Oregon, I desire to say that it is a bill of very great importance to the people of the West, and I feel very sure, with the explanation which the Senator from Oregon has made to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HUSTING], there will be no further objection to its consideration. The bill simply provides for the payment of taxes from June 1 up to the time the Government takes possession of the land; and as the law itself now provides for the payment of taxes up to that time, there can be no good reason given why the bill should not pass. I therefore hope the Senator from Oregon will again call attention to the matter.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin who made the objection is willing to withdraw it, and I hope that the bill may be considered and passed at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has the Senator from Wisconsin any further objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. HUSTING. I have no further objection, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any other objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 9 of the act entitled "An act to alter and amend an act entitled 'An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific Railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon,' approved July 25, 1866, as amended by the acts of 1868 and 1869, and to alter and amend an act entitled 'An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Portland to Astoria and McMinnville, in the State of Oregon,' approved May 4, 1870, and for other purposes," approved June 9, 1916, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That the taxes due and unpaid on June 9, 1916, together with all penalties, interest, and costs now accrued, or which will have accrued on the date of payment, on lands the title to which has revested in the United States, whether situated in the State of Oregon or the State of Washington, shall be paid by the Treasurer of the United States, upon order of the Secretary of the Interior, as soon as may be after the approval of this act, and a sum sufficient to make such payment is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND AT PORT ANGELES, WASH.

Mr. MYERS. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 309) authorizing the county of Clallam, in the State of Washington, to convey to the city of Port Angeles certain lands, and I submit a report (No. 77) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] to the bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. This is purely a municipal matter, local to the town of Port Angeles. The purpose of it is to enable the county of Clallam to convey to the city a small portion of the land which it originally obtained from the Government, and to enable the city to erect a public library building thereon. They have a donation from the Carnegie fund, and they are desirous of proceeding with this public matter and can not do it until they get the cloud removed from the title. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection whatever to the bill, but I understood it was the policy of the Public Lands Committee that no legislation would be reported from that committee at this session of Congress unless it was emergency legislation. I have so stated to people writing to me in reference to land matters from all parts of the United States. If it is going to be the policy of the committee to report such legislation, I must notify the people I have already written to that that policy has been changed. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee reporting the bill if that is going to be the policy of the committee from now on? Has the committee changed its policy?

Mr. MYERS. The policy of the committee has been to report out no bills that were not war bills. These two bills were brought up this morning—the one I have just reported and the one reported by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]—and they were acted upon by the committee and ordered reported out at a meeting when I was not present. If I had been present, I would not have objected, because I think they are rare and extraordinary exceptions which justified reporting them out. They are not in accordance with the rule, but exceptions to the rule. I doubt if there is any other exception to be made at all. These two bills were unanimously ordered reported out by the committee when I was not present.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to object, but I want to understand what the policy will be in the future. If the Senator will carry out, as chairman of the committee, the policy heretofore announced, and in this connection I want to say that is the policy, and I believe it ought to be carried out, I shall not answer my letters differently from what I have done in the past.

Mr. MYERS. Of course, I can not control the committee. Speaking for myself, I am not anxious to have them reported out.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the chairman if he can not control the action of the committee he can object to the consideration of the bills on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. MYERS. I am not asking unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill. The Senator from Washington made the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GRONNA. I do not think that I shall object, but I should like to ask the Senator from Washington for some information. How did the county acquire the land? Was it given to the county by the Government?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It was given to the county by the Government.

Mr. GRONNA. Are there no adverse claims of any sort?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No.

Mr. GRONNA. And the county now, as I understand it, sells it or turns it over to some corporation?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; the county donates it to the county seat, the purpose being to group the public buildings in the town around a common civil center. They are about to erect a library. They have $12,500 donated to them for the purpose of erecting a library. It is the desire of everybody that this land shall be used for that purpose. In the patent from the United States, following the language of the act of Congress which donated the land, there was a provision that it would be used for county purposes. The act of Congress specified that that should be incorporated in the patent. Some lawyers have advised the city and county that on account of that language being in the patent they could not convey it to the city. This is for public purposes, but it is not strictly speaking for county purposes. It is to relieve that situation that I ask for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will permit me, were the lands granted to the county for park purposes? What was really the purpose of the Government in making the grant?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The language of the act was for county purposes. It did not specify what county purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. My recollection is that this is for a courthouse. I think the courthouse has been erected on a part of the land, that a part of it is needed for that purpose.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes. That was not expressed in the act. It did not say for a courthouse, but a courthouse was erected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Clallam, in the State of Washington, through its proper officials duly authorized to convey real estate for the county, is hereby authorized to convey to the city of Port Angeles, in said county and State, in fee simple, any part of that parcel of land situated in said city, county, and State described in the act of Congress of January 12, 1903, as a parcel of land 220 feet in width off the east side of suburban block No. 26, as shown on official plats of the town site of Port Angeles, in said county, and as subsequently conveyed in the patent of the United States of America to the said county of Clallam, dated March 21, 1903.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING OF ADDRESSES AT THE NAVAL ACADEMY (S. DOC. NO. 58).

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I present a report from the Committee on Printing, and ask for its present consideration. The estimated cost is $54.

The resolution (S. Res. 99) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the manuscript submitted by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] on June 30, 1917, entitled "Addresses of Hon. Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, and Capt. E. W. Eberle, United States Navy, Superintendent Naval Academy," delivered at the graduating exercises of the United States Naval Academy, March 29 and June 28, 1917, be printed as a Senate Document.

HECTOR A. ROBICHON.

Mr. FLETCHER. I report back from the Committee on Military Affairs favorably, with an amendment, the bill (S. 980) for the relief of Hector A. Robichon. The bill was introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. He is not present, but I know he would like to have it considered, and I therefore ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. PENROSE. What is the bill, Mr. President? Let it be read for information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Hector A. Robichon a first lieutenant of Infantry in the United States Army, to be an additional number, and to take rank at the foot of the list of first lieutenants of Infantry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSTITUTIONAL SOURCES OF THE LAWS OF WAR.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I present a report from the Committee on Printing, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. The report has to do with the printing of a document entitled "Constitutional Sources of the Laws of War," which was prepared by Mr. Horace L. B. Atkisson, of the bar of the District of Columbia. It is quite appropriate at this time, and I think it is worthy of being printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 100), as follows:

Resolved, That the manuscript submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] on June 9, 1917, entitled "Constitutional Sources of the Laws of War," by Horace L. B. Atkisson, of the Washington, D. C., bar, be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. SMOOT. Did the Senator from Florida ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the resolution ought to go over. There are four or five other documents which have been prepared, I think, on the same subject. When it has been decided as to the printing of one, I think it should be decided as to the printing of all of them.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. This is the only one, I think, on this subject.

Mr. PENROSE. I object to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. This is the only document on that subject, I will say to the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the resolution will be placed on the calendar.

STEAMSHIP "CALDERA."

Mr. HARDING. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 2469) to authorize the change of name of the steamship Caldera to A. T. Kinney, and I submit a report (No. 80) thereon. It is merely a formal matter, and I ask the Senate to consider and pass the bill at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed upon application of the owner, the Kinney Steamship Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, to change the name of the steamer Caldera, official number 204864, to A. T. Kinney.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARRY GRAHAM.

Mr. MYERS. I report unanimously from the Committee on Military Affairs, with an amendment, the bill (S. 1418) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Harry Graham captain of Infantry, and I submit a report (No. 78) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill. It is similar to the one which has just been passed and which was reported by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. The amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, in line 7, to strike out "as such next after Capt. John Randolph," and to insert "at the foot of the list of captains of Infantry," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States, in his discretion, be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, Harry Graham, formerly a captain of Infantry, a captain of Infantry, to take rank at the foot of the list of captains of Infantry; and that no back pay or allowances shall accrue as a result of the passage of this act, and there shall be no increase in the total number of captains of Infantry now authorized by law by reason of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUSPENSION OF MINING REGULATIONS.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 78. It is a war measure and has received the unanimous indorsement of the Committee on Mines and Mining. I think it will elicit no discussion whatever.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution for the consideration of which the Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) to suspend, during the present war with Germany, the requirement that not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made on each mining claim during each year for all owners who, in lieu of such assessment work, expend the sum of $100 or perform 25 days of labor in the raising or manufacturing of products necessary for the maintenance of the Army, Navy, or people of the United States, or pay into the Treasury of the United States $100.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining with an amendment, on page 2, line 9, after the numerals "$100," to strike out "or perform 25 days of labor," and, in line 13, after the name "United States," to insert "or shall perform 25 days of labor in any beneficial occupation," so as to read:

Resolved, etc., That in order that labor may be most effectively used in raising and producing those things needed in the prosecution of the present war with Germany, that provision of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States which requires on each mining claim located, and until a patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor to be performed or improvements to be made during each year, be, and the same is hereby, suspended during the present war with Germany: Provided, That the owner of each mining claim desiring to avail himself of the suspension hereby extended shall during each year expend, in lieu of such assessment work, the sum of $100 in the raising, producing, or manufacturing of products necessary for the maintenance and support of the Army, Navy, or people of the United States, or shall perform 25 days of labor in any beneficial occupation, or pay into the Treasury of the United States the sum of $100: Provided further, That on or before the 31st day of December of each year of said period of the war the owner of each of such mining claims shall file in the office of the county clerk and recorder of the county in which such mining claim is situated an affidavit that he has expended or paid such sum or performed such labor as is required herein, describing same, since the 1st day of January of that year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 22, to insert:

This act shall not be deemed to amend or repeal Senate joint resolution 33 of the Sixty-fifth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution to suspend, during the present war with Germany, the requirement that not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made on each mining claim during each year for all owners who, in lieu of such assessment work, expend the sum of $100 in the raising or manufacturing of products necessary for the maintenance of the Army, Navy, or people of the United States, or shall perform 25 days of labor in any beneficial occupation, or pay into the Treasury of the United States $100."

AMERICAN ACADEMY OF ENGINEERS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. From the Committee on the Judiciary, I report back favorably the bill (S. 2360) to incorporate the American Academy of Engineers. I ask permission of the Senate to file a written report later on when I have the time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted to file a written report later on, and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

EMPLOYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. THOMPSON. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably without amendment resolution 98, submitted by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] on the 7th instant, and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-fifth Congress to send for books and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee or any subcommittee thereof may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I ask unanimous consent to take from the calendar and to consider at this time the bill (S. 1553) to give effect to the convention between the United States and Great Britain for the protection of migratory birds concluded at Washington August 16, 1916, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. What is the request?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the migratory-bird convention bill.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It is a war measure.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I hope that just as soon as morning business is over the unfinished business will be taken up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business has not yet been concluded. Is there objection?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I object.

Mr. PENROSE. I object if it is going to lead to any debate, and I am informed that it will.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I could not hear the grounds of the objection of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I was informed that the bill which the Senator from Arizona desires to have considered at this time will lead to prolonged debate.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It can not consume more time than the morning hour, which will expire at 2 o'clock.

Mr. PENROSE. I understand that, but some of us have morning business to present, and we are desirous of doing so during the morning hour.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not wish to interrupt the morning business, but I give notice of my intention to call up the bill when the morning business shall have been concluded. I thought we had already concluded morning business.

Mr. PENROSE. Oh, no; not by any means.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Bills and joint resolutions are in order.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 2626) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Cooper; and

A bill (S. 2627) granting a pension to Sarah Ann Ross; to the Committee on Pensions.

ACTIVITIES OF COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC INFORMATION.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I have a resolution here which I am led to offer on account of the widespread criticism which has been made all over the country concerning the performance of the committee on public information. I desire here to refer to an editorial from the New York Times. I do not often interject quotations from a newspaper into a discussion in the Senate, but this is so entirely to the point that I will refer to it. The editorial says:

> There was a correspondent of the Associated Press aboard one of the ships of war acting as convoy for our troop transports in their recent voyage across the Atlantic.
>
> Upon his arrival in the European port of destination this correspondent sent a cable dispatch reporting that they had had "a smooth sea and an uneventful voyage."
>
> Yet the Fourth of July announcement prepared by Mr. George Creel and put forth by Secretary Daniels informed the American people that our transports were "twice attacked by German submarines on the way across."
>
> The first attack—

According to Mr. Creel's announcement—

> "was made in force"; our "high-seas convoy circling with their searchlights answered with heavy gunfire, and its accuracy stands proved by the fact that the torpedo discharge became increasingly scattered and inaccurate"; one U-boat "was certainly sunk, and there is reason to believe that the accurate fire of our gunners sent others to the bottom"; five torpedoes "were counted as they sped by bow and stern."
>
> There was a second attack beyond the rendezvous where the troopships met destroyers sent out from the other side, and "one submarine at least was sunk."
>
> The dispatch of the Associated Press correspondent announcing his safe arrival after an uneventful voyage is evidence against the theory that his sudden demise and burial at sea prevented his reporting these two spirited naval engagements.
>
> Did he sleep at ease through both? It must have been lethargy, not slumber, if the "heavy gunfire" of our high-sea convoy and the uproar, stir, and bustle necessarily incident to these naval battles failed to rouse him.
>
> Yet again stubbornly persisting in his resolve to ignore the battles which inspired Mr. Creel to apply his skill as an artist in elaboration and adornment to Admiral Gleaves' official report of the U-boat attacks this correspondent sent a second dispatch to the Associated Press on July 5 in which he brazenly said that "there was no submarine attack whatever, no torpedoes were seen, and there was no gunfiring at submarines from our destroyers."
>
> This mystery should be cleared up. We should suppose the Associated Press would be required by its members to undertake an investigation to determine just where its correspondent was during this "heavy gunfire" and why he failed to report the battle which so thrilled the soul of the chairman of the committee on public information.
>
> Was there a fight? Were there two fights or more than two? The American people do not know. They want very much to know.
>
> There is need for more investigations than one.
>
> It is manifestly the duty of Congress to inquire into the manner in which Mr. George Creel exercised his art upon the official dispatches received by the Secretary of the Navy and what basis there was for the "appropriate announcement on the eve of the Fourth of July," which was issued on the Secretary's authority.

Mr. President, knowing full well the inveterate tendency of the press to print war news with artistic embellishments and to take the slightest excuse of gunfire at a piece of wreckage of flotsam on the surface of the ocean as the destruction of a periscope, I am curious to know how the American correspondent lost his inborn enterprise and failed to report this battle or whether the battle was an hallucination of the Secretary of the Navy and the chairman of the committee on public information. Therefore, Mr. President, I have prepared a resolution, which is short, and as I have hastily written it in my own hand I will not tax the ingenuity of the Secretary to read it, but will read it myself. It is as follows:

Senate resolution 101.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to send to the Senate copies of official dispatches, including the report of Admiral Gleaves, relating to the alleged encounter of the American fleet with submarines, as described in a statement issued under the authority of Mr. George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information; and he is further directed to furnish the Senate with the names of all persons employed by such Committee on Public Information, and the salaries received by them, and the character of the duties performed by each, together with a full statement of the rules regulating press censorship, and the reason for the frequent changes in the same, especially concerning cable messages.

I ask that the resolution go over and be printed, and I wish to give notice that to-morrow, should there be a morning hour, I shall ask for its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over and be printed.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar No. 61, being the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 17) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. I do this because within the last few days in debate Senators have announced that they would like to have this question settled, and the best way to settle it is to submit this amendment to the States. I believe the mind of every Member of the Senate is made up upon it, and I think all will be glad to vote on the question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. PENROSE. What is the proposed amendment to the Constitution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States as provided by the Constitution:

"ARTICLE —.

"SECTION 1. The manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, and the exportation thereof from, the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes are hereby prohibited.

"SEC. 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation, and nothing in this article shall deprive the several States of their power to enact and enforce laws prohibiting the traffic in intoxicating liquors."

Mr. PENROSE. I object to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. Are there further concurrent or other resolutions? If not, morning business is closed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on July 9, 1917, approved and signed the following joint resolution:

S. J. Res. 67. Joint resolution to fix the status and rights of officers of the Public Health Service when serving with the Coast Guard, the Army, or the Navy.

PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1553, to give effect to the convention between the United States and Great Britain for the protection of migratory birds concluded at Washington, August 16, 1916, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1553. All in favor of the motion will say "aye."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Those opposed will say "no."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to be heard.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator can not be heard on a motion of this kind.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Can I not offer a substitute for it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the Senator can not offer a substitute for it. The Chair was proceeding in order. All in favor of the motion of the Senator from Arizona will say "aye." [A pause.] Those opposed will say "no." [A pause.] The Chair can not decide.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when Mr. HUGHES's name was called). I announce the absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. ROBINSON (when Mr. KIRBY's name was called). I announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague, the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], which I transfer to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]. In his absence I withdraw my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is absent. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. FERNALD. I have a pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], but I understand that on this matter he would vote as I do. I vote "yea."

Mr. McCUMBER (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe that my pair, the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], is absent. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], is absent on account of illness.

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the negative). I wish to inquire if the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. OVERMAN. Having a general pair with him, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BECKHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). As the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] has not voted, and I have a general pair with him, I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. JAMES (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe that the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], with whom I have a pair, has not voted. I transfer my pair with him to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is detained from the Senate on important business.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is detained from the Senate on official business. He is paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY].

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS—40.

Ashurst	Hitchcock	New	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	Husting	Norris	Smith, Mich.
Beckham	James	Page	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Kendrick	Penrose	Sterling
Fernald	Lewis	Pittman	Swanson
Fletcher	Lodge	Poindexter	Thompson
France	McKellar	Ransdell	Tillman
Frelinghuysen	McLean	Robinson	Townsend
Gerry	Myers	Shafroth	Underwood
Harding	Nelson	Shields	Wadsworth

NAYS—25.

Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	McNary	Smith, Ga.
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Martin	Smoot
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Pomerene	Trammell
Gore	Kellogg	Reed	Walsh
Gronna	Kenyon	Sheppard
Hardwick	King	Sherman
Johnson, Cal.	La Follette	Simmons

NOT VOTING—31.

Brady	Gallinger	Newlands	Thomas
Brandegee	Goff	Overman	Vardaman
Broussard	Hale	Owen	Warren
Calder	Hollis	Phelan	Watson
Colt	Hughes	Saulsbury	Weeks
Cummins	Kirby	Smith, Md.	Williams
Dillingham	Knox	Stone	Wolcott
Fall	McCumber	Sutherland

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1553) to give effect to the convention between the United States and Great Britain for the protection of migratory birds concluded at Washington, August 16, 1916, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] on page 3, lines 15, 16, and 17, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On lines 15, 16, and 17, of page 3, the Senator from Idaho proposes the following amendment:

On line 15, strike out the word "without" and insert the word "upon."

After the word "warrant," insert the words "duly issued."

On line 16, strike out the words "other than" and insert a comma and the word "including."

On lines 16 and 17, strike out "and, with warrant, to search any dwelling."

So that if amended the sentence will read:

Any such employees shall have authority, upon warrant duly issued, to search any place, including a dwelling, if he shall have reason to suspect that there is concealed therein any bird—

And so forth.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I voted in the negative on this question, not because I have any particular objection to this bill, but the unfinished business of the Senate is the food-control bill and I believe it is more important to take up that bill during the morning hour than to take up this bill. I am quite sure that this bill will at least occupy the morning hour, because I understand there is considerable opposition to it, and for that reason I opposed taking it up at this time.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona obtained the floor.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Certainly.

Mr. McLEAN. I understand that the amendment that has just been stated by the Secretary is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. McLEAN. I will say that after consultation with the Senator from Idaho the other day we agreed upon an amendment, which I think the chairman of the committee has in his possession. The Senator from Idaho is not present, but he told me that if the amendment which the chairman of the committee had should be offered he would accept it as a substitute for his amendment.

Mr. BORAH entered the Chamber.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, carrying out the purpose of the Senator from Idaho in his proposed amendment, and to meet the very reasonable objection of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] as to the issuance of warrant before arrest in these cases, I wish to propose the following amendment as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Idaho, or if he will withdraw his amendment I will then offer this one.

On line 14, page 3, after the words "United States," insert:

That any warrant necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of this act or any regulation made thereunder shall be issued by the several judges of the courts established under the laws of the United States and the United States commissioners, within their respective jurisdictions, upon proper oath or affirmation showing probable cause for the issuance of such warrant.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I understand this amendment, it strikes out all after the words "United States," in line 14, on page 3, down to the word "All," the last word on that page, on line 25, and inserts in lieu thereof: "That any warrant necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of this act or any regulation made thereunder shall be issued by the several judges of the courts established under the laws of the United States and the United States commissioners within their respective jurisdictions upon proper oath or affirmation, showing probable cause for the issuance of such warrant."

That is to take the place of the clause which reads as follows:

Any such employees shall have authority, without warrant, to search any place other than a dwelling, and, with warrant to search any dwelling, if he shall have reason to suspect that there is concealed therein any bird, or any part, nest, or egg thereof, which has been captured, killed, taken, shipped, transported, or carried, or which is possessed contrary to the provisions of this act or of any regulation made pursuant thereto. The several judges of the courts established under the laws of the United States and United States commissioners may within their respective jurisdictions, upon proper oath or affirmation showing probable cause, issue warrants in all such cases.

I have no objection to that amendment taking the place of that provision.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand that the Senator from Idaho withdraws his amendment?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the form of the amendment as offered by the Senator does not embrace a proposition to strike out the words beginning with "Any," on line 14, does it?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes; my motion is to strike out all that section and to insert.

Mr. REED. I did not understand it that way. I should like to have the Secretary state just the form in which the amendment is offered.

The SECRETARY. Beginning on page 3, line 14, after the words "United States," it is proposed to strike out all of the bill down to and including the words "in all such cases," on line 25, page 3, and to insert in lieu thereof the matter already read.

Mr. REED. That certainly improves the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Arizona will not try to force this bill through in the morning hour. We have the food-control bill here and the attention of the Senate is riveted upon it. There can be no proper attention given to this bill at this time. If it is going to be forced through Congress I want an opportunity to offer amendments to it, and I am not prepared to do that this morning. There are a great many things that I want to submit. For instance, section 3 undertakes to confer upon the Secretary of Agriculture authority from time to time to make regulations governing the time when game may be killed.

Mr. President, I am opposed not only now in reference to this bill, but I am opposed as a general proposition to conferring power of that kind upon an agent of the Government. The attempt at the enforcement of the present alleged law by the Secretary of Agriculture furnishes a very good illustration of the objections to which this class of legislation is subject.

To begin with, of course the Secretary of Agriculture does not himself know anything about what is going on, what the rules and regulations are with reference to matters of this kind. He probably is as ignorant of them at the present hour as almost any man in the Senate may be, and that is a somewhat extreme degree of ignorance in reference to regulations of that department.

A little examination by the Committee on Agriculture with reference to the method of enforcing the present game law develops the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture has turned this important matter over to a department head. I have forgotten what the name of that department is. That gentleman knew that he did not know anything about the climate or habitat of birds or when they should be taken or when they should not be taken. So he proceeded to organize an advisory board composed of men not in any way connected with the Government. Most of those gentlemen live in New York. Some of the gentlemen who live in New York had probably been out West and some of them probably have not been out West. This board of private citizens, some of whom had axes to grind, proceeded to make the rules and to specify when the citizens of States of the Union might or might not take game. They made their own arbitrary zone. They undertook to say that it would be a jail offense or a finable offense if a citizen of a State would shoot birds upon the north side of a certain line, an imaginary line drawn on a map, or an imaginary map, on a given day, and that it would be perfectly legitimate to shoot the same birds on the south side of that line on the same day. These regulations made by private parties were O. K'd by the Secretary of Agriculture and it was undertaken to set them up as the law of the land.

Now, this bill contains the same vice. It will be enforced, I take it, in the same way. Section 3 proposes to turn these powers over to the Secretary of Agriculture for the creation of zones, to tell white men when and where they can hunt, to make it a crime for a man to shoot game on his own farm or to make it perfectly legal to shoot it on his own farm; according to the sweet will of some gentlemen in New York who are not even connected with the Government, but whose ruling is accepted by the Secretary of Agriculture.

When a Secretary of Agriculture does a thing of that kind I have no hesitancy in saying that he is doing a thing that is utterly indefensible, and that the Secretary of Agriculture who does do it ought to be driven from office. And yet it was done. The discretion thus put in the Secretary of Agriculture, which we undertook to vest in him, was turned over for all practical purposes to private citizens, most of whom reside in New York. That does not make any difference to the Senate. The Senate will vote this power perhaps, but not this morning.

I ask that the bill be laid aside, and that we go on with the regular business of the Senate. You are not going to gain any time; you are going to waste an hour.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the food-control bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). It is moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business, which is House bill 4961.

Mr. McLEAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hitchcock	New	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	Husting	Newlands	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	James	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overman	Smoot
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Sterling
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Swanson
Dillingham	Kenyon	Poindexter	Thompson
Fernald	King	Pomerene	Underwood
France	Lewis	Reed	Wadsworth
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Robinson	Warren
Gerry	McCumber	Shafroth	Watson
Gronna	McKellar	Sheppard	Williams
Hale	McLean	Sherman
Harding	McNary	Shields
Hardwick	Martin	Simmons

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is detained from the Senate on official business. He is paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Fifty-seven Senators having answered to their names, the Chair announces that a quorum is present. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to proceed to the consideration of House bill 4961.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Because of my general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], which I transfer to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] and vote "nay."

Mr. SHAFROTH (when the name of Mr. THOMAS was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of illness, and will state that he is paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], and in his absence I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BECKHAM. I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] to the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (after having voted in the affirmative). Again announcing the transfer of my pair, I desire to have my vote stand.

Mr. GERRY. I have a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "yea."

Mr. HUSTING. I wish to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], and to state that he is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

Mr. BRADY. I desire to inquire if the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. BRADY. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi. I do not see him in the Chamber, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire whether the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have a pair with that Senator, but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] and will change my vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is detained from the Senate on official business. He is paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY].

Mr. REED. What is the result of the vote, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the motion of the Senator from Missouri to proceed to the consideration of the food-control bill the yeas are 22 and the nays are 32.

The roll call resulted—yeas 22, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—22.

Chamberlain	Kenyon	Overman	Swanson
Gerry	King	Pittman	Thompson
Gronna	La Follette	Reed	Warren
Johnson, S. Dak.	McNary	Robinson	Williams
Jones, Wash.	Martin	Sheppard
Kendrick	Norris	Smith, Ga.

NAYS—32.

Ashurst	Harding	New	Smith, Ariz.
Beckham	Hitchcock	Page	Smith, Mich.
Brandegee	Husting	Penrose	Smith, S. C.
Broussard	Jones, N. Mex.	Poindexter	Sterling
Fernald	Lewis	Ransdell	Tillman
France	Lodge	Shafroth	Townsend
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Shields	Wadsworth
Hale	McLean	Simmons	Watson

NOT VOTING—42.

Bankhead	Gallinger	McCumber	Stone
Borah	Goff	Myers	Sutherland
Brady	Gore	Nelson	Thomas
Calder	Hardwick	Newlands	Trammell
Colt	Hollis	Owen	Underwood
Culberson	Hughes	Phelan	Vardaman
Cummins	James	Pomerene	Walsh
Curtis	Johnson, Cal.	Saulsbury	Weeks
Dillingham	Kellogg	Sherman	Wolcott
Fall	Kirby	Smith, Md.
Fletcher	Knox	Smoot

So Mr. REED's motion was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to an article appearing in one of the morning papers of date of July 7, under the date line "Fort Sheridan, Ill., July 7," as follows:

Julius Rosenwald, of the National Council of Defense, yesterday told men in training here for Army commissions that the council's purchasing committee would go right ahead awarding contracts, despite the attitude of Congress. He said Congress possibly was jealous of the committee's powers and had attempted to legislate it out of existence.

"Congress," continued Mr. Rosenwald, "apparently is working on the theory that nobody is honest except its own Members, especially business men who have something to sell. We will go right ahead awarding contracts until the council is legislated out of existence or the President changes the personnel of the committee."

The Senate will remember the article that was placed in the RECORD a few days ago, in which Mr. Rosenwald was quoted as declaring, in substance and effect, that the Members of Congress were a lot of foolish people, whose opinions were not entitled to very much consideration. That, of course, was not Mr. Rosenwald's exact language, but I think it is rather a mild statement of his views. Now comes this further statement, at least according to the newspaper account; and as this account is not said to have been censored, it is entitled to the ordinary degree of credence.

It appears that Mr. Rosenwald's further opinion of Congress is as stated in the interview, and that the commission proposes to go straight ahead to do exactly as it pleases, disregarding the attitude of Congress. This man, who has been recognized by some sort of an appointment for a few days, now tells the country that Congress is possibly jealous of the committee's power.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that it seems to me it might be of interest to the gentleman who gave out the interview to the effect that he would proceed regardless of the criticisms of Congress to read section 1783 of the Revised Statutes, an act passed in 1863, during the Civil War. I have not investigated the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at that time to see whether the passage of that act was brought about by any scandal or speculating at the expense of the Government or not, but it is pertinent that it was enacted during the Civil War at the time when things of this kind might have prevailed. I will ask that the section be read by the Secretary.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator from Tennessee. I have some other authorities, including that one, which I have just sent for, but I am glad to have the Senator call attention to that section of the statutes, and I ask that it be read. Before it is read, however, I call the attention of the Senators who are present, as indeed the Senator from Tennessee has already called their attention, to the fact that it has been found advisable in the past, in other wars, to pass some laws relating to Army contractors. I shall have something more to say when the section is read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Rev. Stat., 2d ed., 1878, p. 316, Mar. 2, 1863, chap. 67, sec. 5, vol. 12, p. 698.]

SEC. 1783. No officer or agent of any banking or other commercial corporation, and no member of any trading firm, or person directly or indirectly interested in the pecuniary profits or contracts of any such corporation or firm, shall be employed or shall act as an officer or agent of the United States for the transaction of business with such corporation or firm; and every such officer, agent, or member or person so interested who so acts shall be imprisoned not more than two years and fined not more than $2,000 nor less than $500.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator if in the interview Mr. Rosenwald says they are going ahead making these contracts?

Mr. REED. What part of the article is interview and what part of it is the comment of the newspaper man—that is, as to what part Mr. Rosenwald is quoted accurately or absolutely on and what is the newspaper man's inference—I am unable to say, but the article reads:

Julius Rosenwald, of the National Council of Defense, yesterday told men in training here—for Army commissions that the council's purchasing committee would go right ahead awarding contracts despite the attitude of Congress.

That is, at Fort Sheridan, Ill.—

Mr. KENYON. Right there, does the Senator understand that this advisory commission makes contracts in any way? I do not know. It has been stated here upon the floor that they do nothing but advise; and I wondered where the gentleman assumed to get the authority to make these contracts.

Mr. REED. I think they do make contracts, to all intents and purposes. I suppose that the contracts are, in fact, signed by some officer of the Government other than them. I think that men like Mr. Rosenwald and the men occupying a position similar to his are, in fact, officers of the Government. Let me call the attention of the Senate to the language of the act:

SEC. 2. That a Council of National Defense is hereby established for the coordination of industries and resources for the national security and welfare, to consist of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor.

That the Council of National Defense shall nominate to the President, and the President shall appoint, an advisory commission, consisting of not more than seven persons, each of whom shall have special knowledge of some industry, public utility, or the development of some natural resource, or be otherwise specially qualified, in the opinion of the council, for the performance of the duties hereinafter provided. The members of the advisory commission shall serve without compensation but shall be allowed actual expenses of travel and subsistence when attending meetings of the commission or engaged in investigations pertaining to its activities. The advisory commission shall hold such meetings as shall be called by the council or be provided by the rules and regulations adopted by the council for the conduct of its work.

That creates a Council of National Defense and then gives authority to appoint an advisory commission, the members of which are to be appointed by the President upon the recommendation of the Council of National Defense. I think that makes them officers of the Government.

The law continues—

That it shall be the duty of the Council of National Defense to supervise and direct investigations and make recommendations to the President and the heads of executive departments as to the location of railroads with reference to the frontier of the United States so as to render possible expeditious concentration of troops and supplies to points of defense; the coordination of military, industrial, and commercial purposes in the location of extensive highways and branch lines of railroad; the utilization of waterways; the mobilization of military and naval resources for defense; the increase of domestic production of articles and materials essential to the support of armies and of the people during the interruption of foreign commerce; the development of seagoing transportation; data as to amounts, location, method and means of production, and availability of military supplies; the giving of information to producers and manufacturers as to the class of supplies needed by the military and other services of the Government, the requirements relating thereto, and the creation of relations which will render possible in time of need the immediate concentration and utilization of the resources of the Nation.

That the Council of National Defense shall adopt rules and regulations for the conduct of its work, which rules and regulations shall be subject to the approval of the President, and shall provide for the work of the advisory commission to the end that the special knowledge of such commission may be developed by suitable investigation, research, and inquiry and made available in conference and report for the use of the council; and the council may organize subordinate bodies for its assistance in special investigations, either by the employment of experts or by the creation of committees of specially qualified persons to serve without compensation, but to direct the investigations of experts so employed.

So now you have this situation—the Council of National Defense, the advisory commission of the Council of National Defense, and then subcommittees created by the Council of National Defense, subordinate bodies. That gives to these gentlemen an official character. While they are given very considerable powers it will be noticed that they are nowhere given power here to make contracts. If they were given power to make contracts, a different proposition would be presented. Now, if they assume to enter upon that duty while holding these official positions, acting either as the official representatives of their corporations or as the representatives of the Government while holding these official positions, I claim that they come within the provisions of this act to which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] has already called attention; and I want to read it now in connection with what I have just said:

No officer or agent of any banking or other commercial corporation, and no member of any mercantile or trading firm, or person directly or indirectly interested in the pecuniary profits or contracts of such corporation or firm shall be employed or shall act as an officer or agent of the United States for the transaction of business with such corporation or firm; and every such officer, agent, or member, or person so interested who so acts shall be imprisoned not more than two years, and fined not more than $2,000 nor less than $500.

Now, how can it be said that these gentlemen are not acting when they meet and advise that a certain contract should be made, and that that contract should be made with a concern in which they are pecuniarily interested? I commend to the gentlemen engaged in the making of this contract an examination of this statute.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. As the time is getting short, I was wondering to what particular section of the migratory-bird bill the argument of the Senator is now being applied..

Mr. REED. I think I shall be able to apply it. It is another illustration of loose legislation and loose delegation of power.

Recently we undertook to allow the creation of a large number of boards without any supervision of those boards by the Congress of the United States, and immediately we find that a lot of gentlemen are willing to assert their right to make contracts with themselves for their own enrichment; and now comes the distinguished Senator from Arizona with a bill in which he proposes to give the Secretary of Agriculture the right not only to name all the agents for the enforcement of the law, but to divide the United States of America into zones or districts, and to say that it shall be a crime punishable by fine and imprisonment to do a certain thing in one of those zones upon a certain day, but that it shall be perfectly legitimate to do the same thing in the adjoining zone on the same day. You undertake to confer upon the Secretary of Agriculture the authority to say that west of the Missouri-Kansas line it shall be unlawful to shoot ducks on the 1st day of June, but that upon the east side of that line it shall be lawful to shoot ducks upon the 1st day of June. You undertake to confer upon a man this discretion which ought to be exercised by the law-making authority, and then that individual proceeds to organize an advisory council. It was out of the consideration of that proposed advisory council which he organizes that my thought naturally drifted to the Advisory Commission which has been created down here, and which consists of the men who are making contracts with themselves. This advisory council is to consist of a lot of interested gentlemen, a number of whom are interested in powder factories and in the making of shotguns that are sold to the sportsmen of this country; and these institutions are financing this propaganda that has manifested itself in so many letters and telegrams to Members of Congress. I think if you will investigate you will find that the arms companies of this country have a good deal more interest in this legislation than almost any other class of people; and I am opposed to any more legislation that will confer upon any officer of this Government the power and authority that ought to be exercised by the law-making body itself.

Of course everybody respects Secretary Houston. I do not know whether or not he ever shot a bird in his life. I do not know whether he ever went hunting in his life. He might be like a certain Secretary of War I once heard of, who admitted that he never had fired a gun in his life. But Secretary Houston does not do this work. He does not create these zones. He turns it over to subordinates. The man who has had the creation of the zones under the present national game law is in one of the departments. I have forgotten what that department is. That individual knew that he did not know how to make these zones; he knew that he was ignorant as to the habits of birds and as to their seasons; so, as I said a little while ago, he got some gentlemen to act as an advisory committee. It is the parallel between that advisory committee, which is made up of interested parties, at least in part, and the Advisory Commission which has been created under the bill which we passed here on August 29, 1916, that caused my mind to revert to Mr. Rosenwald, and hence I put in Mr. Rosenwald's most recent statement.

I say to the Senator that I do not think this legislation ought to be forced upon Congress when it is well known that the proposition as to the Government's jurisdiction is involved in a case now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States. If that decision sustains the decision of the district court of Arkansas—a decision which was concurred in by two other Federal judges, not in the same case, but the same principle being cited—then this statute which the Senator from Arizona has brought forward would be clearly illegal in some of its parts, though it might be legal in some other parts. I can not understand why the proponents of this legislation are not willing to wait until the Supreme Court of the United States has determined the question. If the Supreme Court of the United States reverses all the decisions that have ever been rendered and the law as it has been written in the text books and in the decisions and holds that game is not the property of the States, but that it is the property of the Nation—if that sort of decision is rendered by the Supreme Court, then, Mr. President, my contest is ended. You can go on and pass any kind of law that you want to pass, and I shall have nothing further to say. But why, pending the decision of that case, should this impatient and determined effort be made to pass laws that may be wiped out when that decision is rendered?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me for the balance of the time, I shall not press the bill further after concluding what I have to say on it, unless the Senator merely wishes to keep the floor.

Mr. REED. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator with that understanding.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, in the brief time between now and the closing of the morning hour I shall not attempt to go into the defense of any assault that has been made on the bill, especially in the last half or quarter of an hour of my friend's argument. As the RECORD will show, it is extremely embarrassing for me, coming to defend this bill, to find myself carried so far to sea that it would be an easy matter to submarine one long before he got halfway home.

This is a bill of an importance that the Senator from Missouri has failed to see, in my judgment. We have made a treaty with Canada about this game law. I have before me a telegram from Ottawa, Ontario, dated June 19, from C. Gordon Hewitt to Mr. Nelson, of the Biological Survey of the Department of Agriculture, in this city:

Answering your telegram, we expect our migratory-birds convention act will be passed during the present session of Parliament. Everything will be done to expedite its enactment, notwithstanding the fact that the Government and Parliament have war measures of grave importance under consideration. Please advise what progress your enabling act is making.

C. GORDON HEWITT.

In response to one or two things, where the Senator from Missouri touched the outskirts of the bill, I should like to have read at the desk resolutions adopted by the National Association of Game and Fish Commissioners. This is not the Secretary of Agriculture; it is a national association of those people engaged in the laudable purpose of preserving the life of the fast-disappearing migratory birds, whose life is so essential not only to the growth of the crops and the life of the trees but in many other respects easily to be set forth whenever the matter is before the Senate for actual discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF GAME AND FISH COMMISSIONERS.

At a meeting of the executive committee of the National Association of Game and Fish Commissioners, held at Washington, D. C., on the 13th day of June, 1917—present M. L. Alexander, Carlos Avery, John P. Woods, J. Quincy Ward, George H. Graham, and W. E. Barber—the following resolution was unanimous adopted:

"Whereas there is pending in Congress a bill (S. 1553; H. R. 2612) to give effect to the migratory-bird treaty between the United States and Great Britain for the protection of migratory game and insectivorious birds in the United States and Canada; and

"Whereas the conservation and protection of the migratory insectivorous birds is so closely related to the conservation of the food, cotton, and timber crops of the country, and the migratory game birds constitute an important source of the food supply, the conservation of which is so necessary to the success of the United States and her allies in the war upon which we are now engaged: Therefore be it

"Resolved, It is the sense of the executive committee of the National Association of Game and Fish Commissioners that the said bill is, and should be, considered as an important war measure, and we respectfully recommend the immediate passage of said bill by Congress as one of the most effective means of conserving the resources so necessary for the welfare of the country; and be it

"Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States, to each Member in Congress, and to the Secretary of Agriculture."

M. L. ALEXANDER, President.
CARLOS AVERY, Secretary.
JNO. P. WOODS, Treasurer.
W. E. BARBER.
J. QUINCY WARD.
GEO. H. GRAHAM.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I have put that in the RECORD for two purposes: First, to show that it is not a mere effort of the Agricultural Department to assume extraordinary powers, but a concerted effort of those men who know the importance of this legislation, who are not exactly like our friend of other years, that friend of the world, Frederick the Great. We are informed by history that this worthy, in a fit of passion, because a flock of sparrows had pecked at some of his cherries, ordered every small bird that could be searched out to be instantly killed. Within two years his cherry trees, though bare of fruit, were weighted down with a splendid crop of caterpillars.

Any man that will take the history of the insectivorous birds and the amount of destruction they do to the ruinous insect life feeding on the plants and trees of this country, it seems to me, would stop any opposition to this bill. Nobody is trying to do anything here except to keep pothunters from killing game out of season, ruining the eggs of nesting birds, and ruining the country by it. Enough birds will keep every insect off of every tree in America, and if you will quit shooting them they will do it.

Now, Mr. President, the hour of 2 o'clock having about arrived, and inasmuch as I have taken this opportunity to say all I shall say now or hereafter in any proceedings on the bill, I submit for what it is worth for the consideration of my colleagues here as an addendum an argument made before the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the United States, plaintiff in error, against Harvey C. Shauver, the case to which the Senator referred. The brief of the appellant in that case sets forth the historical facts to which I have alluded.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF CASE.

This is a criminal proceeding against Harvey C. Shauver upon an indictment alleging the unlawful killing of "three coots, genus Rallidæ, the same being migratory birds," in violation of the so-called migratory bird law approved March 4, 1913 (c. 145, 37 Stat., 828, 847).

Defendant filed a demurrer to the indictment averring the act to be invalid because unauthorized by the Federal Constitution. Upon the hearing the demurrer was sustained and the indictment quashed. (Record, p. 6; 214 Fed., 154.) Motion for rehearing was duly filed, and, after being entertained by the court, denied. (Record, p. 13; 214 Fed., 154, 160.)

The case comes to this court from the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Arkansas by writ of error in accordance with the criminal appeals act of March 2, 1907 (c. 2564, 34 Stat., 1246).

The material portions of the migratory bird law are as follows:

"All wild geese, wild swans, brant, wild ducks, snipe, plover, woodcock, rail, wild pigeons, and all other migratory game and insectivorous birds which in their northern and southern migrations pass through or do not remain permanently the entire year within the borders of any State or Territory, shall hereafter be deemed to be within the custody and protection of the Government of the United States, and shall not be destroyed or taken contrary to regulations hereinafter provided therefor.

"The Department of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to adopt suitable regulations to give effect to the previous paragraph by prescribing and fixing closed seasons, having due regard to the zones of temperature, breeding habits, and times and line of migratory flight, thereby enabling the department to select and designate suitable districts for different portions of the country, and it shall be unlawful to shoot or by any device kill or seize and capture migratory birds within the protection of this law during said closed seasons, and any person who shall violate any of the provisions or regulations of this law for the protection of migratory birds shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not more than $100 or imprisoned not more than 90 days, or both, in the discretion of the court."

Suitable regulations were promulgated by the Department of Agriculture, and the killing of the birds was in violation thereof.

SPECIFICATION OF ERROR.

The assignments of error appear on pages 15 and 16 of the record. They allege that the court erred in holding the law unconstitutional and in dismissing the indictment.

ARGUMENT.

The sole question presented in this case is the constitutionality of the act. The Government maintains that it is authorized by paragraph 2, section 3, Article IV, and paragraph 3, section 8, Article I, of the Constitution.

I. The migratory bird law is authorized by the second paragraph of section 3 of Article IV of the Constitution, which provides: "The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States."

That the ownership of wild game is in the sovereign is a legal principle founded entirely on interpretation given to the common law. In no instance does it rest on any statute or other written declaration of the sovereign.

In this case the question is what sovereign owns the migratory wild life in the United States, whether the Nation as a whole or the several States. On account of the peculiar dual nature of our Government, decisions other than our own are not very helpful in determining conflicts between Federal and State rights and powers. Therefore the decisions of foreign courts will not assist us except in establishing the principle that such ownership is in the sovereign, a conclusion reached by the courts of all nations. (Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S., 519.)

The question of ownership of wild game has arisen in this country only in cases which did not involve claim of ownership in the United States Government or the distinction between migratory animals and those local to a particular State. In several cases the courts have referred to these questions, but in each instance expressly declined to pass on them, leaving them open for future determination, as was done by this court in the cases of The Abby Dodge (223 U. S., 166), and Manchester v. Massachusetts (139 U. S., 240).

The question presented in this case, therefore, is an original one involving the nature and source of property rights, and this decision, being the first of its kind, must declare the common law determining such rights, and may do so upon principle, uninfluenced by supposed authority.

"* * * The first statement presents the principle as certainly as the last. Multiplication of declarations merely adds certainty. For, after all, the common law is but the accumulated expressions of the various judicial tribunals in their efforts to ascertain what is right and just." (Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U. S., 46, 97.)

The question involved being justiciable and necessarily one of common law, the court in this case must declare "what is right and just" in this particular matter, based upon present-day conditions.

"Constitutional provisions do not change, but their operation extends to new matters as the modes of business and the habits of life of the people vary with each succeeding generation." (In re Debs, 158 U. S., 564, 591.)

Let us then examine this common-law principle of the sovereign's title to animals feræ naturæ and endeavor to apply it to present conditions in the United States, keeping in mind that the people is the sovereign.

Animals feræ naturæ are common property, belonging, by the law of nature, in common to all citizens of the sovereignty. This has been recognized from time immemorial, not only by common-law writers, but also by the civilians.

"Like recognition of the fundamental principle [common ownership] upon which the property in game rests has led to similar history and identical results in the common law of Germany, in the law of Austria, Italy, and, indeed, it may be safely said in the law of all the countries of Europe. (St. Joseph Concordance, vol. 1, p. 68.) The common law of England also based property in game upon the principle of common ownership, and therefore treated it as subject to governmental authority." (Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S., 519, 526.)

"Thus it appears by the common law that a property in those living creatures which, by reason of their swiftness or fierceness, were not naturally under the power of man, was gained by the mere caption or seizure of them, and that all men had an equal right to hunt and kill them." (Vol. 4, Bacon's Abridgment, title, "Game," p. 435.)

"Whilst the fundamental principles upon which the common property in game rests have undergone no change, the development of free institutions has led to the recognition of the fact that the power or control lodged in the State, resulting from this common ownership, is to be exercised, like all other powers of government, as a trust for the benefit of the people, and not as a prerogative for the advantage of the Government, as distinct from the people, or for the benefit of private individuals as distinguished from the public good. Therefore, for the purpose of exercising this power, the State, as held by this court in Martin v. Waddell (16 Pet., 410), represents its people, and the ownership is that of the people in their united sovereignty." (Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S., 519, 529.)

"Here [in the United States] the sovereign power is in the people, and the principle, founded upon reason and justice, obtains, that by the law of nature every man, of whatever rank or station, has an equal right of taking, for his own use, all creatures fit for food that are wild by nature, so long as he does no injury to another's right." (Sterling v. Jackson, 69 Mich., 488.)

The property being common to all citizens, each has the same right to its enjoyment. That this right may be safeguarded and rendered available to all the common law vests the title to animals feræ naturæ in the Government in trust for the people "in order to protect them from undue destruction, so that the right of the common owners, the public, to reduce to possession may be ultimately efficaciously enjoyed." (Ohio Oil Co. v. Indiana, 177 U. S., 190, 210.)

The only reason or purpose subserved by so placing the title is that the common property may be protected and controlled. If there is no government which has power to protect, there is no reason for a trustee, and the title, as well as the beneficial ownership, may well rest in the people. The Government's title, therefore, to animals feræ naturæ has its source in and depends upon its ability to protect and control same for the benefit of all. This being true, the common law, in case of conflict, will uphold the title of that Government which has the superior power to protect and control such property for the benefit of its common owners.

Let us apply this principle to our peculiar system of governments within a government.

The State, in contradistinction to the United States, has for the benefit of, and in trust for, its people ownership of all wild animals remaining permanently within its territorial limits. Having entire control over such animals, the State can protect and conserve them by its laws for all of its people. From this power of control and protection the common law, as interpreted by both Federal and State courts, has deduced State ownership of animals feræ naturæ.

In the case of migratory wild life, however, the several States have not such control or power over same as renders possible its protection by the States for the benefit of the people. While such animals are on other territory than their own they have absolutely no power over them and can not enter into treaties with other Governments for their protection, or even make agreements concerning the same among themselves, without consent of Congress. For the greater part of the time a particular State has, therefore, because of express provisions of the Constitution, no power to control or protect migratory wild life. The Federal Government alone can protect and regulate at all times animals feræ naturæ remaining permanently within the limits of the United States, yet migrating over several States, and is also the only Government which can enter into treaties with foreign countries where such animals migrate beyond the limits of the United States. Therefore, by reasoning from this exclusive power analogous to that which vests title to local game in the State, the common law should declare ownership of migratory birds to be in the United States as trustee for all the people.

"* * * There is a domain which the States can not reach and over which Congress alone has power; and if such power be exerted to control what the States can not, it is an argument for, not against, its legality. Its exertion does not encroach upon the jurisdiction of the States." (Hoke v. United States, 227 U. S., 308, 321.)

"Our dual form of Government has its perplexities, State and Nation having different spheres of jurisdiction, as we have said, but it must be kept in mind that we are one people; and the powers reserved to the States and those conferred on the Nation are adapted to be exercised, whether independently or concurrently, to promote the general welfare, material and moral." (Hoke v. United States, 227 U. S., 308, 322.)

"The genius and character of the whole Government seem to be that its action is to be applied to all the external concerns of the Nation, and to those internal concerns which affect the States generally, but not to those which are completely within a particular State, which do not affect other States, and with which it is not necessary to interfere for the purpose of executing some of the general powers of the Government." (Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat., 1, 195.)

This common law interpretation of property rights fits in with our constitutional system of enumerated powers. When the Constitution of the United States was ratified a new and distinct sovereignty and people were created. This new Government emanated from the people and not from the States as such.

"Its powers are granted by them and are to be exercised directly on them, and for their benefit. * * * It is the Government of all: its powers are delegated by all; it represents all and acts for all." (McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat., 316, 405.)

By ratifying the Constitution the people expressly delegated to the Federal Government the exclusive right to protect wild life by treaties with foreign nations and at the same time withdrew from the States the right, without the consent of Congress, to make among themselves agreements for such purpose, thus vesting in Congress the ultimate control and protection of same. By thus stripping the States of all power to protect migratory wild life for the greater part of the time, and expressly granting such power to the Federal Government, the people, by necessary implication from these express grants and the nature of the property, changed their trustee and vested the title to all migratory animals feræ naturæ in the Federal Government in trust for themselves, the people of the United States and the common owners of such animals.

By analogous reasoning, this court seems to have upheld the constitutionality of a statute enacted for the protection of Indians.

"The power of the General Government over these remnants of a race once powerful, now weak and diminished in numbers, is necessary to their protection, as well as to the safety of those among whom they dwell. It must exist in that Government, because it never has existed anywhere else, because the theater of its exercise is within the geographical limits of the United States, because it has never been denied, and because it alone can enforce its laws on all the tribes." (United States v. Kagama, 118 U. S., 375, 384–385.)

The principle announced in the Kagama case has been repeatedly upheld and the above excerpt has been quoted with approval by this court in the following cases: United States v. Sandoval (231 U. S., 28, 46); Tiger v. Western Investment Co. (221 U. S., 286, 312); Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock (187 U. S., 553, 566, 567); Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas Ry. Co. (135 U. S., 641, 655); United States v. Thomas (151 U. S., 577, 586); Stephens v. Cherokee Nation (174 U. S., 445, 486).

In this connection see also the opinions in Downes v. Bidwell (187 U. S., 244, especially the concurring opinion, p. 287) and Jones v. United States (137 U. S., 202).

The total extinction of three species of birds, including the prolific carrier pigeon, which formerly existed in enormous numbers, as well as the appalling decrease in other species, until now only approximately 10 per cent of their previous number exists (Appendix, p. 35), show the impotency of State protection. The following excerpt from a report to the Legislature of Ohio in 1857 shows how incredible to the legislators of that time would have been the prophecy that the last of these "myriads" would die in 1914, caged as a curiosity in a zoological park. Yet such has been the fate of this now extinct bird:

"The passenger pigeon needs no protection. Wonderfully prolific, having the vast forests of the North as its breeding grounds, traveling hundreds of miles in search of food, it is here to-day and elsewhere to-morrow, and no ordinary destruction can lessen them or be missed from the myriads that are yearly produced."

On the other hand, the remarkable increase since the passage of the migratory-bird law, reported by the officials of 40 States of the Union, show the efficiency of Federal protection and control. See Appendix, page 35.

The doctrine that the United States own migratory wild game is not contrary to existing authority. In the cases cited to establish the claim that wild game belongs exclusively to the several States, we find that in each either the animals were local to the particular State, as in the cases involving the taking of oysters and sponges, or the question of their migratory character was not raised.

Furthermore, we find that the decisions of this court have expressly left open the question of ownership and regulation of migratory wild life by the Federal Government.

"Again, in Manchester v. Massachusetts (139 U. S., 240), in upholding a statute of the State of Massachusetts regulating the taking of menhaden in Buzzards Bay, the doctrine of the case just cited was expressly reiterated. True, further in that case, probably having in mind the declaration made in the opinion in the McCready case, that fish running within the tidewaters of the several States were subject to State ownership 'so far as they are capable of ownership while so running,' the question was reserved as to whether or not Congress would have the right to control the menhaden fisheries. But here also for the reason that the question arising relates only to sponges growing on the soil covered by water, we are not concerned with the subject of running fish and the extent of State and national power over such subject." (The Abby Dodge, 223 U. S., 166, 174–175.)

From the above quotation, in which all of the pertinent decisions of this court were referred to, it will be seen that the court, in their latest expression on the subject, took pains to say that this question had not been decided and would be left open for future determination.

But even had the courts decided that migratory animals were subject to State jurisdiction, nevertheless such decisions would still not be hostile to the present argument. Until the enactment of this law Congress had not assumed control over the subject, and it was therefore entirely within the police power of the several States to pass laws for the protection of wild game until Congress should act.

"* * * But there is no occasion to consider the power of the United States to regulate or control, either by treaty or legislation, the fisheries in these waters, because there are no existing treaties or acts of Congress which relate to the menhaden fisheries within such a bay, * * * and the subject is one which a State may well be permitted to regulate within its territory, in the absence of any regulation by the United States. * * * If it [the Federal Government] does not assert by affirmative legislation its right or will to assume the control of menhaden fisheries in such bays, the right to control such fisheries must remain with the State which contains such bays." (Manchester v. Massachusetts, 139 U. S., 240, 264, 265, 266.)

"Aside from the authority of the State, derived from the common ownership of game and the trust for the benefit of its people which the State exercises in relation thereto, there is another view of the power of the State in regard to the property in game, which is equally conclusive. The right to preserve game flows from the undoubted existence in the State of a police power to that end, which may be none the less efficiently called into play, because by doing so interstate commerce may be remotely and indirectly affected. (Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S., 1; Hall v. De Cuir, 95 U. S., 485; Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S., 99, 103; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat., 1.) Indeed, the source of the police power as to game birds (like those covered by the statute here called in question) flows from the duty of the State to preserve for its people a valuable food supply." (Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S., 519, 534.)

"While the State can not, under cover of exerting its police power, directly regulate or burden interstate commerce, a police regulation which has real relation to the proper protection of the people, and is reasonable in its terms, and does not conflict with any valid act of Congress, is not unconstitutional because it may incidentally affect interstate commerce." (Savage v. Jones, 225 U. S., 501, headnote 7.)

In the Geer case the court held that the State has the power to protect wild game subject to its jurisdiction by the exercise of the police power and also by virtue of its common ownership of such game. It is not claimed in this argument, however, that the United States have the right to protect migratory wild birds by the exercise of a general police power independent of the ownership or authority granted by the Constitution, such as was declared in the Kansas-Colorado case not to exist in the Federal Government; but it is maintained that the United States have such power by virtue of their ownership of migratory birds as trustee for all the people of the United States. It is a question of ownership of property and not of extending the power to "make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory" of the United States to embrace "legislative control over the States." The act merely provides "needful rules and regulations" respecting property of the United States within the territory of the several States, a power daily exercised by the Federal Government.

While there are many features of this case that appeal to the æsthetic and one longs to see upheld a law that will conserve for the future the fascinating creatures which charm us with their song and beauty, amaze us by their marvelous skill and wonderful flight, or delight us in the chase, nevertheless the case is not here because of these features, but because property rights of great economic value are involved, the property in birds which afford annually a food supply valued at millions of dollars (Appendix, p. 36), and which by their policing of the air save our forests, our animals, and our crops.

"It was clearly shown that the economic aspect was twofold. The game birds yield a considerable and an important amount of highly valued food, and if given adequate protection will be a constant valuable asset. The insectivorous migratory birds destroy annually thousands of tons of noxious weed seed and billions of harmful insects. These birds are the deadliest foe yet found of the boll weevil, the gypsy and brown-tailed moths, and other like pests. The yearly value of a meadow lark in a 10-acre field of cotton, corn, or wheat is reckoned by experts at $5. The damage done to growing crops in the United States by insects each year is estimated by those who have made the matter a special study at about $800,000,000." (House Committee Report on Migratory Bird Bill, 49th Cong. Rec., pt. 2, p. 1485.)

Excerpts from official publications of the Department of Agriculture and treatises of ornithologists of recognized authority, quoted in the appendix (pp. 23–34), show how great is the insect peril and how dependent we are upon the migratory insectivorous birds for protection against it.

Migratory birds, therefore, being property of the United States, Congress, by virtue of the authority granted by the Constitution to "make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States," may pass any laws it may deem proper for the protection of same, though such laws may have the quality of police regulations. (Hoke v. United States, 227 U. S., 308, 323.)

"'All the public lands of the Nation are held in trust for the people of the whole country.' (United States v. Trinidad Coal Co., 137 U. S., 160.) And it is not for the courts to say how that trust shall be administered. That is for Congress to determine." (Light v. United States, 220 U. S., 523, 537.)

"The General Government doubtless has a power over its own property analogous to the police power of the several States, and the extent to which it may go in the exercise of such power is measured by the exigencies of the particular case." (Camfield v. United States, 167 U. S., 518, 525.)

II. The migratory-bird law is authorized under the grant to Congress in paragraph 3 of section 8 of Article I of the Constitution of power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes."

Should it be admitted, for the purposes of this argument, that the title to migratory birds while actually within a State is in such State, then of necessity title thereto must pass from one State to another as such birds cross the boundary line between the States. Thus a migratory bird flying from one State into another, under such theory, passes from the ownership of the former into that of the latter State.

If this be true, a thing recognized by the courts as an article of commerce when passing between individuals passes from the ownership of individuals in their collective capacity to other individuals in their collective capacity, the ownership of the States being merely ownership in trust for their respective citizens.

Such transmission of title in connection with the actual passage of the birds from one State to another constitutes, it is submitted, interstate commerce within the meaning of the Constitution.

It is to be remarked that the Constitution does not define the word "commerce." Likewise, the courts, no doubt purposely, have refused to attempt an all-inclusive definition of this word, but have contented themselves with deciding as occasions arose whether the facts of the case before them constituted commerce within the meaning of the Constitution. Wisely have they done so, for human mind can not foresee all the possible combinations of facts which might properly constitute commerce.

The Supreme Court have said, however, that—

"Commerce, as defined by this court, means something more than traffic—it is intercourse; and the power committed to Congress to regulate commerce is exercised by prescribing rules for carrying on that intercourse." (Lottery case, 188 U. S., 321, 348.)

"Commerce was defined in Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheat., 1, 189) to be 'intercourse,' and the thousands of people who daily pass and repass over this bridge may be truly said to be engaged in commerce as if they were shipping cargoes of merchandise from New York to Liverpool." (Covington, etc., Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 154 U. S., 204, 218.)

"Commerce with foreign countries and among the States, strictly considered, consists in intercourse and traffic, including in these terms navigation and the transportation and transit of persons and property, as well as the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities." (County of Mobile v. Kimball, 102 U. S., 702.) [All italics ours.]

From the last quotation it will be seen that the mere "transit" of persons or property, independently of purchase, sale, or exchange, was such intercourse as falls within the meaning of the word "commerce." "Transit" means "the act of passing over or through; passage." (New Standard Dictionary.) The word "commerce" as used in the Constitution and defined by this court is sufficiently comprehensive to include the periodical and systematic "passage" of migratory birds among the States. Therefore, under the power to regulate commerce among the States, Congress was acting entirely within its authority in passing this act for the protection of migratory birds.

It is under definitions like the above that such phenomena as purely social intercourse over the telephone or telegraph between citizens of different States (Telegraph Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S., 460; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Milling Co., 218 U. S., 406); or the mere passage for social intercourse or pleasure of a person over an interstate bridge (Covington, etc., Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 154 U. S., 204, 218); or the driving of sheep on foot from one State into another (Kelley v. Rhoads, 188 U. S., 1) are held to constitute interstate commerce within the meaning of the Constitution. The cases of Pedersen v. Del., L. & W. Railroad (229 U. S., 146); Hoke v. United States (227 U. S., 308); Hipolite Egg Co. v. United States (220 U. S., 45); McDermott v. Wisconsin (228 U. S., 115) are other examples of the liberal construction always given by this court to the commerce clause of the Constitution.

It is sought now merely to extend the principle of these cases to new facts. To illustrate this identity in principle, suppose the ranch of a cattle owner is situated wholly within a quarantined State, but near the boundary line between two States, and that his cattle, affected with the foot-and-mouth disease, may roam at will on account of liberal stock laws over grazing lands located in the two States. Undoubtedly, under Kelley v. Rhoads (188 U. S., 1), the Federal Government could prevent the owner from driving diseased cattle from the quarantined State into the other. It is submitted that the fact that the same cattle cross the quarantine line of their own volition instead of that of their owner does not so change their status as participants in interstate intercourse as to destroy the power of Congress to prevent their crossing the State line.

If the Federal Government may prevent such intercourse between States because it is harmful, under the same principle beneficial intercourse between the States may be safeguarded.

It would seem therefore, under the theory of State ownership, that the facts in this case, especially since there is a transmission of title, as well as a "transit" or "passage" of property from one State to another, bring the case within the commerce clause of the Constitution.

III. Constitutional interpretation.

The migratory-bird law was enacted by Congress and approved by the President. Two coordinate branches of the Government have evidenced the opinion that the law is constitutional. The judicial branch of the Government therefore should not decide that Congress and the President have transcended their powers unless it is manifest that they have done so.

"It is incumbent therefore upon those who affirm the unconstitutionality of an act of Congress to show clearly that it is in violation of the provisions of the Constitution. It is not sufficient for them that they succeed in raising a doubt." (Legal Tender cases, 12 Wall., 457, 531.)

"* * * When this court is called on in the course of the administration of the law to consider whether an act of Congress, or of any other department of the Government, is within the constitutional authority of that department, a due respect for a coordinate branch of the Government requires that we shall decide that it has transcended its powers only when that is so plain that we can not avoid the duty." (Trade-Mark cases, 100 U. S., 82, 96.)

CONCLUSION.

Migratory birds are either the property of the United States or of the several States; if of the United States, then the migratory-bird law is constitutional as an exercise of a property right granted by the Constitution.

If, however, such birds are the property of the several States while within their bounds, then the passage of birds in periodic migrations among the States constitutes interstate commerce, and the act is constitutional as an exercise of the power to regulate interstate commerce.

JOHN W. DAVIS,
Solicitor General.
E. MARVIN UNDERWOOD,
Assistant Attorney General.

SEPTEMBER, 1915.

APPENDIX A.

[Excerpts from official publications of the Department of Agriculture and from writings of ornithologists of recognized authority, showing the value of migratory game and insectivorous birds and necessity for their protection.]

I. Value of insectivorous birds:

THE INSECT PERIL.

Few people know how enormous is the number of insect species or how amazing is their power of multiplication. The number of insect species is greater by far than that of the species of all other living creatures combined. * * *

The fecundity of certain insect forms is astounding, the numbers bred reaching such prodigious proportions as to be almost beyond belief. Riley once computed that the hop aphis, developing 13 generations in a single year, would, if unchecked to the end of the twelfth generation, have multiplied to the inconceivable number of ten sextillions of individuals. * * *

Kirkland has computed that one pair of gypsy moths, if unchecked, would produce enough progeny in eight years to destroy all the foliage in the United States.

* * * * * * *

The voracity of insects is almost as astounding as their power of reproduction. The daily ration in leaves of a caterpillar is equal to twice its own weight. If a horse were to feed at the same rate he would have to eat a ton of hay every 24 hours.

* * * * * * *

Some years ago the agriculturists of Hungary, moved to the insane step by ignorance and prejudice, succeeded in getting the sparrow (Passer domesticus) doomed to destruction. Within five years the country was overrun with insects, and these same men were crying frantically for the bird to be given back to them lest they should perish. The sparrow was brought back, and, driving out the hordes of devastating insects, proved the salvation of the country.

* * * * * * *

In 1895, the ravages of two species of cutworms and some 10 species of locusts produced a famine in the region of Ekaterinburg, which is in Russian Siberia. The local Society of Natural Sciences inquired into the cause which had permitted such numerous propagation of insect pests, and reported that it was due to the almost complete destruction of birds, most of which had been killed and sent abroad by wagonloads for millinery purposes.

Those grass ticks which now make the keeping of most breeds of cattle impossible in Jamaica are not mentioned in the records of the early nineteenth century. The appalling destruction in more recent years of insect-eating birds, chiefly to supply the demands of the millinery market, has led to an inordinate increase of the ticks and to the dying out of all but Indian cattle. This correlation of birds and ticks, to say nothing of mosquitoes and other insect plagues in Jamaica, was put fully and circumstantially before the secretary of state for the colonies by a deputation in 1909.

* * * * * * *

This worthy [Frederick the Great], in a fit of passion because a flock of sparrows had pecked at some of his cherries, ordered every small bird that could be searched out to be instantly killed. Within two years his cherry trees, though bare of fruit, were weighed down with a splendid crop of caterpillars.

* * * * * * *

Though I could give a hundred cases similar to the foregoing, I must rely on the few I have cited to show that the wholesale destruction of birds is surely followed by disaster to man. (Value of Birds to Man, by James Buckland, Annual Report Smithsonian Institution, 1913, pp. 439, 440, 441, 442, 448.)

* * * * * * *

The enormous losses which have occurred in the United States from the destruction of growing crops by insects must seem incredible to those who do not realize how vast are the numbers of insects, how stupendous their power of multiplication, how insatiable their voracity.

* * * * * * *

In 1854 the loss in New York State alone from the ravages of the insignificant wheat midge (Contarinia tritici), as estimated by the secretary of the New York State Agricultural Society, was $15,000,000. Whole fields of wheat were left ungarnered. So destructive was this insect in the following years as to stop the raising of white wheat and reduce the value of all wheat lands 40 per cent.

* * * * * * *

Dr. C. L. Marlatt, of the Bureau of Entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture, who has made careful calculations of the loss still occasioned by the Hessian fly (Mayetiola destructor) in the wheat-growing States, says that in comparatively few years does it cause a loss of 10 per cent of the crop. On the valuation of the crop of 1904 this would amount to over $50,000,000. Dr. Marlatt states that in the year 1900 the loss in the wheat-growing States from this tiny midge undoubtedly approached $100,000,000.

The chinch bug Blissus leucopterus attacks many staple crops, and has been a seriously destructive pest in the Mississippi Valley States for many years, where it injures chiefly wheat and corn. Dr. Shimer, in his notes on this insect, estimates the loss caused by it in the Mississippi Valley in 1864 as $100,000,000, while Dr. Riley gives the loss in that year as $73,000,000 in Illinois alone.

* * * * * * *

The Rocky Mountain locust (Melanoplus spretus) began to destroy crops as soon as the country it inhabits was settled, and is still injurious. From time to time its enormous flights have traversed a great part of the Mississippi Valley. It reached a maximum of destructiveness from 1874 to 1877, when the total loss from its ravages in Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Missouri, and neighboring States, including injury by depression of business and general ruin, was estimated at $200,000,000. * * * (Useful Birds and Their Protection, fourth edition, 1913, Edward H. Forbush, ornithologist to the Massachusetts Board of Agriculture, pp. 27, 32, 33, 34.)

The gypsy moth (Porthetria dispar), a well-known pest of European countries, was introduced into Medford, Mass., by Leopold Trouvelot in 1868 or 1869. Twenty years later the moths had increased in numbers to such an extent that they were destroying the trees and shrubbery in that section of Medford where they were first liberated.

They swarmed over the houses of the inhabitants, invaded their gardens, and became such a public nuisance that in 1890 the legislature appropriated $50,000 for their extermination. It was learned within the next two years that the moths had spread over 30 towns. The State board of agriculture was given charge of the work in 1891 and over $1,000,000 were expended within the next 10 years in the attempt to exterminate the insect. As at the expiration of that time all the larger moth colonies had been destroyed, the legislature, deeming further expenditures unwise, gave up the work, despite the protest of the board of agriculture, and its prediction that a speedy rise of the moth would follow the cessation of concerted effort against it. This prediction has been abundantly fulfilled, and the policy of the board has been fully justified.

Dr. Marlatt, who in 1904 visited the region infested by the moth, reported to the Bureau of Entomology at Washington that the people of the infested district were then fighting the insect at a greater annual cost than that formerly assumed by the State. Since the State gave up the work, a single citizen, Gen. Samuel C. Lawrence, of Medford, has expended over $75,000 to protect the trees and plants on his estate.

Finally, in 1905 the legislature was obliged to renew the fight, and appropriated the sum of $300,000 for work against both this insect and another imported pest, the brown-tail moth (Euproctis chrysorrhœa), which had been introduced into Somerville some time in the latter part of the nineteenth century.

The State has also been obliged to call on municipalities and individuals to assist in the work of suppressing these moths, at an annual expense to those concerned which exceeds all previous yearly expenditures for this purpose. * * *

These insects have gained a much larger territory than ever before, and thousands of acres of woodland have been attacked by them during the present year (1905), and many pine and other trees have been killed.

The gypsy moth has been found in Rhode Island, Connecticut, and New Hampshire, and the brown-tail moth is also spreading into other States.

The prospect now seems to be that our protective expenses against these two insects, as well as the injury done by them, will increase constantly; and that other States also will be put to similar expense, with no prospect of permanent relief save by such checks as may come in time through natural causes. (Useful Birds and Their Protection, Forbush, 4th ed., pp. 38–40.)

According to an official report in the Yearbook of the Department of Agriculture for 1904, the table here shown gives the annual values of farm products in the United States and losses chargeable to insect pests:

(CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, v. 49, pt. 5, p. 4336.)

Product.	Value.	Percentage of loss.	Amount of loss.
Cereals	$2,000,000,000	10	$200,000,000
Hay	530,000,000	10	53,000,000
Cotton	600,000,000	10	60,000,000
Tobacco	53,000,000	10	5,300,000
Truck crops	265,000,000	20	53,000,000
Sugars	50,000,000	10	5,000,000
Fruits	135,000,000	20	27,000,000
Farm forests	110,000,000	10	11,000,000
Miscellaneous crops	58,000,000	10	5,800,000
Total	3,801,000,000	.....	420,100,000
Animal products	1,750,000,000	10	175,000,000
Natural forests and forest products	.....	.....	100,000,000
Products in storage	.....	.....	100,000,000
Grand total	5,551,000,000	.....	795,100,000

PROTECTION AFFORDED BY BIRDS.

Who or what is it that prevents these ravening hordes from overrunning the earth and consuming the food supply of all? It is not man. Man, by the use of mechanically applied poisons, which are expensive, unnatural, and dangerous, is able to repel to an extent the attacks on his orchard and garden. Out in the fields and in the forests he becomes, before any very great irruption of insects, a panic-stricken fugitive. Neither is it disease, or the weather, or animals, or fungi, or parasitic and predacious insects within their own ranks. However large may be the share of these particular natural agencies in keeping insects in check, experience has shown that it is lamentably insufficient. Then what is it? The bird. Bird life, by reason of its predominating insect diet, is the most indispensable balancing force in nature. (Value of Birds to Man, by James Buckland, Ann. Rept. Smithsonian Inst., 1913, p. 440.)

The chickadee returns to her brood about 200 times a day with not less than 25 plant lice each time for the young. It has been found that a cuckoo consumes daily from 50 to 400 caterpillars or their equivalent, while a chickadee will eat from 200 to 500 insects, or up to 4,000 insect or worm eggs. One hundred insects a day is a conservative estimate of the quantity consumed by each individual insectivorous bird. By carefully estimating the birds in several areas it has been found that in Massachusetts there are not less than 5 insect-eating birds per acre. Thus the State, with its 8,000 square miles, has a useful bird population of not less than 25,600,000, which for each day's fare requires not less than the enormous total of 2,560,000,000 insects. Or better to express such figures in common measurements, 120,000 average insects fill a bushel measure. This means that the daily consumption of chiefly obnoxious insects in Massachusetts is about 21,000 bushels. This estimate is good for above five months in the year—May to September, inclusive—during the remainder of the year the insects, eggs, and larvæ destroyed by the winter, late fall, and early spring migrants will be equivalent to nearly half this quantity.

* * * * * * *

Birds afford a natural check upon the injurious insects, and wherever forests denote the presence of great numbers of destructive caterpillars or grasses indicate that grubs are destroying the grass roots the birds are not slow to assemble and help restore equilibrium.

* * * * * * *

The Mexican cotton-boll weevil, that has cost the United States Government so much money, probably about $1,000,000 in direct appropriations and $5,000,000 to the growers in lessening the crop production, can not be controlled by man, but the following birds are proving almost a specific remedy against the weevil: Six species of orioles, the nighthawk, the martin, the bank swallow, the barn swallow, the rough wing, and the cliff swallow. (The Economic Value of Birds to the Farmer, by R. J. H. de Loach, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 49, pt. 5, pp. 4332, 4333.)

In his report on Egypt for the year 1912 Lord Kitchener stated that the indiscriminate destruction of bird life had allowed an enormous increase of insect pests, steps for the combating of which were to be taken. Lord Kitchener knew that in spite of the improved methods of fighting insects there was only one step that he could take that would be effective. A khedivial decree was issued forbidding the catching or killing of, or taking the eggs of, Egypt's insectivorous birds. (Value of Birds to Man, Buckland, Annual Report Smithsonian Institution, 1913, p. 453.)

Shore birds perform an important service by their inroads upon mosquitoes, some of which play so conspicuous a part in the dissemination of diseases. Thus, nine species are known to feed upon mosquitoes and hundreds of the larvæ or "wigglers" were found in several stomachs. Fifty-three per cent of the food of 28 northern phalaropes from one locality consisted of mosquito larvæ. The insects eaten include the salt-marsh mosquito (Ædes sollicitans), for the suppression of which the State of New Jersey has gone to great expense. (Our Vanishing Shore Birds, by W. L. McAtee, Bureau of Biological Survey, Circular No. 79.)

After many years of study in New Hampshire, as well as many other States, of these relations of birds to agriculture we are convinced that the birds are a most potent factor in making crop production possible, that without them we should be overrun with pests—vertebrate and invertebrate—to an extent of which we now have no conception. (Birds in Their Relation to Man, Weed and Dearborn, p. 4.)

Birds attain their greatest usefulness in the forests, because the conditions there closely approach the primeval. Forest trees have their natural insect foes, to which they give food and shelter, and these insects in turn have their natural enemies among the birds, to which the tree also gives food and shelter. Hence it follows that the existence of each one of these forms of life is dependent upon the existence of the others. * * *

I regard as profoundly true Frank N. Chapman's statement "that it can be clearly demonstrated that if we should lose our birds we should also lose our forests." (Value of Birds to Man, Buckland, Annual Report Smithsonian Institution, 1913, pp. 446, 447.)

It is especially with regard to insects and plants that the regulative influence of the work of birds is felt. In agriculture experience has taught us that some work, which is indispensable to the productivity of the soil, can be carried on only by winged squads of workmen. * * *

It was in the second half of the nineteenth century, after the development of intensive agriculture, that insects commenced to increase in a most alarming way. In Europe the German farmers and foresters proved that this change was connected with the rapid decrease of birds useful in agriculture, and they were the first to take public action. In 1868 the twenty-sixth general convention of German farmers and foresters recognized the necessity of securing international protection for the birds useful in farming and forestry.

This assembly decided to intrust to Austria-Hungary the duty of taking the initiative and prayed in 1868 that the minister of foreign affairs of these two States take steps toward establishing among all European States an agreement for the protection of birds useful in agriculture and forestry. (Report of the general convention of the International Institute of Agriculture, December, 1909, pp. 1, 4.)

Birds useful in agriculture, especially insectivorous ones, more particularly the birds enumerated in the list No. 1, annexed to this agreement, which list shall be subject to additions by legislation of each country, shall enjoy absolute protection, in such a way that it shall be forbidden to kill them at any time or in any way, whatsoever, or to destroy their nests, eggs, or young. (Translation article 1 of Agreement of Paris, entered into in 1902, for the protection of birds useful in agriculture, by Austria-Hungary, Germany, Belgium, Spain, France, Greece, Luxembourg, Monaco, Portugal, Sweden, Norway, and Switzerland.)

II. Value of game birds and efficacy of migratory-bird law:

Formerly migratory waterfowl frequented the United States in enormous numbers, and the supply appeared to be inexhaustible. During the last 75 years, however, the growth of population and the vast increase in the number of hunters, combined with greatly improved firearms, and an extraordinary increase in the facilities for rapid transportation to the most remote haunts of wild life, has resulted in an appalling reduction in their numbers. It is believed to be a conservative estimate that the gross number of migratory game birds of all kinds existing to-day in the United States does not exceed 10 per cent of the number which existed here 75 years ago. The decrease has been especially rapid during the last 25 years. During this period some species have become extinct, while others are nearly so.

Thoughtful sportsmen and others interested in our wild life have long realized the impossibility of saving what was left of this great national asset by State action. The rapid progress of our waterfowl toward extinction under State laws was too obvious. To save the dwindling remnant, in 1913 the Federal migratory-bird law was enacted. The law has now been in effect about two years, and an extended inquiry has been made by the Biological Survey as to its effect on migratory game birds. A large number of reports from State and Federal game officials and private individuals in nearly all of the States of the Union have been received. The replies from a small number of States have been doubtful, usually owing to a lack of definite information on the subject. From 40 of the States, extending from Maine to California and from the Gulf States to the Canadian border, is given unimpeachable evidence of an extraordinary increase in waterfowl during the short period the law has been in effect. The increase is commonly stated, according to the locality, to be from 10 to several hundred per cent, and includes such important species as mallards, black mallards, widgeon, sprigtails, blue-winged teal, green-winged teal, wood ducks, canvasbacks, Canada geese, and swans.

Many of the reports are to the effect that the number of waterfowl remaining to breed exceeds anything seen during the past 10 to 25 years. The results indicate what may be expected from a long period of adequate protection.

The importance of our wild fowl as a national asset is evident when their great aggregate value is considered. The State of Maine estimates the annual income from its game resources at $13,000,000, of which about 5 per cent, or $650,000, can safely be allotted to the returns from migratory wild fowl. Oregon values the annual returns from its game resources at $5,000,000. Of this amount about $1,000,000 may be attributed to migratory wild fowl. It is evident that the actual annual returns from this source in the several States reach a very large amount, and the value of this resource to the Nation amounts to hundreds of millions of dollars. (Weekly News Letter, an official publication of the Department of Agriculture, issue of Sept. 15, 1915.)

III. Threatened extermination of birds:

More interest is evidenced in the history of the passenger pigeon and its fate than in that of any other North American bird. Its story reads like a romance. Once the most abundant species, in its flights and on its nesting grounds, ever known in any country, ranging over the greater part of the continent of North America in innumerable hordes, the race seems to have disappeared within the past 30 years, leaving no trace.

* * * * * * *

The last great nesting place of which we have adequate record was in Michigan in 1878. Prof. H. B. Roney states in the American Field (vol. 10, 1879, pp. 345–347) that the nesting near Petoskey that year covered something like 100,000 acres, and included not less than 150,000 acres within its limits. It was estimated to be about 40 miles in length and from 3 to 10 miles in width. It is difficult to approximate the number of millions of pigeons that occupied that great nesting place.

* * * * * * *

It has been stated that the wild pigeon "went off like dynamite." Even the naturalists failed to secure sufficient specimens and notes, as no one had an idea that extinction was imminent. (Game Birds, Wild Fowl, and Shorebirds, Forbush, pp. 433, 446, 455.)

Shorebirds were found by the early settlers of this country in vast numbers on the coasts, the inland lakes, and even on the prairies, and while comparatively few now remain it was not until the early seventies that there was a marked lessening of their numbers. Since then shorebirds have been so persecuted that vigorous measures must be taken, and immediately, to save them.

* * * * * * *

How they abounded formerly and how they were slaughtered by southern gunners is forcibly shown by the record of a single hunter in Louisiana, who, during the 20 years from 1867 to 1887, killed 69,087 birds—an average of 3,500 snipe a winter. In 1870 about 100 snipe were killed by this man for each day that he hunted. The maximum was reached in 1875, with 150 birds a day; this fell to 100 in 1880 and to 80 in 1887.

* * * * * * *

One of the most striking examples of the havoc wrought by man in the ranks of shorebirds is afforded by the Eskimo curlew. When Audubon visited the Labrador coast in 1833 he said of their numbers: "The accounts given of these birds border on the miraculous"; and later, when he saw them for himself, he reports that they "arrived in such dense flocks as to remind me of the passenger pigeons."

* * * * * * *

These enormous flocks now exist only in memory; scarcely a dozen individual birds have been seen in the last dozen years. (Wells W. Cooke, Yearbook of the Department of Agriculture for 1914, pp. 275, 279, 286, 287, 289.)

Many years ago the wood duck was the most abundant of all wild fowl in many well-wooded regions of the United States. Hundreds flocked along the wooded streams and about the woodland ponds.

* * *

This species is the loveliest of all wild fowl. Even the Mandarin duck of China is not so strikingly beautiful.

* * * * * * *

Within my own recollection it bred commonly over a considerable part of Massachusetts, but at the beginning of this century the species was evidently in danger of extinction. (Forbush, Game Birds, Wild Fowl, and Shore-birds, pp. 106, 107.)

From the records that with great pains and labor were gathered by the State game commission, and which were furnished me for use here by President Frank M. Miller, we set forth this remarkable exhibit of old-fashioned abundance in game, A. D. 1909:

Official record of game killed in Louisiana during the season (12 months), of 1909–10.

Wild ducks, sea and river	3,176,000
Coots	280,740
Geese and brant	202,210
Snipe, sandpiper, and plover	606,635
Quail (bobwhite)	1,140,750
Doves	310,660
Wild turkeys	2,219
Total number of game birds killed	5,719,214

* * * * * * *

Here is a case by way of illustration, copied very recently from the Atlanta Journal:

"EDITOR JOURNAL: I located a robin roost up the Trinity River, 6 miles from Dallas, and prevailed on six Dallas sportsmen to go with me on a torchlight bird hunt. This style of hunting was, of course, new to the Texans, but they finally consented to go, and I had the pleasure of showing them how it was done.

"Equipped with torchlights and shotguns, we proceeded. After reaching the hunting grounds the sport began in reality and continued for 2 hours and 10 minutes, with a total slaughter of 10,157 birds, an average of 1,451 birds killed by each man.

"But the Texans give me credit for killing at least 2,000 of the entire number. I was called 'the king of bird hunters' by the sportsmen of Dallas, Tex., and have been invited to command in chief the next party of hunters which go from Dallas to the Indian Territory in search of large game.

"F. L. CROW,
"Dallas, Tex., former Atlantan.

"Dallas, Tex., papers and Oklahoma papers, please copy!"

As a further illustration of the spirit manifested in the South toward robins, I quote the following story from Dr. P. P. Claxton, of the University of Tennessee, as related in Audubon Educational Leaflet No. 46, by Mr. T. Gilbert Pearson:

"A man would climb a cedar tree with a torch while his companions with poles and clubs would disturb the sleeping birds on the adjacent trees. Blinded by the light, the suddenly awakened birds flew to the torchbearer, who as he seized each bird would quickly pull off its head and drop it into a sack suspended from his shoulders.

"The capture of three or four hundred birds was an ordinary night's work. Men and boys would come in wagons from all the adjoining counties and camp near the roost for the purpose of killing robins. Many times 100 or more hunters with torches and clubs would be at work in a single night. For three years this tremendous slaughter continued in winter, and then the survivors deserted the roost.

"One small hamlet sent to market annually enough dead robins to return $500 at 5 cents per dozen, which means 120,000 birds."

There is time and space only in which to notice the most prominent of the doomed species and perhaps discuss a few examples by way of illustration. Here is a partial list of North American birds threatened with early extermination. Whooping crane, trumpeter swan, American flamingo, roseate spoonbill, scarlet ibis, long-billed curlew, Hudsonian godwit, upland plover, red-breasted sandpiper, golden plover, dowitcher, willet, pectoral sandpiper, black-capped petrel, American egret, snowy egret, wood duck, band-tailed pigeon, heath hen, sage grouse, prairie sharptail, pinnated grouse, and white-tailed kite. (Our Vanishing Wild Life, Wm. T. Hornaday, pp. 5, 106, 107, 18.)

—

APPENDIX B.

THE BIRDS OF THE UNITED STATES.

[Data prepared by the Department of Agriculture.]

I.

Migratory species, game and nongame birds (82 per cent)	544
Nonmigratory or resident species, game and nongame birds (18 per cent)	118
Total species	662

II.

Migratory game birds of the United States.

Largely confined to United States territory throughout the year (36 per cent)	39
Not so confined (64 per cent)	69
Total species	108

Nonmigratory or resident game birds of the United States.

Total species	18

III.

Migratory insectivorous birds of the United States.

Largely confined to the United States throughout the year (25 per cent)	38
Not so confined (75 per cent)	113
Total species	151

Nonmigratory or resident insectivorous birds of the United States.

Total species	31

IV.

Migratory game birds which are wholly or largely confined to United States territory throughout the year.

American merganser, hooded merganser, mallard, black duck, gadwall, baldpate, green-winged teal, blue-winged teal, cinnamon teal, shoveler, pintail, wood duck, redhead, canvasback, lesser scaup, ring-necked duck, harlequin duck, ruddy duck, Canada goose, emperor goose, sandhill crane, king rail, clapper rail, Virginia rail, sora or Carolina rail, purple gallinule, Florida gallinule, coot, woodcock, Wilson snipe, spotted sandpiper, long-billed curlew, killdeer, piping plover, mountain plover, band-tailed pigeon, passenger pigeon (extinct), mourning dove, white-winged dove.

Nonmigratory or resident game birds of the United States.

Florida duck, Franklin grouse, bobwhite, mountain quail, scaled quail, California quail, gambel quail, mearns quail, dusky grouse, spruce grouse, ruffed grouse, white-tailed ptarmigan, willow ptarmigan, rock ptarmigan, prairie chicken, sharp-tailed grouse, sage hen, wild turkey.

V.

Some of the more important of the migratory insectivorous birds which are largely confined to the United States throughout the year.

Robin, bluebird, western bluebird, catbird, brown thrasher, phoebe, house wren, bewick wren, tree swallow, flicker, yellow-bellied woodpecker, red-headed woodpecker.

Some of the more important of the nonmigratory or resident insectivorous birds of the United States.

Hairy woodpecker, downy woodpecker, ant-eating woodpecker, black phoebe, mocking bird, Carolina wren, white-breasted nuthatch, tufted titmouse, chickadee.

CONSERVATION OF FOOD AND FUEL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 4961.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4961) to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think the pending amendment is to be found in section 9, on page 13, beginning at line 12. I ask for a vote on that amendment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, during most of the long discussion on the pending bill I was engaged in the work of the Finance Committee on the revenue bill which was on Tuesday last submitted to the Senate, and therefore I have not been able to listen to all of the arguments upon the measure, although I have tried to acquaint myself with its provisions and to follow the kaleidoscopic changes which have been made in it since it was prepared by some influence outside of Congress and during its course through the House and Senate up to this hour.

It was undoubtedly conceived in an honest desire to meet and overcome present and impending evils growing out of the European war affecting the food and food materials of our country. In the midst of an abundance of food retail prices climbed to an altitude beyond the reach of many of our people. It seems that producers and dealers generally have seen an opportunity to increase their profits abnormally and have taken advantage of it. The European war was the proximate excuse for extortion. A large proportion of the producers of Europe were changed to consumers, and fields and factories were laid waste. Americans saw their opportunity, and their selling prices to the allies indicate more greed than sympathy, and after they had tasted the blood of European necessities, tigerlike, they could not be satisfied with anything other than the blood of American consumers. As a result, from all over our countrty came the demand for cheaper necessities of life. This, added to the evident fact that our allies in Europe must depend to a great extent for their success upon food products from the United States, induced many thoughtful men to believe that something must be done to stimulate production and to conserve and distribute our food resources in the most efficient manner possible. . The first thought was for Federal food control, which necessarily included production and distribution. The thoughtless seemed to understand that this was an easy task, but those who gave proper attention to it discovered that it was a most complicated one, for legal control as viewed by the thoughtful might mean possibly restricted production and enhanced prices—things clearly to be avoided. Every plan which was brought forth seemed certain to produce such disadvantages. The bill therefore has been changed from time to time until it is very different from the original proposition, which was evidently intended, as its name implies, purely as a food-control measure.

The great natural incentives for increased production are increased demand and its corollary, increased rewards. To the stimulus of this natural law patriotism contributed in this crisis no little assistance to increased production, and before any legislative aid was proposed the largest acreage of American soil ever known in our history was devoted to food crops. No maximum or minimum price fixed by Federal law was necessary to induce the people to plant and cultivate. All that was needed from the Government, in my judgment, was for it to enact and enforce a law (if existing laws were inadequate) with capital punishment if necessary, prohibiting speculators and manipulators in foods and other necessities and who live and grow rich by the sweat of other mens' brows from prosecuting their unpatriotic and nefarious avocations. I will not impeach the patriotism of the men who, desiring victory for American arms in the present contest with Germany, and who, seeing, as they think they see, a great shortage of food in the future for the United States and its allies, urge autocratic power at this time. I am, however, impressed with the thought that these men do not fully appreciate the great possibilities of their proposals. It seems to me that possibly they are more sanguine than wise. It is not simply a question of distributing food already collected to a starving alien people. In it is involved the continuance of production of food and the effect upon business generally, the success of which is absolutely necessary to the success of our Army and Navy. Early it was discovered that the successful production and distribution of food was intimately and inextricably connected with the production, transportation, and distribution of fuel and other articles entering into the life and business of the country, and the bill has been enlarged to embrace other necessities. Personally, I believe that the regulation of fuel prices is even a more imperative necessity than is Federal food control. But the enlarged bill has complicated the questions, and thinking men are wondering whether what is proposed will minimize or magnify the difficulties. That an all wise, all powerful, and all good autocrat would be more efficient in this crisis than a democracy I have no doubt. But no such man lives now or ever has lived. The Chief Executive is just a human being subject to all the limitations which circumscribe the average strong man. Until recently, at least, he has felt himself sufficient for the executive and legislative needs of the Government and has not been inclined to counsel with others, however fitted by experience and character, to advise on the unusual matters which has attended his administration. Of late he seems to have changed his mind or disposition in this regard and has called to his assistance some men who know. If it may be admitted that his Cabinet would be sufficient in time of peace, when little more than the ordinary details of a smoothly running Government machine constituted their functions, it can not be successfully denied that no member of that Cabinet, with possibly one or two exceptions, was especially fitted by training, experience, or ability for the extraordinary responsibilities which the Mexican and European wars brought to the Government.

I have been heartened therefore by the admission to the council board of the President of some really good advisers in this supreme crisis. In many of these advisers the country has great confidence. Some of them stand out like stars of the first magnitude among the hosts of satellites which reflect the White House light. But there are others, and here again a new danger threatens. The possibility of great profits out of war has attracted to this capital, as vultures to the carcass, hordes of worse than grafters whose greatest concern is profit to themselves, and it will require almost superhuman vigilance and ability if scandals so gigantic as to disturb the success of the war and shake the country to its foundations are avoided. These mercenaries are skillful men and know just what they want. Already some of these speculators in life and liberty, in democracy itself, are asking that all legislative restraints be removed and unchecked opportunity be given them to confiscate a large portion of the taxes paid by the people to meet the stupendous needs of this war. They are complaining because Congress is so slow. The responsibilities which the passage of this bill will impose upon the President, who, however, is demanding it, will be very great. He and his Cabinet will do well to advise with successful and experienced men, but the final decision rests with the administration. It approves contracts, it adopts policies, and it will be held responsible. I repeat that I have great faith in many of the volunteer business men who have come to the Government's aid at this time. It has been widely published that they have, at great financial and physical sacrifice, enlisted for the war in such capacity as money could not compensate. I know that this is true in many instances, but if it shall be disclosed that any of them are serving themselves or their concerns to the detriment of the Government then such will have shown themselves enemies rather than friends, and mob law executed upon them would be more justifiable than the outrageous barbarism recently demonstrated at East St. Louis. I am opposed to mob law under any circumstances, and at a time when our country is trying to teach the benighted nations of Europe the blessings of democracy, and to make it safe in the world, the seeming approval by the police and the militia in East St. Louis of the uncivilized acts of people in that city against a helpless class of our own citizens brings a blush of shame to every true American's cheek. They were fiendish and inhuman. But if an officer of this Government or any man trusted with responsibility should betray the people whose sacrifices in blood and treasure have been and will be supreme, I would have greater hope of success before the jury of civilization in defending the mob which would visit summary punishment upon him than I would have in a similar defense of the East St. Louis barbarians.

I realize the dangers from autocracy even in time of war, and I feel that much of the agitation which has led to the introduction of this bill has not been well founded on any reasonable probabilities of great disaster; yet I may be mistaken, for I also realize that the condition of our country and of those nations engaged with us in this war against a common enemy may indeed be serious. And I now understand that many of our people who look askance at our citizens of German ancestry and who cry aloud in the market place against alien enemies in our midst, and who subscribe with great publicity to the liberty loan, bearing 3½ per cent interest in gold, are really more dangerous to our country than is the Kaiser. The President has said that we have no special grievance against Germany. I do not agree with him, but I know that we do and will have a mortal grievance against those so-called Americans, and their name is legion, whose patriotism is measured simply by profits. What language can be employed properly to describe in all his horrid moral deformities the loathsome Shylock who wins Executive favor by proffered service but exacts a bond with forfeitures of human blood and suffering?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, did the Senator ask not to be interrupted?

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; I did not.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I ask the able Senator to direct me to what expression the Senator has in mind where the President said the United States had no grievance against Germany?

Mr. TOWNSEND. No special grievance against Germany. All I can refer to is what was widely reported in the papers.

Mr. LEWIS. Ah, the Senator refers to the speech that the President made at the Red Cross gathering?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; and the Senator from Illinois has discussed that on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. I only ask the Senator if that is what he alluded to?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is it.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator is right; it has been referred to, and I think it has been justly explained.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Sir, if I had my way, there would be no war profits except such as were necessary to meet the expenses of war. I honor the patriotic captain of industry and finance who in these times volunteers his great experience and ability to his country's good, but I brand with treason the man who exploits his country's necessity for private gain to himself or friend. This is a time for universal service and sacrifice. Legitimate business should be encouraged, for upon it our success will as much depend as upon our arms, but the business man, whether producer, transporter, or distributor, should have in mind his country's good as much as has the lad who lays his young life upon his country's altar when he goes into the trenches of Europe. Let there be profit, but let it be dedicated to the support of the soldier, who gives his all, and of the Government, which is all, and which requires billions for its defense. And what I say of business men applies with equal force to labor. In this national crisis no man—no man has the right even to ask that his prewar status of selfishness be maintained and made secure. I am voting to tax our people in amounts never dreamed of as possible by any man prior to August, 1914, but not one dollar of these amounts should go as a reward to greed or graft. Through ignorance much money will be wasted—aye, worse than wasted. The people may forgive mistakes, but they will not, they must not, forgive corruption. They must annihilate it and its beneficiaries.

I am not in accord with the proposition that the Government should fix prices of supplies which it buys either for itself or the allies at less than cost of production, for that would mean that the producer selling under such conditions would be obliged, if he continued his business, to charge American consumers an amount large enough to compensate for his loss to the Government and its allies. I want the price the same to all, and I want it reasonable. Our people are financing this war. Their taxes pay the bills, and they are entitled to just and reasonable prices for what they buy. I have little fear that the seller will not get a reasonable price for what he sells. He ought not to get rich out of war. The Government should neither wantonly nor ignorantly decrease production or enhance prices under the alleged remedy of Government control. What America may need, what the world now needs, is food and clothing and fuel. If greed, avarice, and undue selfishness can be held in check; if the spirit of patriotism which established this Republic in 1776 and preserved it in 1861–1865 can be aroused, we will produce enough to feed and clothe and save the world. The Nation which gave to Europe the submarine, the aeroplane, and the most powerful guns in the world has the genius, the ability, and the disposition to overmatch these now most deadly engines of war, and it will meet every emergency. It will do this unless its Government paralyzes initiative by ignorance or folly. We can and must feed the antagonists of Germany. Let us fetter the enemies of patriotism, whether they be of American, German, or whatnot ancestry, but let us maintain unshackled American enterprise, and there will be food and fuel enough and to spare.

This bill covers articles of necessity not contemplated when it was first prepared. I deplore the conditions which seem to compel their inclusion, but so related are food, fuel, iron, copper, and cotton to the national defense and welfare and so unconscionable are many dealers in these products that the situation has become desperate, and a desperate remedy seems to be assured. I am sorry that this is so, but trust that the exercise of the power conferred will not be required; and if it shall be, that only honest, efficient men will execute it.

We are legislating in an atmosphere of hysteria and I fear that the normal vision is being obscured. No man can condemn more strongly than I will the extortion that is being practiced by Americans upon our people and their allies, and I want to go as far as I can to correct this evil. If that could be done, the natural laws of supply and demand would not need suspension. Our people would practice proper economy and the fruits of agriculture would multiply to meet all demands. I realize, however, that the pending measure is the only tangible proposition before us. I shall assist in the endeavor to amend it so as to make it less objectionable, and to render it more helpful to increased production, to a more equitable distribution, and to more reasonable prices. If in the end I am convinced that its probable benefits outweigh its possible injuries, I shall support the bill with my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Presiding Officer indicate which amendment that is?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, line 12, after the word "employees," insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That whenever any person or persons entitled to receive such wages are dissatisfied with the rate of wages so fixed by the President, he or they shall have the right to have the reasonableness of such wages reviewed and determined by the Board of Mediation and Conciliation created by the act approved July 15, 1913; and in case said board shall conclude that a higher rate of wages shall be allowed their finding shall be conclusive in the premises, and said board shall prescribe rules and regulations for carrying this proviso into effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee just read by the Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 6, after the word "receipts," to insert: "The word 'mine' as used in this section shall be held to include oil and gas wells and oil and gas pipe lines."

Mr. WADSWORTH. In the discussion in the Committee on Agriculture of this particular amendment the question arose, I think it is fair to state it, as to the status of pipe lines. It was suggested that pipe lines were common carriers and ought to be subject, therefore, in their rates to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that to that extent the jurisdiction conferred in this broad language upon the President in the bill would conflict with the jurisdiction already possessed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. It was understood that that matter would be looked into before definite action was taken.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have not examined any further. After the discussion in committee this provision was agreed to. I assume if there is any pipe line engaged in interstate commerce it would probably be subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and where it applies only to interstate traffic it would be under the jurisdiction of the bill. I do not assume, however, that under the bill its operation is limited to interstate commerce. That has been discussed a good deal. I think Congress has power to act on matters intrastate, and on matters interstate under the war power of the Constitution.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator in charge of the bill remember whether a provision similar to that has been placed at the end of any other section of the bill?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; I will say——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I notice that this section refers only to power granted to the President to requisition and take over any mine.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Any mine; and this was added to the provision in order to remove any question as to whether or not oil and gas mines were included within the term mine.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no objection to the language added to this particular section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the committee amendment is agreed to.

Mr. REED. I was engaged otherwise. I simply ask for information. Is that the amendment on page 14 at the end of section 9?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; lines 6, 7, and 8, on page 14.

Mr. REED. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 25, on page 14, as follows:

SEC. 10. That undue enhancement or fluctuation of prices of, or injurious speculation in, or unjust market manipulation or unfair and misleading market quotations of the prices of necessaries, are hereby prohibited, and whenever the President finds it essential in order to prevent undue enhancement, depression, or fluctuation of prices of, or in order to prevent injurious speculation in, or in order to prevent unjust market manipulation or unfair and misleading market quotations of the prices of necessaries, hereafter in this section called evil practices, he is authorized to prescribe such regulations governing, or may either wholly or partly prohibit, operations, practices, and transactions at, on, in, or under the rules of any exchange, board of trade, or similar institutions or place of business as he may find essential in order to prevent, correct, or remove such evil practices.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if there is not a committee amendment there striking out four lines?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is a committee amendment, which I overlooked, commencing in line 10 to strike out the words "undue enhancement or fluctuation of prices of, or injurious speculation in, or unjust market manipulation or unfair and misleading market quotations of the prices of necessaries, are hereby prohibited, and," so that it would read "That whenever the President finds it essential," and so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, commencing in line 9 strike out the following words:

Undue enhancement or fluctuation of prices of, or injurious speculation in, or unjust market manipulation or unfair and misleading market quotations of the prices of necessaries, are hereby prohibited, and.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, in line 25, after the word "practices," to strike out "Further, for the purposes of this section, the President" and insert "Such regulations"; on page 15, line 2, after the word "within," to strike out "its" and insert "their"; in line 15, after the word "transactions," to strike out "and he may appoint agents to conduct the investigations necessary to enforce the provisions of this section and all rules and regulations made by him in pursuance thereof, and may fix and pay the compensation of such agents"; in line 22, after the word "section," to strike out "or who willfully aids or abets any such violation or any such prohibited operation, practice, or transaction," so as to read:

Such regulations may require all persons coming within their provisions to keep such records and statements of account, and may require such persons to make such returns, verified under oath or otherwise, as will fully and correctly disclose all transactions at, in, or on, or under the rules of any such exchange, board of trade, or similar institutions or place of business, including the making, execution, settlement, and fulfillment thereof. He may also require all persons acting in the capacity of a clearing house, clearing association, or similar institution, for the purpose of clearing, settling, or adjusting transactions at, in, or on, or under the rules of any such exchange, board of trade, or similar institutions or place of business, to keep such records and to make such returns as will fully and correctly disclose all facts in their possession relating to such transactions. Any person who willfully violates any regulation made pursuant to this section, or who knowingly engages in any operation, practice, or transaction prohibited pursuant to this section, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than four years, or both.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to offer from the committee the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, at the end of line 2, it is proposed to add the following:

Provided, That such operations, practices, and transactions at, on, or in, or under the rules of any exchange, board of trade, or other similar institution or place of business as are not prohibited by the regulations made by the President pursuant to provisions of this section shall not be deemed to be within the intent and meaning of section 6 of this act.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish the chairman of the committee would give us a little time to read and consider that amendment or else explain the purport of it. I should like to know about it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to passing the amendment over for the present, if the Senator desires to read it; but I will say that, according to my recollection, the purpose of the amendment is to exclude from the operation of this section the provisions of section 6, which apply rather to individuals than to boards of trade and other institutions of that kind.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, let the amendment be again stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again stated.

The Secretary again read the amendment proposed by Mr. CHAMBERLAIN.

Mr. KENYON. May I say to the Senator from Missouri that the testimony before the committee was that the provisions of section 6, it was feared, could close every exchange in the country overnight? Consequently, it was deemed wise to put such a proviso as this either in section 6 or section 12, so that section 6 would not apply to these exchanges. It would be a calamitous thing to close all these exchanges overnight. That construction might not be carried out, but it was feared it would be. So, out of abundance of caution, this proviso was put in section 12. It does not make any difference whether it goes in section 12 or section 6.

Mr. REED. It seems to me it ought to go in section 6, instead of section 12.

Mr. KENYON. It perhaps might more properly have been inserted in that section. I think the truth was, however, that we had passed over section 6, and so we put it into section 12.

Mr. REED. I do not know enough about it to venture an opinion.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that this amendment go over. I want to take sufficient time to examine it, though I do not object to it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, if we begin to construe this bill we shall be entering upon a pretty broad field. I do not know why we should construe that provision. The courts will construe it, and it matters very little what we say about it.

Mr. KENYON. The point is that under section 6 there is a chance that this provision could be construed in such a way as to close every exchange in this country immediately; and I think no one wants to bring about a result of that kind. The only purpose of the amendment was to obviate that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is the Senator using the new sections or the old sections when he refers to section 12?

Mr. KENYON. When I refer to section 6, I refer to the hoarding section, and when I refer to section 12 it is section 10 of the new numbering.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Section 6 says:

That necessaries shall be deemed to be hoarded within the meaning of this act when either (a) held, contracted for, or arranged for by any manufacturer, wholesaler, retailer, or other dealer in a quantity in excess of the reasonable requirements of his business for use or sale by him for a reasonable time.

To undertake to construe that language and to narrow its scope and purpose is rather a dangerous thing, it seems to me. I do not know why we should do it.

Mr. KENYON. I will say to the Senator that Judge Lindsey, who is the legal adviser of Mr. Hoover, came before the committee with Mr. Hoover and asked that it be made perfectly clear that section 6 would not accomplish what many thought it would, namely, the closing of all of these exchanges overnight. That was the only purpose of this proviso being inserted.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, where is the proviso to be inserted?

Mr. KENYON. The proviso suggested by the chairman of the committee would come in at the end of section 10, after the word "both," in line 2, page 16.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I ask the chairman of the committee if it will not be satisfactory to him to let this amendment go over?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Entirely so.

Mr. GRONNA. I want sufficient time to examine it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the further consideration of the amendment will be suspended and it will go over.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 3, to change the number of the section from "13" to "11"; in line 6, after the word "products," to insert "being necessaries as hereinbefore defined"; on page 17, line 3, after the name "United States," to strike out "seriously interferes or is likely seriously to interfere with the practical operation of any guaranteed price therefor fixed pursuant to this section, or," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 11. That, whenever the President shall find that an emergency exists requiring stimulation of production and that it is essential that the producers of any nonperishable agricultural food or feed products, being necessaries as hereinbefore defined, produced within the United States shall have the benefits of the guarantee provided for in this section in order to stimulate production of such products, he is authorized, from time to time, seasonably and as far in advance of seeding time as practicable, to determine and fix and to give public notice of what, under specified conditions, is a reasonable guaranteed price for any such products, in order to assure such producers a reasonable profit. Thereupon, the Government of the United States hereby guarantees every producer of any merchantable nonperishable agricultural food or feed products produced within the United States, for which a guaranteed price shall be fixed by notice in accordance with this section, that, upon compliance by him with the regulations prescribed by the President, he will receive for any such products produced in reliance upon this guarantee within the period, not exceeding 18 months, prescribed in the notice, a price not less than the guaranteed price therefor as fixed pursuant to this section. In such regulations the President shall prescribe the terms and conditions upon which any such producer shall be entitled to the benefits of such guaranty. When the President finds that the importation into the United States of any such product produced outside of the United States materially enhances or is likely materially to enhance the liabilities of the United States under guaranties of prices therefor made pursuant to this section, and ascertains what rate of duty, added to the then existing rate of duty on any such product and to the value of such product at the time of importation, would be sufficient to bring the price thereof at which imported up to the price fixed therefor pursuant to the foregoing provisions of this section, he shall proclaim such facts and thereafter there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon such product when imported, in addition to the then existing rate of duty, the rate of duty so ascertained; but in no case shall any such rate of duty be fixed at an amount which will effect a reduction of the rate of duty upon any such products under any then existing tariff law of the United States. For the purpose of making any guaranteed price effective under this section, or whenever he deems it essential in order to protect the Government of the United States against material enhancement of its liabilities arising out of any guaranty under this section, the President is authorized also, in his discretion, to purchase any such products for which a guaranteed price shall be fixed under this section, and to hold, transport, or store them, or to sell, dispose of, and deliver the same to any citizen of the United States or to any government engaged in war with any country with which the Government of the United States is or may be at war or to use the same as supplies for any department or agency of the Government of the United States. Any moneys received by the United States from or in connection with the sale or disposal of any products under this section may, in the discretion of the President, be used as a revolving fund for further carrying out the purposes of this section. Any balance of such moneys not used as part of such revolving fund shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 13, to strike out:

SEC. 14a. That the president is authorized, if, in his opinion, it is necessary to conserve necessaries, to require any person having control of alcohol and distilled spirits, to turn over to the Government, for use or redistillation, such proportion of said alcohol or spirits as the President may deem necessary to meet the requirements of the Government in the manufacture of munitions and other military and hospital supplies in so far as such use or redistillation would dispense with the necessity of utilizing products and materials suitable for food and feeds in the future manufacture of alcohol or distilled spirits for the purposes herein enumerated. Upon the failure of the person to comply with the President's requirement, the President is authorized to requisition and take possession of the alcohol and distilled spirits required to be turned over and to pay for same a just compensation, to be determined by the President. And if the price so determined be not satisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same, such person shall be paid the amount prescribed by the President and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as, added to the amount so paid, will be just compensation for such spirits or alcohol, in the manner provided by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, in reference to that amendment, the committee proposed section 13, in italics, on pages 20 and 21, as an amendment to the House provision on page 19, section 14a. I do not feel at liberty to withdraw that amendment, proposed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, for they have had no meeting since; but it seems to me that the action of the Senate on Saturday would make that commandeering section for distilled liquor useless. Under the amendment which was adopted on Saturday the President simply takes possession of all of the distilled liquors in bond and utilizes them for governmental purposes. I therefore submit the matter to the Senate without any recommendation, for, as I have said, I have no power from the committee to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no doubt that the whole provision ought to be stricken from the bill, because that entire subject matter has been covered by the amendment which I offered and which the Senate agreed to on Saturday. It seems to me that the Senator having the bill in charge would have a perfect right to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Under our unanimous-consent agreement can this committee amendment now be considered?

Mr. SMOOT. This is a committee amendment—the commandeering section.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think, under the unanimous-consent agreement, we disposed of the subject matter last Saturday, and that therefore this committee amendment would go out.

Mr. SMOOT. That only applied to section 12; but the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is correct; there is no necessity for the provision now, and it ought to go out.

Mr. SHIELDS. I think this may be the only valid provision of this bill regarding the disposition of or in any way affecting distilled spirits. When the amendment of Senator SMOOT providing for the purchase of distilled spirits by the President was offered, I had very serious doubt as to its constitutionality, and apprehended that it was not only void but that it would invalidate the entire amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and did not vote for it. On investigation I am confirmed in that opinion. I have looked up some authorities, and I will present them to the Senate. If section 12 is unconstitutional, then section 13 is very material, and ought not to go out of the bill. This is a matter that ought to have the very serious consideration of the Senate, for, as stated by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the chairman of the Finance Committee, when he asked that the revenue bill be recommitted, if the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah prevails the revenue bill will have to be entirely rewritten in order to purchase the liquors as directed and to supply the revenue that will be lost. Before that committee acts along those lines this matter should be given attention.

Furthermore, if my view of the amendment is sound the bill will be without a provision to prohibit the manufacturer of intoxicating liquors from foodstuffs during the present war, a condition that in common with a majority of the Senators in this Chamber I will regret very much. Now is the time to cure this defect if it can be done.

The vice in the amendment is that therein Congress undertakes to fix the compensation to be paid for the property taken, which is a judicial and not a legislative question, provides no remedy for ascertaining the value of the property to be taken, and denies just compensation for it by authorizing an arbitrary deprivation for cost and a small profit instead of providing for payment of its market value. The Congress would in this way assume judicial powers, and take the property without due process and without just compensation.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee permit an inquiry right there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROUSSARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SHIELDS. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the first part of section 13 down to the words "the President" in line 4, page 21, be stricken out, it would save the point made by the Senator from Tennessee, I think.

Mr. SHIELDS. I can not agree with the Senator as to that, because I do not think the point I am making affects that section so much as it does section 12 as amended and adopted by the Senate on Saturday.

The suggestion of the Senator might meet the objections, at least in part.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think it would.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator may be right; but I have not the time to examine it and give an opinion now.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, if there is any question about it, why not adopt section 13 as it is, and let both sections 12 and 13 go to conference? Then there would not be any question that the conferees could adopt a portion of section 13 if they thought it would add anything to the constitutionality of the so-called Smoot amendment.

Mr. SHIELDS. The question, in my opinion, is so important, not only as affecting this bill but the revenue bill as well, that I think it is best that I present the authorities now so that the Senate may investigate the questions before the bill is disposed of and take proper action in the matter.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Utah is in these words:

Provided, That the President of the United States be, and hereby is, directed to take over for and on behalf of the Government of the United States all distilled liquors that are held in bond at the time this act goes into effect, and he is hereby authorized to pay the owners of such liquors the actual cost of the same plus a profit not exceeding 10 per cent.

THE POWER OF CONGRESS.

There can not be any doubt that while the Congress has the power to judge of the necessity of taking private property for public use in the exercise of the power of eminent domain, it can not fix the compensation to be paid the owner. Further, an act providing for the condemnation of property must always provide a remedy whereby the value of it can be ascertained and recovered by the property owner.

In Black on Constitutional Law, page 495, it is said:

The legislature in exercising the power of eminent domain can not in the law itself fix the amount of compensation to be paid to the property owner. Such compensation, in case of disagreement between the parties, must be ascertained and awarded by a fair and impartial tribunal. "While the legislature is the judge of the necessity or expediency of the exercise of the power of eminent domain, it is not the judge of the amount or justness of the compensation to be made when the power is exercised," and therefore, "when the Constitution prescribes no particular mode in which the compensation shall be ascertained, it would seem to follow that, as to the question of the amount of compensation, the owner of land taken for public use has a right to require that an impartial tribunal be provided for its determination and that the Government is bound in such cases to provide such tribunal, before which both parties may meet and discuss their claims on equal terms."

The leading case upon this subject is that of the Monongahela Navigation Co. against The United States, reported in One hundred and forty-eighth United States, page 338.

Before reading from the opinion I will state how the case arose. The State of Pennsylvania granted to the Monongahela Co. the right to improve the Monongahela River for navigation, and authorized it to charge tolls upon all vessels passing through its locks. It proceeded with the construction of those locks and exercised the franchise granted to it for some years. Afterwards the General Government, under its power to regulate commerce, which is paramount to that of the State's over navigable streams, undertook to improve the river, and in the act providing for the condemnation of the property of the Navigation Co. it excluded the value of the franchise granted to the company by the State of Pennsylvania. The question came before the Supreme Court of the United States whether the franchise was an element of value which the Navigation Co. had the right to have considered and receive compensation for. Thus it will be seen that the power of the legislature to fix the elements of value of the property condemned, and also the compensation to be paid, arose, and both were determined. I am not going to read all the case, but certain extracts that will show what was adjudged:

By this legislation Congress seems to have assumed the right to determine what shall be the measure of compensation. But this is a judicial and not a legislative question. The legislature may determine what private property is needed for public purposes—that is a question of a political and legislative character—but when the taking has been ordered, then the question of compensation is judicial. It does not rest with the public taking the property through Congress or the legislature, its representative, to say what compensation shall be paid or even what shall be the rule of compensation. The Constitution has declared that just compensation shall be paid, and the ascertainment of that is a judicial inquiry.

The court quoted with approval other cases, as follows:

Charles River Bridge Proprietors v. Warren Bridge Proprietors (36 U. S., 11 Peters, 420, 571 [9:773, 833]). Mr. Justice McLean in his opinion referring to a provision for compensation found in the character of the Warren Bridge, uses this language: "They (the legislature) provide that the new company shall pay annually to the college in behalf of the old one a hundred pounds. By this provision it appears that the legislature has undertaken to do what a jury of the country only could constitutionally do—assess the amount of compensation to which the complainants are entitled."

Isom v. Mississippi Central Railroad Co. (36 Miss., 300), where it is held:

The right of the legislature of the State by law to apply the property of the citizen to the public use and then to constitute itself the judge in its own case to determine what is the "just compensation" it ought to pay therefor or how much benefit it has conferred upon the citizen by thus taking his property without his consent or to extinguish any part of such "compensation" by prospective conjectural advantage or in any manner to interfere with the just powers and province of courts and juries in administering right and justice can not for a moment be admitted or tolerated under our Constitution. If anything can be clear and undeniable upon principles of natural justice or constitutional law it seems that this must be so.

Montgomery County v. Schuylkill Bridge Co. (110 Pa., 54, 58) in which the condemnation of a bridge belonging to the bridge company was sought, where the court said:

The bridge structure, the stone, iron, and wood, was but a portion of the property owned by the bridge company and taken by the county. There were the franchises of the company, including the right to take toll, and these were as effectually taken as was the bridge itself. Hence, to measure the damages by the mere cost of building the bridge would be to deprive the company of any compensation for the destruction of the franchises. The latter can no more be taken without compensation than can its tangible corporeal property.

The court, in the Monongahela case, further said:

In other words, it is within the competency of Congress to make such provision respecting the improvement of the Monongahela River as in its judgment the public interests demand. Its dominion is supreme.

But, like the other powers granted to Congress by the Constitution, the power to regulate commerce is subject to all the limitations imposed by such instrument, and among them is that of the fifth amendment we have heretofore quoted.

Referring to the clause requiring just compensation to be paid for property taken for public use.

Congress has supreme control over the regulation of commerce, but if, in exercising that supreme control, it deems it necessary to take private property, then it must proceed subject to the limitations imposed by this fifth amendment, and can take only on payment of just compensation. * * * Because Congress has power to take the property, it does not follow that it may destroy the franchise without compensation. Whatever be the true value of that which it takes from the individual owner must be paid to him before it can be said that just compensation for the property has been made. And that which is true in respect to a condemnation of property for a post office is equally true when condemnation is sought for the purpose of improving a natural highway. Suppose, in the improvement of a navigable stream, it was deemed essential to construct a canal with locks in order to pass around rapids or falls. Of the power of Congress to condemn whatever land may be necessary for such canal there can be no question, and of the equal necessity of paying full compensation for all private property taken there can be as little doubt. If a man's house must be taken, that must be paid for; and if the property is held and improved under a franchise from the State, with power to take tolls, that franchise must be paid for, because it is a substantial element in the value of the property taken. So, coming to the case before us, while the power of Congress to take this property is unquestionable, yet the power to take is subject to the constitutional limitation of just compensation.

That case has been frequently cited and approved. There can be no question, upon this authority, but that the attempt in this act to fix the measure of compensation of the owners of the vast amount of property proposed to be condemned for the public use renders the entire section of the bill a nullity.

Furthermore, not only has the Congress no power to fix the compensation, but it must provide a remedy for the owner of the property to recover the just compensation in some character of tribunal.

Judge Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations, says:

It is sufficient if provision is made by the law by which the party can obtain compensation, and that an impartial tribunal is provided for assessing it.

In this case the bill merely provides that the President shall take and pay for the property. There is no provision whatever for the property owner to institute any proceeding or in any way compel the payment of the compensation to which he is entitled. The decisions upon this point assume that when the State has provided a remedy by resort to which the party can have his compensation assessed, adequate means are afforded for its application, since the property of the municipality or of the State is a fund to which he can resort without risk of loss. It is essential, however, that the remedy be one which the party can resort to of his own motion. If the provision be such that only the public authorities appropriating the land are authorized to take proceedings for the assessment, it must be held to be void.

Mr. Black, in his work on the Constitution, has something to say upon that subject. It is in these words:

If the power of eminent domain is exercised for the benefit of the State or one of its municipalities, it is not essential that payment should first be provided, for it is supposed that the public faith is a sufficient pledge and guarantee for the payment of what is awarded. But in this case, the law must provide a means for making his claim effective against the State or municipality, which shall be adequate and certain, and which may be initiated by the property owner himself at his own discretion.

This bill contains no such provision, but places the entire matter in the hands of the Government, through the President.

Not only has the Congress no power to fix the compensation, and must provide a remedy by which it may be recovered in a tribunal of some nature, but it must allow the property owner to recover the market value of the property; and any attempt to fix any other measure of damages or of compensation than that value renders the act void. This bill, it will be remembered, fixes the compensation to be paid at the cost of the distilled spirits with 10 per cent profit. It allows nothing for the value which comes with age to this character of property. It allows nothing for the market value that will be so greatly increased by the provision of the Robinson amendment prohibiting the further distillation of distilled spirits during the war.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHIELDS. I will yield to the Senator in a moment.

It has been said here by some that it cost about 25 cents per gallon to distill these liquors, and by others about 75 cents per gallon. I do not know how that is; but anyone reading the quotations in the public prints knows, and in fact it is common knowledge, that many of these liquors now sell for from $6 to $12 a gallon on the market. They are worth that money to the owners. They are worth that money as security to the banks which hold the notes and other obligations of the owners of them. Will anyone say that those who own these liquors or those who hold these securities are going to allow their property to be confiscated in this way without challenging the act in the courts of the country? It is evident that this legislation will not stand for a moment before any court of competept jurisdiction.

I now yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me the position of the Senator is impregnable. The suggestion has been made by some, however, that this legislation is justified upon the ground of military necessity; and they liken this act to the act of the general who, in the prosecution of a war, encounters property which is indispensable to his operations, and seizes it, commandeers it; and if it is ever paid for it is a mere act of grace upon the part of the Government, rather than a matter of right.

Does the Senator concede that that proposition is the law? And if it is, may not that be entirely differentiated from the question under consideration now?

Mr. SHIELDS. That is a question that I will discuss, at the suggestion of the Senator, later, when I finish the one in hand; but there was never a greater sophistry or heresy propounded in a legislative body than that this property or any other property, in the state of affairs in this country, can be commandeered and taken without compensation. I will present some authorities on that subject. I did not intend to go into the question at this time, but I will answer it briefly when I reach it.

I have stated that the owners of this property are entitled to recover its market value, and not its cost price with a limited profit, and I will do no more than present the authorities upon that subject.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator gave a number of reasons why the market value might be different from the cost. I say that I think his statement can not be answered by anybody; but, in addition to the reasons which he gave, let me suggest this:

It would hardly be claimed, if the Government wanted to take a piece of real estate, that the Government could propose to pay what the owner paid for the property and set that up as the value, or what the owner paid and 10 per cent additional, and set that up as the value, because the owner may have obtained the property for much less than its real value, or since the owner has acquired it the property may have attained an entirely different value. So it may be said, with reference to everything that is capable of barter and sale, that the price it cost the owner does not at all determine the question of value.

I simply wanted to make that observation in addition to the illustrations the Senator was giving.

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes. I shall present some authorities directly upon that point in a moment. The converse equally applies to the Senator's illustration. Suppose the property cost $100,000 and a railroad company was proposing to condemn it. The same rule applies to a corporation that applies to the Government, and the same rule applies to personal property as to real property. There is no distinction in the nature or character of the property concerning the measure of damages or compensation to be paid when the right of eminent domain is exercised. Now, following the illustration of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], suppose the property cost $100,000, but at the time it was taken it had so depreciated that it was worth only $25,000. Would the party condemning it be required to pay the cost? Certainly not. The rule is that he pays the market value at the time the property is taken, as if the owner wanted to sell and the party seeking to condemn wanted to buy in the ordinary course of business.

Speaking about the compensation to be paid, Judge Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations, at pages 819 and 820, says:

If the whole of a man's estate is taken, there can generally be little difficulty in fixing upon the measure of compensation, for it is apparent that in such case he ought to have the whole market value of his premises, and he can not reasonably demand more. The question is reduced to one of market value, to be determined upon the testimony of those who have knowledge upon that subject and whose business or experience entitles their opinions to weight. It may be that in such a case the market value may not seem to the owner adequate compensation, for he may have reasons peculiar to himself, springing from association or other cause, which make him unwilling to part with the property on the estimate of his neighbors; but such reasons are incapable of being taken into account in legal proceedings where the question is one of compensation in money, inasmuch as it is manifestly impossible to measure them by any standard of pecuniary value. Concede to the Government a right to appropriate the property on paying for it and we are at once remitted to the same standards for estimating values which are applied in other cases, and which necessarily measure the worth of property by its value as an article of sale or as a means of producing pecuniary return.

I will also read from Mr. Black upon the same subject:

The rules for ascertaining the amount of compensation to be paid to the owner of property taken under the power of eminent domain are subject to some variations, depending on the circumstances of the particular case. But the general principles are always the same. And these may be arranged in three classes, according as the appropriation is of the whole of the tract or other property, or only a portion thereof, or consists in injury and damage to the property without a physical taking of it.

Of course this is a taking of the whole of the property; and that is the class we are now discussing.

In the first place, if the State or corporation takes the whole of the tract of land, or the franchise and plant of a corporation, or any other entire piece of property, the owner is entitled to receive the entire market value of the property. The market value is not the mere amount which the property has cost the owner; it may be much greater. Neither does it mean the amount which the property would bring at a forced sale, but what it would bring in the hands of a prudent seller at liberty to fix the time and the conditions of the sale. If the property taken consists in the franchise and plant of a corporation, the market value is not to be ascertained by the par value of the stock, or the cost of the improvements, but it is measured by the actual selling value of the entire capital stock.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SHIELDS. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does the Senator believe that that authority would connect the distillery itself with the product—that the distillery would be a part of the property which is thus affected?

Mr. SHIELDS. Oh, no; it is the whisky alone that is to be valued.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The whisky alone?

Mr. SHIELDS. I suppose the Senator's question is suggested by Mr. Black's reference to real estate in giving the illustration.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr, SHIELDS. That is the most common character of property concerning which the power of eminent domain is exercised.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. SHIELDS. And he gives an illustration as to that. But if the Senator will remember the quotation, he says "land or other property"; and there is no better-settled principle than that the rule applicable to real estate is applicable to personal property, or to intangible values such as franchises when so condemned and taken. The character or nature of the property does not affect the compensation to be paid. The rule is the same as to all.

The Congress by undertaking to fix the value of the property and compensation to be paid has usurped the prerogatives and powers of the judiciary, and for that reason the act is void. It is void for failure to provide any remedy to the owner of the property by which he can enforce payment of compensation. It is also void because it undertakes to fix the value of the property at cost, with 10 per cent profit, instead of its market value.

THE WAR POWER.

I am asked by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] whether the Congress has not the right to commandeer this property, and consequently the validity of the act can be sustained as a war measure.

Section 13 is a provision for commandeering the property in the exercise of what, I think, is inaccurately called the war power. This section is not undertaken to be enacted under that power. In fact, several Senators spoke of it as being the best and the most effective prohibition law that ever had been suggested or proposed to be enacted; and if you get down to the truth of it, there was nothing moving this amendment but the desire to enter into immediate prohibition in the United States. But it is immaterial what the Congress or any Member of it calls the law. The question is, What is the nature of it?

The war power, so called, in my opinion, has been misapplied, misinterpreted, and misstated frequently since we have been considering emergency legislation during this special session. There is no general power of government floating about in the atmosphere that can be brought down and applied to conditions whenever we declare war. Whatever power Congress has in a state of war must be found within the four corners of the Constitution. Whatever power the President can exert must be found within the same limits. There is no such thing as military power to be exercised by Congress. There is such a power to be exercised by the the President, as Commander in Chief of the Army, and not otherwise.

I find a very clear definition of military power and of martial law in the Encyclopedia of the United States Supreme Court Reports, volume 8, page 272, which, I think, it will be well to read in this connection:

Martial law is the law of military necessity in the actual presence of war.

Martial law is to be distinguished from military law, which is used in peace and war, and is found in acts of Congress prescribing rules and articles of war or otherwise providing for the government of the national forces.

Martial law is also to be distinguished from military government, which is exercised in time of foreign war without the boundaries of the United States, or in time of rebellion and civil war within the States or districts occupied by rebels treated as belligerents.

Martial law is called into action by Congress, or temporarily, when the action of Congress can not be invited, and in the case of justifying or excusing peril, by the President, in times of insurrection or invasion, or of civil or foreign war within districts or localities where ordinary law no longer adequately secures public safety and private rights. And a State itself may determine whether a crisis demands the creation of martial law.

Martial law is administered by the general of the Army, and is, in fact, his will. Of necessity it is arbitrary, but it must be obeyed.

Martial law is to be exercised in times of invasion or insurrection within the limits of the United States, or during rebellion within the limits of States maintaining adhesion to the National Government when the public danger requires its exercise.

Martial law can not arise from a threatened invasion. The necessity must be actual and present; the invasion real; such as effectually closes the courts and deposes the civil administration.

Martial law is confined to the locality of actual war. Martial rule can never exist where the courts are open and in the proper and unobstructed exercise of their jurisdiction.

Mr. President, these definitions and statements of the distinction between martial and military law, and the characteristics of each, are abundantly sustained by numbers of the adjudged cases of the Supreme Court of the United States. Indeed, there is no controversy but that they are sound.

Can there by any control, use, or appropriation of private property under military law? Certainly not. Military law is confined to control of the Army under the acts of Congress, applicable equally in war and in peace. So no warrant for such legislation can be found under it.

Martial law is the law of necessity, of military necessity, in case of foreign invasion or in case of insurrection, when the courts of the country are closed and can not be resorted to. Do such conditions prevail in a single State, in a single county, or in a single neighborhood of this country? Absolutely none. Peace and order prevail everywhere within our boundaries. The courts are open and the law prevails.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. SHIELDS. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to ask the able Senator from Tennessee, whose ability as a jurist we all know, and his great reputation as chief justice of the State which he now represents, with which we are familiar, does he insist that during war, when the Commander in Chief is exercising powers, that before the act can be done you must find in the Constitution an express provision directing or giving assent; or is not the reverse of that the rule, that one must find in the Constitution where the act is prohibited before it can be regarded as interdicted or illegal?

Mr. SHIELDS. I have no trouble in answering the Senator's question. If there is any principle well settled in constitutional law in the United States it is that the United States is a Government of enumerated powers; and if the Congress or the Executive or the judiciary or any officer undertakes to exercise any power or authority under that Government, he must place his finger upon the power to do so within the four corners of the Constitution.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I beg to interrupt the Senator. The eminent junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] took that position the other day. What I wish to ask the Senator from Tennessee now is to draw this distinction that must be recognized. In matters of war the Commander in Chief, and, indeed, other officials of the Government in executing the orders of Congress after the war has been declared, is there not the inherent power in the Executive—that is, in the people at large—to do such things as will be necessary to carry on the war, and before it can be prohibited there must be some expression of the Constitution disclosed that prohibits that particular act before it can be regarded as prohibited.

Mr. SHIELDS. I unhesitatingly say no to the Senator from Illinois, and I challenge him to find the slightest authority for his proposition in the Constitution, adjudged cases of our courts, or in any textbook upon the subject.

Mr. LEWIS. I ask my able friend if he recalls the McNabb case? I will send for it. I think the words are these: The Supreme Court of the United States say that where a law is unconstitutional those making the contention should be able to put their finger upon the particular provision of the Constitution that specifically prohibits the act before it can be urged or should be urged that the deed itself is in violation of the Constitution. Does not the Senator recall that language of the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. SHIELDS. Apply that rule to State constitutions. The States have all the powers of government which are not prohibited to them in their constitutions or surrendered to the Federal Government. But the opposite rule applies to the Federal Government. It has only the powers that are expressly granted to it in its Constitution.

Mr. LEWIS. I think, Mr. President, we will see the distinction. The Senator contends that as to a State constitution the inherent power of the sovereignty of the people in the State is unlimited, and that before you could claim that the act was illegal you would have to put your finger upon the provision of the State constitution that prohibited it; but as to the Federal Government the position of the Senator is that we have only conferred such powers as we have contributed to that Federal Constitution, and without the power there specifically to authorize the act, it shall be presumed not to be constitutional.

Mr. SHIELDS. Of course that is elementary law.

Mr. LEWIS. There is where the eminent Senator and myself differ in the construction. I catch his distinction.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Tennessee will recall that at the Battle of New Orleans in the War of 1812 the American soldiers used bales of cotton to build a fort. I suppose the Senator would concede that they had the right to take that cotton without any further ado or without any action. Now, suppose the cotton had been destroyed, burned up entirely, what would be the right of the owners of that cotton as against the Government of the United States? I mean the legal right and not merely the moral right. The Government can not be sued without its consent.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator will recall that the Supreme Court of the United States held in relation to the cotton taken by Gen. Jackson that there was no remedy against the United States because the cotton was taken by the army in the field, that it was the ravage of war, which is entirely different from taking property in time of peace, using it as here proposed. Entirely different rules prevail in the two cases.

Mr. McCUMBER. I recall the decision. The point I wanted to make to the Senator and to get his judgment upon was where a question of imminency is to be determined may not the legislature of a State or the Congress of the United States determine what is imminent, what is absolutely necessary, and inasmuch as the Government can not be sued without its consent, can it not make such regulations with reference not only to the measure of damages, but the evidence by which those damages are to be established, either limiting them or extending them, once conceding the right of the legislature to determine that question?

Mr. SHIELDS. I do not agree with the Senator. There are numbers of cases that arose on account of damages to property that was destroyed by the ravages of war and in battle. One case which occurs to me I remember, although I have not read it for some time, where Confederate sharpshooters got into a brick residence and were picking off Federal soldiers. They were dislodged by shelling the building, and during the night the Federal authorities sent out and burned the building. The battle was renewed the next morning. The owners brought suit, and it was held that that was a loss growing out of imminent military necessity for the protection of the country and the ravages of the war and no liability existed.

Mr. GORE. It was immediate and imminent.

Mr. SHIELDS. It was immediate and imminent and no damages could be recovered.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator hold that the imminency of the question can never be determined by the legislative department of the Government? That is the question.

Mr. SHIELDS. This is not a new question. There are a number of cases of this kind growing out of the Civil War, some out of the Mexican War, and I will read an extract from one of them. None of these questions are new; they are elementary; the books are full of them.

In Mitchell v. Harmony (13 Howard, 134) the facts were as follows: Gen. Mitchell seized the property of a citizen who was following the Army and trading with the natives, but under such conditions he was not prohibited from so doing. The property was destroyed. After the war Harmony brought suit against Mitchell for trespass on the ground that he had exceeded his power as a general; that there was no military necessity for such seizure and destruction of property; and the Supreme Court of the United States gave him a judgment. The court said:

> There are, without doubt, occasions in which private property may lawfully be taken possession of or destroyed to prevent it from falling into the hands of the public enemy; and also where a military officer, charged with particular duty, may impress private property into the public service or take it for public use. Unquestionably in such cases the Government is bound to make full compensation to the owner, but the officer is not a trespasser.
>
> But we are clearly of opinion that in all of these cases the danger must be immediate and impending, or the necessity urgent for the public service, such as will not admit of delay and where the action of the civil authority would be too late in providing the means which the occasion calls for. It is impossible to define the particular circumstances of danger or necessity in which this power may be lawfully exercised. Every case must depend on its own circumstances. It is the emergency that gives the right, and the emergency must be shown to exist before the taking can be justified.

That answers the Senator's question. Raymond against Thomas, found reported in Ninety-first United States, page 716, is a case very instructive along these lines. I think it grew out of the Civil War. The court said:

> It is an unbending rule of law that the exercise of military power where the rights of the citizen are concerned shall never be pushed beyond what the exigency requires.

Can it be said that there is any urgency or exigency which requires that property in the United States shall be seized and used and applied to military purposes without resort to the courts, all of which are open? Is there such an impending necessity for the public good, to preserve the national existence? I do not believe any Senator will contend for a moment that that is the fact.

Now, about this war power. To my mind it is clear——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the rule for which the Senator from Tennessee contends with so much force is true, the Government is not left powerless. The Government still has its remedy of taxation and can reach the article in question in a strictly legitimate way. It may be burdensome, but that power still resides.

Mr. SHIELDS. And it has its power to go into the courts and condemn the property required for national defense.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It has its right of eminent domain.

Mr. SHIELDS. Congress has the right to create a commission to condemn it, to ascertain how much of this whisky it wants, and to find the market value to be paid. Our courts are open. There is no interruption whatever in civil process or civil procedure. There is no trouble with the Government in this case getting necessary supplies of distilled spirits.

Now, the war power of Congress, in my opinion, is to be found, and found nowhere else, in the provisions authorizing Congress to declare war, to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a navy. It is also authorized to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces, but this provision is not here involved. It is also authorized to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrection and repel invasion, and to provide for organizing armies and disciplining the militia and for governing such parts of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of officers and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress.

The vital provisions are the power to declare war, to raise and support armies, and that includes the supporting of the militia, to provide and maintain a Navy. I think those provisions authorize the Congress to do whatever is necessary to raise the Army. Under that comes the power of conscription. It is authorized to do whatever is necessary to support the Army and maintain the Navy, and under that power it has the right and the power, in my opinion, to conserve the food supply of the country, and for that reason I am supporting that character of legislation. But those powers are not unlimited. They are to be exercised in harmony with every other provision of the Federal Constitution. The President is the Commander in Chief of the Army, and when the Army and the Navy are raised and organized by the Congress he has absolute control over them. He may send them where he pleases, and Congress has no power over them, but in the exercise of that power he must be controlled by the other provisions of the Constitution from which he derives his powers. Neither Congress nor the President can rise higher than their creator, than their source of power.

Talk about any provision of the Constitution being suspended during war, how are you going about selecting the provisions? Are you going to suspend those creating the courts? If one is suspended all are suspended. The President would have no power under which he could command the Army, because the source of his power would be destroyed, suspended, and Congress would not have the right to enact this or any other legislation because the provisions vesting in it legislative powers would be suspended.

It is said this suspension is necessary for preservation of national existence, that war is made upon us, and as a matter of necessity, higher than the Constitution, we may adopt means which are violative of the provisions of the fundamental law.

How far are you going to carry that? The war of 1812 was the first waged by us under this Constitution. That was a war of national defense. That was a case where you say the necessity arose. Did it arise in the War with Mexico, which was a war of aggression and of conquest? Have you a right to suspend the Constitution in order to go marauding about the world seeking new territory and booty of other nations?

Was the Constitution suspended when we had war with the Indian tribes? Was it suspended when we in the name of humanity officiously went down to Cuba and despoiled Spain of her colonies? Was the Constitution suspended when we committed acts of flagrant war against Mexico in seizing Vera Cruz and taking charge of the customs of that port and appropriating them?

If you say a state of war suspends the Constitution, it must apply to all cases, not to mere cases of defense. War is war, whether is is a war of conquest or a war of defense.

Now, I say I believe Congress and the President have the right to exercise all powers necessary to carry the powers expressly given them to a successful, if possible, conclusion, provided they violate no provision of the Constitution.

Perhaps the first case defining the extent of the powers given the Federal Government by the Constitution was Gibbons v. Ogden (4 Wheaton, 196), involving the power of Congress under the commerce clause. There the court said:

This power—

That of the regulation of commerce—

like all others vested in Congress, is complete in itself and may be exercised to its utmost extent and acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed in the Constitution.

In McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheaton, 421) the court said:

We admit, as all must admit, that the powers of the Government are limited, and that its limits are not to be transcended. But we think the sound construction of the Constitution must allow to the National Legislature that discretion with respect to the means by which the powers it confers are to be carried into execution which will enable that body to perform the high duties assigned to it in the manner most beneficial to the people. Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited, but consist with the letter and spirit of the Constitution are constitutional.

I have heard these quotations from those cases read several times here and great emphasis given to the clauses stating that the powers vested in Congress are complete and may be exercised to their utmost extent—

Let the end be legitimate; let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited, but consistent with the Constitution, may be used—but no emphasis was given to the statement in Gibbons against Ogden, concluding the excerpt I have read in these words:

acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed in the Constitution.

Or in McCulloch against Maryland in these words:

and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited and consistent with the Constitution.

Mr. GORE. And with the spirit and letter of the Constitution.

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes. There is no clause in the Constitution that is of any greater scope of authority, that is of any greater dignity or that is more binding upon the President and upon Congress or upon the people than any other clause. Every provision there owes its origin to the same high source—the people of the country. They all stand upon the same basis, upon the same platform, and you can not exercise one in violation of another.

That question has been before the courts frequently, and I am only going to refer you to one case upon the subject, for it illustrates the principle fully. I could read you from both Cooley and Black to the same effect, but I am not going to do it now. I am going to read you an excerpt from the very late case of Adair against the United States, involving the commerce clause of the Constitution. It is reported in 208 United States, page 177:

Of course, as has been often said, Congress has a large discretion in the selection or choice of the means to be employed in the regulation of interstate commerce, and such discretion is not to be interfered with, except where that which is done is in plain violation of the Constitution.

The power to regulate commerce is just as full, just as authoritative, as that of war, and it has frequently been said by the Supreme Court that it and taxation are the two greatest and highest powers vested in the American Congress by that Constitution.

Now, proceeding in the Adair case, I read:

Manifestly any rules prescribed for the conduct of interstate commerce in order to be within the competency of Congress, under its power to regulate commerce among the States, must have some real or substantial relation to or connection with the commerce regulated. * * * We need scarcely repeat what this court has more than once said, that the power to regulate interstate commerce, great and paramount as that power is, can not be exercised in violation of any fundamental right secured by other provisions of the Constitution.

CONSTITUTION SUPREME IN PEACE AND WAR.

The power vested in the President as Commander in Chief, and the power of Congress to declare war and to raise and support armies and maintain navies is no higher than that vested by the commerce clause, and it can not be exercised to violate the fifth amendment—to deprive a citizen of his property without compensation. The leading case upon limitations of the powers of the President and Congress when the country is at war is Ex parte Milligan. I am going to read some extracts from it.

The court in that case, among other things, said:

Time has proven the discernment of our ancestors, for even these provisions, expressed in such plain English words that it would seem the ingenuity of man could not evade them, are now, after the lapse of more than 70 years, sought to be avoided. These great and good men foresaw that troublous times would arise, when rulers and people would become restive under restraint, and seek by sharp and decisive measures to accomplish ends deemed just and proper; and that the principles of constitutional liberty would be in peril unless established by irrepealable law. The history of the world has taught them that what was done in the past might be attempted in the future. The Constitution of the United States is a law for rulers and people, equally in war and in peace, and covers with the shield of its protection all classes of men, at all times and under all circumstances. No doctrine involving more pernicious consequences was ever invented by the wit of man than that any of its provisions can be suspended during any of the great exigencies of government. Such a doctrine leads directly to anarchy or despotism, but the theory of necessity on which it is based is false, for the Government, within the Constitution, has all the powers granted to it which are necessary to preserve its existence; as has been happily proved by the result of the great effort to throw off its just authority.

* * * * * * *

If this position is sound to the extent claimed, then when war exists, foreign or domestic, and the country is subdivided into military departments for mere convenience, the commander of one of them can, if he chooses, within his limits, on the plea of necessity, with the approval of the Executive, substitute military force for and to the exclusion of the laws, and punish all persons, as he thinks right and proper, without fixed or certain rules.

The statement of this proposition shows its importance; for, if true, republican government is a failure, and there is an end of liberty regulated by law. Martial law, established on such a basis, destroys every guaranty of the Constitution, and effectually renders the "military independent of and superior to the civil power"—the attempt to do which by the King of Great Britain was deemed by our fathers such an offense that they assigned it to the world as one of the causes which impelled them to declare their independence. Civil liberty and this kind of martial law can not endure together; the antagonism is irreconcilable; and, in the conflict, one or the other must perish.

This Nation, as experience has proved, can not always remain at peace, and has no right to expect that it will always have wise and humane rulers, sincerely attached to the principles of the Constitution. Wicked men, ambitious of power, with hatred of liberty and contempt of law, may fill the place once occupied by Washington and Lincoln; and if this right is conceded, and the calamities of war again befall us, the dangers to human liberty are frightful to contemplate. If our fathers had failed to provide for just such a contingency, they would have been false to the trust reposed in them. They knew—the history of the world told them—the Nation they were founding, be its existence long or short, would be involved in war; how often or how long continued, human foresight could not tell; and that unlimited power, wherever lodged at such a time, was especially hazardous to freemen. For this, and other equally weighty reasons, they secured the inheritance they had fought to maintain by incorporating in a written Constitution the safeguards which time had proved were essential to its preservation. Not one of these safeguards can the President, or Congress, or the judiciary disturb, except the one concerning the writ of habeas corpus.

* * * * * * *

The illustrious men who framed that instrument were guarding the foundations of civil liberty against the abuses of unlimited power; they were full of wisdom, and the lessons of history informed them that a trial by an established court, assisted by an impartial jury, was the only sure way of protecting the citizen against oppression and wrong. Knowing this, they limited the suspension to one great right, and left the rest to remain forever inviolable. But it is insisted that the safety of the country in time of war demands that this broad claim for martial law shall be sustained. If this were true, it could be well said that a country, preserved at the sacrifice of all the cardinal principles of liberty, is not worth the cost of preservation. Happily it is not so.

* * * * * * *

It follows, from what has been said on this subject, that there are occasions when martial rule can be properly applied. If, in foreign invasion or civil war, the courts are actually closed, and it is impossible to administer criminal justice according to law, then on the theater of active military operations, where war really prevails, there is a necessity to furnish a substitute for the civil authority, thus overthrown, to preserve the safety of the Army and society; and as no power is left but the military, it is allowed to govern by martial rule until the laws can have their free course. As necessity creates the rule, so it limits its duration; for, if this Government is continued after the courts are reinstated, it is a gross usurpation of power. Martial rule can never exist where the courts are open, and in the proper and unobstructed exercise of their jurisdiction. It is also confined to the locality of actual war. Because, during the late Rebellion it could have been enforced in Virginia, where the national authority was overturned and the courts driven out, it does not follow that it should obtain in Indiana, where that authority was never disputed and justice was always administered. And so in the case of a foreign invasion, martial rule may become a necessity in one State when in another it would be "mere lawless violence."

Mr. President, I had not intended to go into the question of war power at this time, but I am very glad to have done so. I think these authorities are worthy of consideration by every Senator in this Chamber. All these cases involve the question whether or not Congress can enact laws under the powers vested in it to declare war, to support armies, and to maintain navies, in violation of other provisions of the Constitution. It is clear that it can not, without a gross usurpation of power which is unauthorized, and which will never be approved by the people of this country.

I am of opinion that the vices which I have pointed out in the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], authorizing the President to take over all of the two hundred and odd million gallons of whisky now in bond in the United States and pay the cost price of it, with 10 per cent profit, makes the whole provision a nullity. I believe that the courts would hold that the original provision of the Robinson amendment providing for the prohibition of the distillation of spirits during the present emergency is so intimately connected with this amendment that Congress would not have passed one without the other, and that the entire section would be held null and void; and thus there would be no restraint upon the manufacture of intoxicants under this bill, so earnestly desired by a majority in this Chamber.

I have favored such legislation; I have voted for all the provisions prohibiting the manufacture of foodstuffs during the present war into alcoholic liquors during this great emergency, except this amendment, and I have given my reasons for not voting for it.

I dislike to see all this legislation destroyed and nullified by an overzealous amendment. I had hoped that all these amendments would be voted down and that the House provision would ultimately be approved and retained in the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SHIELDS. I believe the section as it now stands is void, and that if the bill becomes a law without alteration there will be no legislation upon the subject. That is the reason that impels me to call attention to its infirmities at this time.

Now I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I have listened with much interest to the argument of the Senator from Tennessee, and there is great force in what he says about the possible unconstitutionality of the section that was agreed to on Saturday; but does not the Senator think that this provision might remain in the bill and give us an opportunity to try to whip it into shape in conference?

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I have always thought when a vicious and an unconstitutional measure showed its head it ought to be struck right then. I never thought it ought to be tolerated.

How can the Finance Committee act with such a provision as this in the bill? Can it say it is constitutional and go on and not provide the money to pay for this whisky and not provide for the additional revenue that they have levied upon distilled spirits? They ought to have some basis upon which to frame their bill intelligently and meet the necessities of the Government.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SHIELDS. I do.

Mr. REED. In connection with what the Senator is saying now I call his attention to the fact that the chairman of the Finance Committee, upon the adoption of what is known as the Smoot amendment, which the Senator is now discussing, announced upon the floor of the Senate that he would be obliged to ask that the revenue bill be recommitted to the Finance Committee, and he further stated that, in his opinion, that committee would not be able to bring in any report until a final disposition was made of this provision. That in all human probability, in my judgment, will take three or four weeks. I mean it will take that long to get this bill out of conference and to then take up and pass the revenue bill. So the Senator's point, that this matter ought to be disposed of now, is certainly entitled to very great weight.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I think so. The Smoot amendment, I believe, is clearly unconstitutional, and in order that the Finance Committee may act intelligently it ought to be eliminated, and in the view I take of it—and I believe a majority of Senators concur with me in that—as it is the only provision in this bill prohibiting the distillation or the manufacture of intoxicating liquors out of foodstuffs, if it is void it ought to be known now and eliminated and a valid constitutional provision effecting that end included.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SHIELDS. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If what the Senator says is true and the manner of meeting his objection is correct, how can we dispose of this amendment, when under the unanimous-consent agreement it is in the bill to the final passage by the Senate? That being true, I should like very much to hear what the Senator has to say about the provision in the bill lying before him—section 13, I think—which does provide a manner in which distilled spirits may be commandeered and the owners thereof compensated. That is the situation which confronts the Senate; we are powerless to do otherwise, even if the very strong statement of the Senator from Tennessee is to be accepted. The bill will have to go to conference under our self-imposed rule, and whether that provision, section 13, ought to go to conference also is a parliamentary question that we must now meet.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, the Senator has now asked me a question that I must confess I am unable to answer, for if there is anything I know nothing of it is the rules of the Senate and, I might add further, parliamentary law. The Senator has been in Congress for about 25 years; he is an able parliamentarian, and I will go to him for advice upon that subject.

Now, as to section 13, authorizing or empowering the President to commandeer all the whisky needed for governmental purposes, I approve of it and I intend to vote for it. I think it ought to stay in the bill, even if there is a provision of the kind attempted to be put into it by the amendment of the Senator from Utah. I do not think the necessities of the Government ought to be jeopardized by this extreme measure in a sense which has no relation particularly to the war. This bill is primarily a war measure, and that consideration should dominate every other impulse, every other motive, and every other action in enacting it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I think I ought to say, in order that I may not be misunderstood, that when I voted for the Smoot amendment I realized that a mere arbitrary award was not such a day in court as the owner of the property was entitled to have. The provision to which I have called the Senator's attention does provide the means of ascertaining the value of this property and a forum where the issue may be tried.

If that same provision could be attached to the so-called Smoot amendment, the point made by the Senator from Tennessee would not be so compelling.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I have not considered the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan, but I have no doubt that what he suggests is possible. I believe the section could be rewritten and that the same object could be accomplished by following the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan. I understand, however, that section 12 relates to the conservation of food and the conservation of the manhood of the country during this emergency, and that section 13 relates to another and entirely different matter—that of furnishing the Government, the Army, and the Navy with the necessary distilled spirits for the manufacture of munitions and for other purposes required by existing conditions.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, when it was first suggested that section 13 should go out of the bill because it had been covered by the Smoot amendment I acquiesced in that suggestion, because I believed the subject matter was covered; but after reflecting upon the Smoot amendment I am satisfied that that amendment in its present form is not worth the paper it is written on, and I do not believe there is any answer to the legal argument of the Senator from Tennessee that the Smoot amendment is absolutely unconstitutional.

I assume we are precluded from going back to the Smoot amendment under the unanimous-consent agreement and that it never can be brought up again. It has been reconsidered once and I assume it can not be reconsidered again.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, at that point, if the Senator will yield, I will say that the Vice President, occupying the chair at the time, in answer to a parliamentary inquiry I propounded, expressed, at least tentatively, the opinion that a motion to reconsider would be in order at any time while the bill was in Committee of the Whole and before it went to the Senate.

Mr. KENYON. I will ask the Senator was not the motion to reconsider made and was not that passed on?

Mr. STONE. To reconsider the Smoot amendment?

Mr. KENYON. Yes. I think such a motion was made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was.

Mr. STONE. I had forgotten that fact.

Mr. KENYON. I am quite sure that was done.

Now, Mr. President, I merely rose to offer the suggestion that section 13 be kept in the bill. It will then certainly be possible for the conferees to shape the Smoot amendment and section 13 so that the provision will be entirely constitutional. I do not know, but I assume that the conferees might have the power in any event to make such a change in the Smoot amendment as would provide for a method of compensation such as written in section 13, so as to make that amendment constitutional; but if the two sections are kept in, while somewhat inconsistent, the question can certainly be worked out by the conferees.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the situation confronting us at this moment illustrates very clearly the passion, the unwise riotous passion, that too often influences the judgment of Senators who are bent upon accomplishing a given end at all hazards.

It is surprising to me that Senators of the rank and recognized ability and standing of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], the latter of whom adorned the supreme bench of his State for years, with his learning and high judicial capacity, should have found it necessary to take 30 hours or more, including a Sunday, to discover that the Smoot amendment was violative of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. President, during the debate on this bill my colleague, the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], fully laid before the Senate, with elaborate comment, most of the very decisions bearing upon this question which have been read in our hearing to-day. There was no reason for any misunderstanding. And even while the Smoot amendment itself was under consideration I know that several Senators protested against it on the ground that it was unconstitutional. True it is, that Senators under the rule had only five minutes in which to register their protests. I made one of those five-minute protest speeches myself, urging upon the Senate that the effect of the amendment would be to take and appropriate private property for a supposed public use without due process of law and without providing for just and adequate compensation. The matter was fully before the Senate, and ought to have been understood; and I repeat my expression of astonishment that Senators who voted for that amendment should now appear to tell us that the amendment is not worth the paper it is written upon; that it is invalid because clearly unconstitutional.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] does not happen to be in the Chamber. I think, however, that the Senator from Tennessee did not vote for the amendment, but did express his doubt as to its constitutionality within five minutes after it was agreed to.

Mr. STONE. I am under the impression that he did vote for the amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; he did not.

Mr. STONE. He did not?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No.

Mr. STONE. Then I apologize, for I spoke under a wrong impression in so far as the Senator from Tennessee is concerned.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. He did not vote; he was not in the Chamber.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Oregon says that the Senator from Tennessee was not present and did not vote; but the Senator from Iowa was present and did vote.

Mr. KENYON. I think I did not hear the Senator's argument, though. I was out of the Chamber at the time.

Mr. STONE. Well, it ought not to have been necessary for anybody to make an argument to so astute and able a lawyer as the Senator from Iowa upon a subject of that kind, and he need not have taken 24 or 36 hours to find out that the amendment is, as he now says it is, not worth the paper it is written upon.

Mr. KENYON. It is probably true that I had not given it sufficient consideration; but I followed the argument of the Senator from Tennessee to-day very closely and have been convinced by it.

Mr. STONE. Other Senators no doubt have done the same thing. I merely wish at this moment to emphasize—that is the purpose I had in rising—how improvidently we act, how unwisely we act, when we have in mind to do something without regard to how we do it or the consequences. The Constitution is of little concern to some gentlemen if it stands in the way of something they are anxious to do. They just brush the Constitution aside and go on and vote for whatever may be presented, so that it will further the thing that they have in mind to accomplish.

I hope this very pertinent situation, this very impressive situation, may have some sort of leveling and sobering effect upon the judgment and the action of Senators hereafter.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I have thus far avoided taking up much of the time of the Senate on this important legislation. It is one of the most complicated problems and one of the most discouraging schemes that has ever been brought to my attention. Coming events cast their shadows before. From the time this bill was incubated to the present the price of wheat has gradually gone down and down until to-day it is a dollar a bushel less than it was during the early part of May.

I can explain in a few words what seem to me the serious considerations in connection with this bill. Who were the purchasers and what was the market in normal times under the conditions which prevailed before this novel scheme was inaugurated? We had three sets of purchasers. We had the gristmills, we had the exporters, and we had the men who traded on the exchanges. These different classes furnished the wheat market for the farmers, and that market was of such a character that the farmer who had a load of wheat was in almost as good a situation as the man who had a bank account. If he needed cash, he could always take his wheat to the elevator and get the money for it.

We have—and I am speaking more particularly of the spring-wheat section, for I am not so familiar with the winter-wheat section—we have in that country a few of what are called large terminal elevator companies in the cities of Minneapolis and Duluth. These companies have a large number of country elevators. They have them at nearly all the little railroad stations throughout the Northwestern, or the spring-wheat, States. In addition to that the farmers have organized themselves in many localities and have a large number of elevators. There are perhaps—I can not give the exact number—between five and six thousand of these country elevators, and perhaps a third of them are what are commonly called farmers' elevators.

How is the money furnished to these local market places where the farmers go with their loads of wheat? The big terminal companies, who speculate and trade on the grain exchanges every day, send the funds out through the country to the local stations, as a result of which their agents who are running the elevators have money on hand, so that when the farmer comes to the railroad station, if he wants to sell his load of wheat, he can have a chance to sell immediately and get cash for it.

The farmers' elevators operate on a somewhat different line—not all of them, but most of them. As a rule, these farmers' elevators have not sufficient funds to handle the business; so they make arrangements with commission men in the cities and through them secure the funds with which to buy the wheat, the funds being sent out to the country elevators. When those carloads of wheat arrive at the terminals at Minneapolis and St. Paul, as I have said, up to the present time they have had three classes of customers. They have had the local millers, who perhaps have been the smallest customers, in addition to whom they have had the representatives of the mills in different parts of the country, chiefly in the East, where grain is not raised to any extent; they have had the exporters; and then they have had the traders on the grain exchange. While the market would fluctuate from day to day, ordinarily, in normal times, except in the peculiar conditions which prevailed early last spring, on the whole these boards of trade have been wholesome and safe regulators of the market, and have continually furnished the farmers with a cash market.

A short time ago—and this was brought to my attention by an article in a paper published at St. Peter, Minn., a town of about 6,000 people—there appeared an account of a farmer who had recently come to the elevator with his load of wheat to sell it, and the elevator company said to him: "We can not buy it. We will store your wheat." Now, just imagine, my friends, such a condition in the wheat trade that the farmer when he comes to his local railroad station with his load of wheat can not find a buyer ready to purchase it. In what situation is he then? He is obliged to store his wheat and must go to the bank and borrow the money if he needs it; and all farmers need it.

We have deprived the farmer of this market. We have now, by adopting an embargo provision, cut off the export trade. I am not criticizing that provision. I think an embargo is highly appropriate as a means of bringing this war to a successful termination, but I call your attention to the fact that that embargo provision has utterly cut off the trade of exporters. Under it there will be no exporters to buy wheat at the terminal stations or elsewhere. Manifestly there can be no other buyer except the Government of the United States. What will be the result of that? Why, in order to keep afloat the scheme of this bill the Government must provide the buyers at these terminal stations with sufficient money to take the wheat when it comes there by carload lots from the country points. Unless that is done there will be no market at all for the grain.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, what effect does the Senator think that will have on the price of wheat?

Mr. NELSON. It will have a most deleterious and depressing effect, and the only beneficiaries of it will be the consumers. The farmers will be utterly wrecked. It is folly to talk about encouraging the farmers to raise bigger crops if you are going to destroy their market, which you will do by this proposed legislation.

There is $150,000,000 provided in this bill, but that will be a mere drop in the bucket if the Government is going to handle the wheat crop of the country. Besides, the bill does not provide the proper machinery. I presented these matters a short time ago to Mr. Hoover. It was not a confidential talk. I told him about the matter and asked him: "What are you going to do? How are you going to take care of the wheat when it comes in by carload lots from the farmers? How are you going to furnish the necessary money to the country elevators? How can you compel the owners of the terminal elevators to advance the money when they can not deal in futures on the grain exchange?"

"Well," he said, calmly and blandly, as becomes a statesman, "we are going to provide, at these terminal points, buyers who will be there equipped with money." He told me, further—and I think he was correct about that, and I have been expecting the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to introduce an amendment along that line—that he had in view the creation of a corporation, analogous to the one organized under the shipping bill, through which they could operate in the buying of wheat. I think he had the plan of the corporation before him when I called. I did not take the time to read it, for I supposed he would probably send it here and have it offered as an amendment to this bill; but thus far it has not appeared.

To make this effective, what must you do? You have stopped trading on the grain exchanges. By your embargo you have absolutely stopped the export trade. You have left as customers only the millers, and the local millers can absorb only a part of the grain. It must be bought up. Our mills at Minneapolis, while they are the largest mills in the country, can not begin to absorb more than a small part of the wheat that comes to those terminals.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NELSON. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I noticed in to-day's paper a statement that the English Government was contemplating organizing a commission to make these purchases, which is to cooperate with Mr. Hoover or some like organization in America. Does the Senator think that organization, if it should be organized as contemplated, would be effective?

Mr. NELSON. No; I do not think so, and I do not think it is the Government's plan. The plan is to have our allies act through one purchasing agency, to wit, the officials of our Government, so that there will be no competition in the export trade.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But this London dispatch or cable stated that there was to be a commission created by the English Government which would cooperate with a like commission in America for the purpose I have stated.

Mr. NELSON. I do not know anything about it. It is probably as unreliable as this Creel message that we heard of to-day from the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It may be. A great many unreliable things appear in the newspapers—things that have no foundation in fact or warrant in truth, and it is a pity, too.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. The Senator's statement that there is no market left to the farmer except the miller, and that the miller would find it impossible to absorb the wheat as rapidly as it ought to be absorbed in order to furnish the farmer a market, is, of course, exactly in accordance with the facts. I wanted to make this suggestion, with his permission: The miller, when he comes to try to absord that wheat, will find himself also under the handicap that he will not know what Mr. Hoover is going to do with him. He will not know what his market is going to be. He therefore must purchase, taking ordinary commercial chances, and, in addition to that, the chance of some action by Mr. Hoover that may absolutely take away his flour market. So, as suggested by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] he can only buy from hand to mouth himself.

Mr. NELSON. I have concrete cases in mind. As I said a moment ago, you are all aware of the fact that Minneapolis is the greatest milling center in the country, perhaps the greatest in the world, except Budapest, in Hungary, before the war. The mills have connected with them small elevators in which they carry a limited quantity of grain, enough to supply them for a few days, but they have heretofore relied on going to the exchange and buying from the terminal elevators from time to time the wheat they needed to grind.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me to finish this statement?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. The wheat that is dumped into Minneapolis comes in showers in the early fall, because the farmers need money with which to pay their bills. When it comes there, the local mills can only absorb a very limited quantity.

The rest must be distributed throughout the country at the different milling points where they have not grain, or else it must be exported.

Now I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I have been informed that there were in Minneapolis about 1,000 seats upon the board of trade, but that they were owned practically by 10 or 15 concerns; that in the past, long before this war broke out, the farmer was not able to get any price for his products except that which was fixed by this board of trade; that the millers themselves did not buy and did not fix the price.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, that was not true at all. Of course the prices made by the grain exchange from day to day regulated the other prices, but the farmers were not obliged to go to the grain exchange. They would ship their grain to their commission men in the cities, and those commission men would sell it, as a rule, either to the mills in Minneapolis, the mills in Duluth, or the mills at other points.

Mr. KING. Is it not a fact that the exchange to which I have referred determined the price that would be paid to these commission merchants?

Mr. NELSON. To a large extent that market regulates the price; but I introduced an amendment on that subject, which was adopted in the other food bill which we passed here. My idea about that is to give the President the power to regulate the grain exchanges when they run wild. Once in a while there is an attempt among them to get up a corner so as to increase prices to an undue point.

When that condition arises, I would have the President of the United States armed with the power to check them and regulate them.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The provision of section 12 of the bill that we passed, prepared principally by the Senator from Minnesota, is the one to which he refers?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to ask the Senator if he does not think it might be wise to substitute that provision for this provision? Does the Senator think he can improve on that provision as it was perfected in the Senate and as it is found in section 12, page 11, House bill 4188?

Mr. NELSON. I think it would be better to incorporate it in this bill; but I am now aiming to call attention in a general way to the danger which lurks in this bill to all the grain-raising farmers of this country.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. I know the Senate is greatly interested in what the Senator says, because he has complete familiarity with the subject, and illuminates it with a great deal of common sense. I have been reliably informed that the large milling concerns in his State in Minneapolis and St. Paul are in favor of this bill, and I was curious to know what argument prevailed with them to make them favor it.

Mr. NELSON. I am not in their confidence. I live 140 miles from Minneapolis, in a small country town, where I have always lived, and I have never had any intimate relations with the grain trade, with the milling trade, or with the lumber trade in our Twin Cities. I know as little about them in a general way, outside of the study I have given to the subject in connection with legislation here, as the Senator from Pennsylvania. I only know this—and I have nothing to conceal:

You are all familiar with the fact that we have a great army of people on the advisory commission of the Council of National Defense. They are divided into a multitude of sections, and they have a number of men here from all over the country. Mr. Hoover, for instance, has a prominent grain man here from Duluth, and I was informed the other day that one of the largest milling companies at Minneapolis had one of their representatives here in an advisory capacity. I have no doubt the millers will be satisfied, for they will get their wheat, compared with what the market price would be under ordinary conditions, cheaper than ever; and, more than that, they will not have to resort to hedging, as it is called, to the same extent that they have heretofore.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator is throwing considerable light on the peculiar character of their patriotism.

Mr. NELSON. It will turn out as it did in the days of the Civil War. We had a lot of contractors who took advantage of our dire straits to bleed the Government during that war. So to-day there are a lot of these quasi-patriotic citizens who are trying to manipulate the Government. But there is one consolation. I have survived the Civil War more than 50 years, and most of the men who got rich so quickly during the Civil War have sunk into obscurity and much of the gains they made have evaporated. So I trust that the pirates who are now seeking to bleed the Federal Government and trying to make money in every way they can will find that the future has in store for them something akin to what happened to the contractors of the Civil War.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him further?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. I have been greatly instructed by the Senator's answer to my inquiry. It would seem to me, then, that the "goat"—to use a newspaper parlance or common phrase—is the farmer, and that the Milling Trust is the beneficiary of this legislation.

Mr. NELSON. I do not say that they are more vicious than other elements in the average community. The spirit of Mammon, which the ministers of our churches apparently are unable to eliminate, seems to percolate through all classes of society. These men found our Government in need, and they took advantage of it.

I read in the newspapers the other day the testimony of a coal dealer who was prosecuted. I think he was a dealer up at Boston, Mass. He got soft coal for $1.36 a ton at the mines. He kindly sold it to the Boston people—that is, to the trade; he did not peddle it out by retail—for, I believe, $3.50 a ton; but to the poor allies who bought it he sold it for $9.50 a ton!

Mr. PENROSE. I do not know who the party was, but he was not trying to get a bill through to make his position all the stronger, to coerce the public.

Mr. NELSON. No.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I think perhaps what I am about to say may throw a little light on the inquiry of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

I have been informed that the packing plants of the country proposed to put themselves under the direction of Mr. Hoover, or, if they did not propose that, they proposed that they would allow Mr. Hoover to fix the price on their meats. At the first blush that might seem to be a very generous proposition, but when it is remembered that the packing houses constitute the only market for the meat products of the farmers and stock raisers, except the foreign market, if the foreign market is to go under the control of Mr. Hoover, it, of course, follows that if Mr. Hoover regulated the price they were to charge for their meat he could not deny them the right to fix a corresponding price to the farmer. Accordingly, to use the expression that was used a moment ago, and which I think we can lift from common slang into the classics by applying it here, the farmer was again to be the "goat."

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will allow me to continue, I am glad that he has called my attention to the packers. I want to call the attention of the Senate to one fact in that connection. The packers and the meat buyers may not be saints, but during all this time, while wheat has been dropping in price from $3.35 or $3.40 down to a little over $2 a bushel, the price of hogs and cattle has gone up, because so far that market has not been hamstrung by this proposed legislation. It has not had that cold-blooded threat hanging over it.

I know about this from experience. My tenant wrote me a few days ago that he had sold a few hogs—I am only a small farmer—and got a bigger price for them than he ever had received before. I had one or two old cows, and I got bigger prices for them than I did for the cows I told you about some time ago.

Mr. KING. More than that brindle cow?

Mr. NELSON. There you see the difference. You knock out entirely the grain exchanges, you choke off the export trade, and you have nothing left but the millers; and when you have the market glutted, of course, they will not pay more than they are obliged to pay.

What is the substitute? It is hard to tell. The bill proposes a minimum price as a substitute. I can not conceive of any substitute to take the place of this, except to have the agents of the Federal Government at the terminal points equipped with money ready to offer the farmers a spot price, a good price, for their products.

Instead of prescribing in advance the minimum price, let them be there on the spot, armed and equipped with money, ready to pay the farmers full value for their wheat.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for just a moment?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Speaking of these grain exchanges, boards of trade, and so forth, the amendment which is pending before the Senate now was intended to save that very question, and to have section 10 of the bill operative only against those which are doing an illegitimate business under the regulations adopted by the President. At least, that is the purpose of the amendment, and I think if the amendment were adopted it would have that effect.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to say to the Senator that, while I have sometimes felt very hostile to the grain exchanges, on the whole I see that they are an absolute necessity if they are kept within proper bounds. It is the only public market place you have.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is what I am calling the Senator's attention to.

Mr. NELSON. When the grain comes to the terminal points, if the exporters or the representatives of the exporters are not there ready to buy, and the millers have all the wheat they want and do not want to buy, if you do not have men on the grain exchange ready to buy, you have no market at all.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I realize the force of what the Senator says; but what I am trying to impress on the Senator is this: I do not believe he was present when the amendment was read. The very purpose of the pending amendment to section 10 is to except from the operation of section 10 those companies which are doing a legitimate business. In other words, the President can, in connection with rules and regulations adopted by him, relieve from the operation of the rules and regulations those which are doing a fair business and are not engaging in unfair practices.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I would leave the exchanges free to operate under what I regard as their proper sphere and function, and then I would give the President power to say to these men, "You must suspend operations unless you conduct your business properly; and if you will not do it voluntarily, I will order your grain exchanges closed."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator will pardon me, I think that is the very purpose of the amendment.

Mr. NELSON. I think it is more of a milk-and-water amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I refer to section 10.

Mr. NELSON. I do not say that in a discourteous way.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I understand what the Senator means. I believe he will find that section 10 is intended to be operative only against those engaged in unfair practices.

Mr. NELSON. It is a general scale. It does not come down to the real question of the grain exchange.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator from Minnesota a question? Apropos of the suggestion made by the Senator from Oregon, let me suggest that the amendment to which he refers relates to the grain exchanges as now operated. He must remember there are other provisions of the bill which if enacted will put the entire wheat business under the control of the Federal Government, and grain-exchange operators will be put out of business with this hanging over them, because the operation of a grain exchange inevitably involves the making of contracts to be paid for three months or six months hence. The grain exchanges do not dare open to-day. We can put saving amendments in the bill until we are black in the face, but so long as the Government contemplates or announces through Mr. Hoover or anybody else that the wheat business generally is to be controlled and regulated by the Government no man dare to buy any wheat.

Mr. REED. Either cash or spot.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course not. That is why the exchanges will be closed.

Mr. NELSON. The grain exchanges have been practically closed for a month——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Absolutely.

Mr. NELSON. Because they have been in this state of uncertainty, if I may use the expression. The cloud in this bill——

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON Give me a chance to get in a word once in a while. I say that in a Christian spirit. The cloud of this bill hangs over the business, and all the reformers here threatening brought about the closing of the grain exchanges. We see what the effect has been. I have already called your attention to it. Just think of it. In the early part of May No. 2 wheat was selling for $3.30 and $3.40 a bushel. To-day it is a little over $2 a bushel.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the Senator from Minnesota allow me?

Mr. NELSON Let me finish this statement. The July option, as it is called, is $2.10. I think the cash wheat is $2.20 or $2.25, and September option is down to $1.80 and some odd cents. That indicates that wheat is likely to drop in September, about the time when our spring wheat comes in the market, to $1.80. Now I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. I am interested in the Senator's statement that wheat has dropped in the last few days in the manner he has described. I may ask the Senator's judgment on this point. It has been asserted on the floor, and I think demonstrated by argument, that the allies have made contracts for practically our wheat output, and that has done a great deal to cause the rise. I ask the Senator, in view of those contracts still existing, what would he say was the reason for the fall of wheat at this particular time from the high price to which he alludes to the present price to which he now refers? What reason would he give?

Mr. NELSON. Nothing in the world except cutting off the export trade and cutting off the grain exchanges. It is nothing in God's world outside of that, because there is less wheat in the United States by 50,000,000 bushels than there was in the early part of the year, when the price was $3 a bushel. A week ago it was estimated that the surplus of the old crop was less than 50,000,000 bushels, and we are only adding to it by little driblets from the extreme southern portion of the winter wheat belt as the grain is thrashed.

Mr. LEWIS. Then the Senator, I feel, does not attribute the fall of wheat to the prospective operation of this law?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; I do. I think it is the threat of this law that has brought it about, with the embargo which we propose, and the plan which has been discussed by Mr. Hoover and his advisors of having the allies buy their grain not in competition with each other but all under one head. There will be only one buyer. What helped to make the price of wheat high last spring was the fact that the foreign Governments, the allies and the neutrals, were in sharp competition to get the grain. That provision is entirely eliminated, and if you put the buying of our export wheat by the allies and the neutral countries under one head there is no competition; whatever they may see fit to pay will be the price.

Heretofore in normal times the Senator knows that as a general rule the price of our wheat in this country has been regulated by the foreign demand and the export price. Now, if you hamstring the export demand and the export price in the way I have indicated, the market is obliterated and gone.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the Senator, from his knowledge, does the farmer have his profit at the present price, and if he does, would not the Senator favor the price being low, so that the vast thousands of the consumers would get it at a low price, if the farmer likewise profits by a low price?

Mr. NELSON. I will disabuse the Senator's mind on that point. We hear much said about how the farmers are making money. There is not a farmer who within the last two years has made a profit on farming, if you figure it as the manufacturers do. When the manufacturers make their estimate, they figure what they call overhead charges, depreciation, interest on their investment and so on. If the farmer were to apply that rule, there is not a farmer in the country who would be able to show a single cent of profit.

I will tell you how the farmer gets along. Take the average farmer with 150 to 200 acres of land in our country. How does he get along? He has a family. His daughters help to do the kitchen work. In many instances, among some of our farmers, they help to do the milking and to feed the calves. The boys work in the field. Neither the farmer's daughters nor the farmer's sons get any wages. They get their board and clothing, and it may be a little extra change for a Fourth of July celebration or something of that kind. So, at the end of the year, because he has been relieved of the onus of paying for that labor, the labor of his daughters and the labor of his sons, and has had nothing but board and clothing to furnish them, his account shows a little on the credit side. But if you should figure it in the way the manufacturers do, overhead charges, depreciation, interest, and all that, all those extra touches that we hear of when a tariff bill is up, there is not a farmer in this broad land who ever makes a penny of profit.

Ordinarily there is no profit to the farmer. The only profit is in a new part of the country where he takes wild land or partly improved land, which he gets at a low price and by the efforts of himself and family makes of it a good tillable farm, when, of course, its price goes up. The land only cost him $5 to $10 an acre, and in the course of 25 or 30 years by the hard work of himself, his wife, and his children that land may be worth $50 to $75 or $100 an acre. But he can show no bank account, though he may have more stock on his farm; he may have more grain in the granary; he may have a few more cattle, a few more horses, and a few better buildings. He probably started with a mere lumber or log shack. He has a little better buildings, a better barn, and all that, and his farm has increased in value; but so far as any profit is concerned, profit in the way manufacturers and commercial men count it, the farmer has not anything of the kind. I speak now from dear, personal experience.

But speaking about the price of wheat, to my mind under present conditions the farmer can not afford to sell sound, good wheat, No. 1 wheat, at less than $2 a bushel. And why? Because of the wages he has to pay, the machinery, the agricultural implements, and the twine he has to buy. The prices he has to pay have more than doubled within the last 8 or 10 years. A few years ago he could hire a boy on a farm for five or six months for some $20 to $25 and board and washing. He has to pay now from $50 to $60 a month and board and washing.

I read a while ago—and one of the Senators from North Dakota can probably bear witness as to whether it is true or not—that the leaders of the nonpartisan leagues up in North Dakota and some of the leaders of the I. W. W. had a convention and had come to an understanding that fair wages for this summer and for this harvest was $4 a day. Four dollars a day on the farm, with board and lodging, is equivalent to at least $5 to $5.50 a day. Then, more than that, these I. W. W.'s have refused to do any work until after breakfast time. They do not want to go out in the morning, feed the hogs and feed and harness the horses before breakfast. No, bless your soul; they want to lie in bed until the breakfast bell rings; and when night comes, at 6 o'clock, they want to retire, whether the pigs are fed or the cow is milked, that is of no consequence to them.

That, however, is not all. The price of agricultural implements has gone up immensely within the last two or three years. You talk about depreciation. The manufacturers have a technical system. Whether their plant appreciates or not in fact, they figure out so much depreciation every year. As a matter of fact, the agricultural implements on a farm do not last, on an average, take them all in all, over five or six years on a good farm. At the end of that time they are gone. Some tools may last a little longer, but take binders and mowers and hay rakes and cultivators and corn planters, and almost everything else a farmer has to use; in five or six years the tools he bought are useless and gone and he has to buy a new lot.

Take binding twine, so necessary to our farmers in these modern days, not only to bind their small grain, oats, barley, and wheat, but their corn. Our farmers cut their corn. They have corn binders and use twine, and the price of that has gone up. So with the increases in price of all the commodities the farmer has to buy; and I have said nothing about his grocery bills or the other store bills he has to meet.

Take into account what the farmer has to pay for these things and what he has to pay for his hired help, and you will see that he needs $2 a bushel for his wheat to-day as much as he needed $1 a bushel five or six years ago. I have seen the time five or six years ago, when we were in normal condition, when I thought $1 a bushel was a fair price for good wheat. To-day I would not feel that $2 a bushel was of as much value to me as $1 a bushel was in those days.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I call the Senator's attention, in connection with his remarks, to the fact that I put in the RECORD a few days ago a table substantially showing that the circulation of money or substitutes for money in the world has practically doubled in the last two or three years. In our own country the per capita has run from about $32 to over $45, which means that the purchasing power of money has gone down at least to some extent. Then I call the Senator's attention to the fact——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I wish to give the Senator the exact figures that were given to the Interstate Commerce Committee about the purchasing power of money to-day.

Mr. REED. Who gave it?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The general attorney for the railroads. Mr. Thom stated in the hearing that the purchasing power of a dollar to-day as compared with 10 years ago is 48 cents.

Mr. NELSON. Now, if the Senators will allow me to proceed, here is another thing that has handicapped our farmers, and I am speaking particularly of the spring-wheat farmers. The Senator from Missouri, I know, is able to defend the winter-wheat farmers. The spring-wheat farmers are mainly in Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Montana, and a smaller number in northern Iowa and northwestern Wisconsin.

I have a weekly letter here from the Van Dusen-Harrington Co., one of the great elevator companies in Minneapolis, which has perhaps more country elevators than any other firm there. They send out weekly reports, and up to the last issue their reports were good, but now it is shown that in the spring-wheat belt, in many instances, they will have a poor crop. If the farmer in the spring-wheat belt has a poor crop, and you supplement that with low prices, you do not give him a chance to take advantage of the fact that the crop is small. You handicap him; you burden him in two directions. God Almighty, or the elements, have made an infliction in the one direction, by giving him a poor crop, and then our paternal Government inflicts him by depressing the prices of his products.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator permit me? I do not want to interrupt his logical discourse, but I should like to make an inquiry. It is a simple one. As I understand it, the appropriation is $150,000,000 to carry out the purposes of this bill.

Mr. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. PENROSE. If the Government is to take charge of the wheat and all the cereals of the country, it would seem to me that we might just as well provide a couple of billion dollars at least.

Mr. NELSON. One hundred and fifty million dollars will be a drop in the bucket. As I have said, Mr. Hoover, when I talked to him the other day, suggested the creation of a corporation, analogous to the shipping corporation, that would have authority to issue bonds and borrow money to carry on the business.

Mr. PENROSE. Could this transaction be handled, in the Senator's opinion, for much under several billion dollars?

Mr. NELSON. No; the money would either have to be furnished by the Government or borrowed from the banks.

Our spring-wheat crop will be in the neighborhood of from 250,000,000 to 300,000,000 bushels. At least 200,000,000 bushels of that will be marketed inside of six months. You can just imagine what it will take to handle that crop. Take it at $2 a bushel. Then take the winter-wheat crop. I do not know what it amounts to. The Senator from Missouri can tell better than I.

Mr. PENROSE. I understand the total crop of wheat in 1916 amounted to 607,557,000 bushels. At $2 a bushel, roughly speaking, it would take between two and three billion dollars to handle that one cereal alone, not to mention corn. Why should Congress deceive by the little miserable appropriation of $150,000,000 when we are being led into a trap which will call for an expenditure of several billion dollars?

Mr. NELSON. I want to read from the letter to which I referred, to show you the conditions, in order that you may realize how the farmers of the Northwest are handicapped. It is from the Van Dusen-Harrington Co., of Minneapolis, one of the greatest concerns there. I read from their weekly letter, dated July 5:

> The wheat crop in North Dakota at present is very uncertain. With the most favorable weather from now on the State could produce only a fair crop. A large territory in the northwestern part of the State has suffered severely from lack of moisture. Wheat in other sections has good color and strong, healthy roots. Soaking rains and warm weather are badly needed. Early sown barley is in much the same condition as wheat; late-sown poor. Much of the flax has not germinated where the moisture has been insufficient.
>
> Minnesota conditions are spotted, but much more favorable than North Dakota. There has been sufficient moisture, except in a few localities north of the center. While the stand of wheat is not heavy, with favorable weather an average yield could be produced. Barley is about the same as wheat, but corn is late, and warm weather is necessary to insure an average crop.

I will not read what is said about South Dakota, because as to that State the report is more encouraging. I am willing to help the Government, and Senators who have been associated with me, especially since this war came on, have known full well that I have not been lacking in constant and earnest support of the Government; I intend to support it in every direction that is necessary, but I declare that I have never had a scheme presented to me that has caused me so much doubt and trouble as this has done. I can not see any salvation to the farmers if the language remains in the bill as it now is, for the effect of it will be to destroy the markets which the farmers have heretofore had.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator's argument, then, lead to one of three conclusions: Either that the Government must make a large appropriation, as suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania, to purchase all the products which it seeks to control, or have no legislation at all, and remit the people back to the same intolerable condition of which we have been complaining and which has led to the demand for legislation, or—and this is the third one—the Government take control of all commodities and activities? The Senator has spoken about the high prices of the articles that the farmer purchases. Does not the Senator think, then, or rather is it not the rationale of his argument, that the Government would have to take charge of those industries?

Mr. NELSON. No; not at all. I simply cited that for the purpose of showing that the farmer ought to have a good price for his wheat. I have merely cited these instances in support of the argument that under present conditions the farmer can not very well afford to raise wheat for less than $2 a bushel; that is all.

My ideas—and they may be crude—are these: I think the President should be equipped with power to control the grain exchanges, to suspend their operation if they grow wild and lawless; give the exporters for the allies a chance to buy in our markets, simply limiting the operation to regulating the surplus wheat which we can spare for the neutral trade; and leave the grain exchanges and the conditions surrounding the market as nearly as possible as they are to-day. Where you violate the permanent rules of trade in business bad results will always follow. So far as my reading of history goes, in every instance where there has been an attempt at price fixing, so called, it has proven an abject failure.

Mr. President, I quote from the report of the Chicago market of to-day the following:

> Wheat trade was reduced to next to nothing, pending assumption of full Government control of the market. September opened 1 lower at 1.93, and later sold at 1.92.

I can conceive of but one practical way of carrying on this business without injury and detriment to the farmers, and that is to have the Government furnish an ample supply of money and be ready with its buyers to offer the farmers good prices at all the markets; to supply the local country elevators with funds so that the farmer, whenever he comes to town—to the railroad station or country elevator—can always get cash for his grain.

I tell you if this proposition leads to the stoppage of the local markets, if the conditions should turn out as they did in the St. Peter case, to which I have referred, if a farmer came to the elevator with his load of grain and should be told, "I can not buy this wheat of you, but I will store it for you"—if that should become the universal practice throughout the grain region, you would see almost a revolution or a rebellion in this country. I would not be responsible for the consequences. What could the poor farmers do? Store their wheat; pay storage and elevator charges, and then they would have to go to the banks and borrow money.

But, Mr. President, when I rose to speak I rose merely to explain to the Senate in a brief and perfunctory manner the conscientious scruples that made me doubt the value and validity of this legislation. I fear to-day that if we adopt it in the crude form in which it is now embodied in this bill, without more ample machinery and far greater appropriations, it will prove an abject failure.

The laboring men may get cheaper flour; they may get other products more cheaply; but the main sufferers will be the farmers of our land; and the farmers, above all others, are entitled to our protection, for they are the mainstay of the country. They are the ones who furnish us with the staff of life, with bread and meat and cotton. If we allow them to suffer and to be left in distress, we destroy that class on whom we must mainly rely. It is idle to tell the farmers they must sow more grain. How can we compel the farmers to do so? Are we going to compel the farmer to sow more wheat? When fall comes and he finds that the price of his wheat is whittled down, what will he say? He will say, "I will stop raising wheat; I will raise cattle and hogs, or I will raise chickens. There is some profit in raising chickens; there is still more profit in cattle and hogs; but I will never go into the wheat business, because it will be raising wheat for Mr. Hoover's market, and I can not stand that."

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. NELSON. I have concluded, but I shall answer the Senator's question if I can.

Mr. REED. I am interested in the Senator's view, because he has brought to this question his practical, hard sense and he has said many things that I think are unanswerable. However, I want to get his view on this proposition: It has been stated here by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that there were, as he looked at it, three alternatives.

Mr. KING. As I looked at the argument of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. REED. As the Senator looked at the argument of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I think the Senator from Utah misunderstood a part of my argument.

Mr. REED. I thought so; and I wanted to call attention to a part of the Senator's argument. One of the alternatives stated by the Senator from Utah was that we must permit the present intolerable conditions to continue. It is to that I want to direct the attention of the Senator from Minnesota. There is a condition, a market, which consisted of many things, and, among other things, grain exchanges. Does it follow that, if we allow the grain exchanges to continue to exist, we have to allow the evils, the intolerable things, if you please—to borrow the expression of the Senator—to exist with them? On the contrary, does not the course of reason lie in allowing the market which has been created in the United States to continue its machinery and to continue to lay the hand of the law upon the abuses which have grown up—the gambling and cornering of the market? Is not that the real course of remedy?

Mr. NELSON. That is my view of the case. I will say no more to-night; but before this bill is disposed of I may say something further by way of suggestion. I must confess to my brother Senators that I am in grave doubt as to what we ought to do. I am impressed to-night with the great danger that confronts us if we adopt this legislation and the plan now contemplated in the bill. Whether we can formulate some better plan or get out of the difficulty in some other way is a most serious problem. If I were to pass upon it to-night I would say, "Do not close the grain exchanges; leave them open, but hold a stiff regulating hand over them. Leave that power in the Government, so that all abuses can be eliminated, but leave the exchanges open." After all, when you come to consider and boil it down, the great market place of the farmer is not the exporter or the miller but the grain exchange. However, Mr. President, I shall not further continue the discussion this evening.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I again make a request for unanimous consent. I send to the desk the draft of a unanimous-consent agreement, and ask that the Secretary read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 5 o'clock p. m., on the calendar day of Friday, July 13, 1917, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill H. R. 4961, a bill to provide further for the national security and defense, etc., through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that during said day, Friday, July 13, 1917, beginning at 2 o'clock p. m., no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than 5 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, that proposed unanimous-consent agreement gives until Friday for general discussion of the bill and any and all amendments thereto, and on that date, beginning at 2 o'clock, it limits debate.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, would not that preclude the recommitment of the bill?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It would.

Mr. REED. Now, let me call the Senator's attention to this, and I am going to see if I can not persuade him not to insist upon the request for a unanimous-consent agreement to-night. It seems to be conceded now that the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], which we had under consideration on Saturday, is unconstitutional and void, and yet it appears to be the case that we have bound ourselves by a unanimous-consent agreement so that we can not bring that question up for further consideration as a separate proposition in the Senate. At the same time we have precluded ourselves from any further action in Committee of the Whole, because a motion was made to reconsider, and that motion was defeated.

The only way, therefore, it would appear, out of this dilemma would be to refer the bill back to the committee, in which event the committee might return it to us with the section eliminated and with some substitute presented. Now, if we were to enter into the unanimous-consent agreement which is proposed by the Senator, I take it we would not be permitted to recommit the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think that would be the effect of it, Mr. President.

Mr. REED. I think, then, the Senator ought not to ask us to agree to it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I do not feel about this bill as does the Senator. The Senator has argued against the constitutionality of many sections of this bill, as have other Senators here. I do not question the sincerity of views of the Senator at all; but it does seem to me, Mr. President, that the majority of this body disagree with the views of the Senator as he has stated them with reference to the constitutionality of this measure. I feel that we ought to bring this discussion to an end at some time, and so I shall insist upon asking for the unanimous-consent agreement which I have proposed. If any Senator objects to it, of course, that is his privilege.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Oregon knows that I have no desire whatever to delay the passage of the bill. I have only taken about 15 minutes of the time of the Senate in discussing it, and I do not expect to take any more of the time of the Senate; but I do believe that before unanimous consent is given we ought to dispose of the committee amendments. I have never yet seen in my experience in the Senate a unanimous-consent agreement proposed until at least the committee amendments had been acted upon. I merely suggest this to the Senator from Oregon. It may, perhaps, take but a little while early in the day to-morrow to dispose of the committee amendments, and then, so far as I am personally concerned, I would not object in any way to the Senator asking unanimous consent; but it does seem to me it is too early now to ask unanimous consent, taking into consideration the fact that even the committee amendments have not all been acted upon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, it will be noticed that this proposed unanimous-consent agreement does not become operative to limit debate until next Friday, and it seems to me that within that time not only committee amendments but other amendments can be fully discussed and disposed of.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Oregon to the fact that section 3 of the bill, as now printed, which prohibits "any person acting either as a voluntary or paid agent or employee of the Government," either in a direct or advisory capacity, having any interest remote or direct in any purchases or contracts made by the Government, has not yet been considered by the Senate. It is a committee amendment. If that amendment all by itself were presented to the Senate, it would constitute one of the most important pieces of legislation that could possibly be introduced into this body at this time. I can not tell—I suppose none of us may prophesy accurately—what the action of the Senate will be upon that particular committee amendment; but I ask the Senator from Oregon to consider that that particular amendment, if adopted in its present form, will compel a complete reorganization and readjustment of the greater portion of the war-making machinery of the United States.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Well, I think some of it ought to be readjusted, Mr. President.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not arguing upon that point pro or con; but before we have even reached that amendment, before the Senate has decided whether or not that particular piece of legislation shall go into this statute, the Senator from Oregon insists upon getting a unanimous-consent agreement to close debate. That amendment, taken by itself, is worthy of two or three days' serious consideration by this body. There has not been a more important thing suggested to the Senate than section 3 of this bill as it is now printed, and it has not even been discussed. It has been passed over. If it is going to be enacted in the closing hours of a debate perhaps limited to 10 minutes' time, we may find ourselves doing as foolish a thing as we have done on former occasions when, by the adoption of a unanimous-consent agreement with a limitation placed upon debate, the Senate has enacted proposals which the next day it had to repeal.

I think it would at least be reasonable on the part of the Senator to refrain from asking for a unanimous-consent agreement until the committee amendments to this bill are disposed of. That one amendment alone is worthy of the most serious consideration, not only by the Senate but by the administration and people of the country, for it goes to the war-making machinery of the United States.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, for the reasons I have just recited, I object.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Then, Mr. President, I submit another proposition for unanimous consent, which I now send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the request.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that at 11 o'clock a. m. on the calendar day of Tuesday, July 10, 1917, the Senate will proceed with the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4961) to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel, and to vote without further debate upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill itself through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the said hour of 11 o'clock a. m. on said day no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than 5 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, that amendment is only intended to limit debate; that is all.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether that goes into effect to-morrow?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It goes into effect to-morrow; but if the Senator would prefer to fix it at a little later date, I shall be glad to have him suggest it.

Mr. STONE. No; I am just trying to ascertain exactly what it is.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It goes into effect to-morrow.

Mr. STONE. And what does the Senator desire the Senate to agree to?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That after 11 o'clock to-morrow no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than 5 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto. That is the substance and purpose of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I have sat here with a good deal of patience for the last week or ten days, and have been glad to listen to remarks upon this bill, and have been highly instructed thereby. It occurs to me, however, that possibly with two exceptions no member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has yet addressed the Senate on this bill, nor has this bill been explained in detail by anybody on that committee nor by anybody else. The Senator now asks that debate upon the bill from now on be limited to speeches of 10 minutes. I make the observation that the bill not having ever been explained, to the best of my knowledge, the people of this country do not know what is in it, in addition to which I am moved to object to this particular request on the ground that I do not think section 3 of this bill—the committee amendment which affects the Council of National Defense—should be considered by this body under a 10-minute rule. It is too big and serious a matter.

As one member of the committee, I had grave doubts as to the wisdom of that proposed legislation. The majority of the committee was in favor of it. Personally, I think it is too drastic; but we are approaching a tremendously big subject. The administration has organized this elaborate scheme to establish a clearing house through which the goods required by the Federal Government in the waging of this war shall be purchased, and it is now proposed that we should consider under the 10-minute rule a piece of legislation to wipe it out of existence, for that is what it amounts to. It might just as well be entitled, "A section to disband the Council of National Defense." It is proposed that the Senate shall consider a piece of proposed legislation of that kind under a 10-minute rule of debate!

Personally, I do not think we would be doing our duty as legislators and men of independent judgment, having at heart the best interests of this country in this war, were we to subject ourselves to any such limitation as that. I have begged and implored the Senator from Oregon to wait until the committee amendments on this bill are disposed of before endeavoring to fix a time to bring the discussion to a close.

May I suggest that the legislation contained within the covers of this bill, taken collectively, is the most important piece of legislation ever presented to the Senate since the days of the Civil War. Not even the great Army bill containing the proposal for a selective draft was so revolutionary, nor did it hit at the fundamentals of our business life and our social existence to the extent that this bill does. It occurs to me that it is not the wise and statesmanlike thing to do to drive this bill to a hasty conclusion. At least we should refrain from efforts to limit debate and to set a day for voting until the committee amendments have been disposed of.

My experience here has been short in comparison with that of most of the Members of this body; but I think I am fairly safe in saying that unanimous-consent agreements fixing a time for voting and placing a limitation upon debate in the Senate of the United States have not been insisted upon ordinarily until committee amendments are finished, and that this amendment with regard to section 3 ought not to be subjected to such a limitation.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, with reference to asking unanimous consent to vote on this bill, the making of the request now is not out of the ordinary. Other great bills that have been pending before the Senate have "drawn their weary length along," just as this has done, when every phase of the bills has been discussed, and then, before amendments have been voted on, a unanimous-consent agreement was asked for and frequently obtained. But let me remind the Senator that nobody here can compel the Senate to act on this bill now or at any other time, as far as that is concerned; and the Senator, if he sees fit to object, can interpose his objection.

I feel, Mr. President, that the country is asking that the Senate of the United States act promptly upon this measure. If the Senate are opposed to it, they will vote it down. If any Senator is opposed to an unanimous-consent agreement, he can stop it by simply interposing an objection. But, notwithstanding the Senator's criticism, there has not been a single section of this bill that has not been gone into and analyzed and discussed and criticized at length.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do.

Mr. PENROSE. So far is that not a fact that the first section of the bill is so awkwardly worded as to be ungrammatical, to be ridiculous, and to disgrace a coterie of schoolboys endeavoring to learn parliamentary procedure.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I am not responsible for the grammatical construction of the bill. I did not write it myself. I have had something to do with trying to get it in shape before the committee, and a small part in undertaking to get it in shape in and passed by the Senate; but if it is grammatically incorrect the Senator from Pennsylvania can suggest the corrections, and I have no doubt but that they will be promptly made.

Mr. PENROSE. It is absurdly ungrammatical.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator can suggest those absurdities, and I am sure that by unanimous consent every one of them will be corrected wherever the absurdities exist.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not want to delay action on this bill one minute, but I looked at the stack of amendments that Senators have already offered and which are printed. The Secretary has them over here. I doubt if two Senators have even read most of them yet. I hold in my hand three proposed amendments offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. One of them proposes to create a national food board of five members, to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and proceeds to delineate their powers. There are two or three pages of it here. The next one proposes an entirely new scheme about hoarding and destroying necessaries, and the penalties therefor. Those amendments are vital. Instead of having one food director, it is proposed to have a commission—a board. We have in the bill a proposition to take control not only of food, feed, and fuel but of all these other things that we have denominated to be necessaries, like lumber, metals, and so forth. This proposition proposes an extra board to take care of the food proposition.

I do not propose to expatiate upon the various propositions covered in these proposed amendments, but I ask the Senator from Oregon if he thinks that on an amendment of that kind a Senator of the United States ought to be confined to 10 minutes in which to express his views on a proposition to create a commission of five to take control of all the food of the country and to say how he can square it with the other provisions of this bill?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Will the Senator assist in fixing a later date than that named in the proposed agreement when the debate shall be limited? The Senator from New York objected to that proposition.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I am not going to object, but I do say that we have all had enough experience with this business of talking about a bill until everybody says all he wants to about the bill and then at the last moment a hundred amendments of the most vital importance are thrown in and no discussion worthy of the name can be had. I should say, when Senators have said what they want to about the bill, go ahead with the amendments and discuss them. Some of these amendments are fully as important and vital and intricate as the bill itself. Perhaps we may take too much time in discussing the bill, but one of the most serious defects in our senatorial procedure in the making of unanimous-consent agreements is that we throttle and muzzle ourselves in all sorts of things. I do not know but that somebody will get up here and introduce a woman-suffrage amendment to the bill at the last minute, or another prohibition amendment, and Senators will have only 5 or 10 minutes each on those matters.

I do not think the time has arrived for an agreement of this kind, but, as I say, I shall not object, although I do not think the consent should be given.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I merely wish to say that I thought there was some reason in the first request of the Senator from Oregon for unanimous consent, which would have brought an end to general discussion on Friday; but it seems to me that this second request, in view of the importance of this bill, is altogether unreasonable.

Just to call attention to one provision of this bill, subdivision (b) of section 8 reads as follows:

> In order to guarantee reasonable prices to the producer and to the consumer, to purchase, in no case paying a less price than the minimum price, if any, fixed in pursuance of this act, to store, to provide storage facilities for, and to sell at reasonable prices, foods, feeds, and fuels.

That amendment has been added to by incorporating in it the language found in the amendment made by the committee to section 1, together with the numerous articles added to the amendment of the committee in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I realize the importance of these amendments, but the country is asking for action by Congress. Now, let me ask the Senator this question:

Suppose the first proposed unanimous-consent agreement were modified so as to extend the date until a week from to-day or 10 days from to-day, or to some date still later. I do not care, so far as I am individually concerned, when it is, just so that the country may know when this matter is going to be finally disposed of. I will modify the first unanimous-consent agreement to that extent, if the Senators will not object to it.

Mr. STERLING. I should not object to the first unanimous-consent agreement proposed by the Senator from Oregon. That would have given, it seems to me, quite sufficient time; but other Senators think not.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, all I want to do is to get a time fixed to dispose of this matter with ample opportunity to Senators to discuss the various amendments. I suggest again, in the hope that we may reach an agreement, that we take the first unanimous-consent agreement that I suggested and put the date a week later, or 10 days later if need be. That will certainly give everybody an opportunity to discuss the bill, taking into consideration the three weeks already spent in its discussion.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I did not distinctly hear the colloquy between the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The first unanimous-consent agreement that I proposed fixed the date for next Friday. I am willing to postpone the date to a time when the Senator thinks we can fully discuss this bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me ask the Senator from Oregon a question. In his judgment, does that unanimous-consent agreement as it is drafted now, irrespective of the date, operate to prevent the entertainment of a motion to recommit the bill for any purpose with instructions?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am inclined to think so, although I am frank to say I know very little about parliamentary law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should like to know what I am agreeing to, if I do agree.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, if the Senators will consent to that unanimous-consent agreement, so far as I can do so, I am willing to have the two sections of the bill referring to liquors and commandeering the same referred to the committee for further report.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator limit it to those two sections?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Those two sections, for they seem to be the sections most earnestly complained of to-day as in conflict and as unconstitutional.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I object to that. I object to section 3 being referred back to the committee.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. The unanimous-consent agreement could have a provision in it that before a final vote is taken on the passage of the bill a motion may be entertained to recommit. That could be included in the unanimous-consent agreement, which would obviate the suggestion made by the Senator from New York that it applies only to those two sections.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I have been with this committee, operating with it, and acting with the members of the committee, and to refer this bill to the committee again simply means that when the bill gets there we will be just where we are now. The committee is almost evenly divided on nearly every section of the bill. The Senator from New York knows what difficulty we have had in getting a report from the committee, and I do not think there ought to be embodied in this unanimous-consent agreement anything with reference to recommitting.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon knows that I aided him in securing his last unanimous-consent agreement. I believe there are a number of Senators here ready to object to this unanimous-consent agreement this evening. It is getting near 6 o'clock, and in order to stop the discussion and let us adjourn, I shall object to-night and hope the Senator will bring up the matter in a spirit of hope to-morrow.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. To-morrow evening?

Mr. PENROSE. To-morrow, late in the day. I hope he will bring it up for consideration by the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is, the unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; I hope the Senator will present it to the Senate then. It is getting too late now to give it the judicial consideration to which it is entitled. I do not say that the Senator can get the agreement to-morrow.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Does the Senator think I can?

Mr. PENROSE. No; I say, I do not say that; but, I say, let the Senator bring it up in a spirit of hope.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have brought it up in a spirit of hope several times, and only to meet with disappointment.

Mr. LEWIS. Let the Senator offer it in a spirit of charity.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That would be a better way to express it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. PENROSE. I have objected and must——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. So far as I am concerned, I will have discharged my duty when I file a motion for cloture, and failing to reach any agreement, that is what I now propose to do, but with much reluctance. I wish to say in reference to it that on July 2 a number of Senators—40 or more, I think—signed a motion for cloture, and for reasons that were stated from time to time in the Senate that motion was not presented. I do not know how many of those who then signed would now want that motion to be presented with their names, but I am going to present it as an evidence of the fact that Senators as far back as July 2 desired the motion for cloture presented. I am not basing the motion on that, however. I simply file it to show the feeling of the Senate.

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I ask the Senator from Oregon a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In a moment. I now present another motion for a cloture signed by about 20 Senators.

Mr. LODGE. Is that under the rule?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is under the rule.

Mr. LODGE. It will have to be voted on without debate day after to-morrow.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir; I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to ask the Senator from Oregon how much time would be given a Senator to discuss the bill under the cloture rule which he now proposes?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Every Senator has an hour to discuss it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That means 96 hours, if the Senate wants to take that much time.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator from Mississippi pardon me? The Senator from Mississippi would have an hour, and each Senator who had any interest in the bill would have an hour, and those Senators would not get time that was not occupied by others, no matter how many amendments come up, no matter how many unconstitutional things are proposed, and no matter what discoveries are made, as we now know that the action of Saturday was unconstitutional. No matter what may happen, the total time any Senator can have is one hour.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I understand that; but I think one hour is enough for any Senator to empty his mind on this question. If the Senator will concentrate his thoughts and digest his facts, he can say all he has of value in his mind to say in one hour.

There is too much careless, irrelevant, scattering talk in the Senate, if I may be permitted to say as much. Some Senators seem to think there is logic in length and eloquence in mere multiplicity of words. One hour devoted to a close compact argument on this bill is, it seems to me, sufficient time to either exhaust the subject or his store of information on the subject matter contained in this bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Let the motion be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the notice.

The Secretary read as follows:

The undersigned Senators, in accordance with the amendment to Rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, adopted March 7, 1917, move that debate upon the pending measure (H. R. 4961) be brought to a close.

George E. Chamberlain Robert L. Owen, Henry F. Hollis, Wm. H. Thompson, Jos. T. Robinson, A. A. Jones, John B. Kendrick, Paul O. Husting, John F. Shafroth, J. C. W. Beckham, Peter G. Gerry, Henry F. Ashurst, H. L. Myers, Ed. S. Johnson, Wm. S. Kenyon, George P. McLean, Kenneth McKellar, LeBaron B. Colt, Atlee Pomerene, B. R. Tillman, Claude A. Swanson.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. What is the status of this derelict of July 2?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Secretary finish the reading.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I thought he had finished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; he has not.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., July 2, 1917.

The undersigned Senators, in accordance with the amendment to Rule XXII——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That I raise the objection to. What has July 2 to do with it? We have ended the important matter to which that was directed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I want to have it read and filed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What does the filing consist of?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It consists of the presentation of it to be read into the RECORD; that is all.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I object to having the paper of July 2 read into the RECORD. The Senator can not file two motions at the same time under the rule.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have presented one with 20-odd names, I do not remember the number, as the motion for cloture.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know; and I make the point that the other one ought to be put in the waste-paper basket.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator and I differ about that. I desire to have it read for the reasons I have stated; and if the Secretary is not permitted to read it I will read it in my own time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I make the point of order that it is not in order to read it under the rule. The rule provides for a motion, which has been read and filed. Now, the Senator has another old one, and he wants to have it read. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question, then, is left to the Senate, Shall the paper be read. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it. The ayes have it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I want to have my position distinctly understood. The paper now about to be read is not the motion for cloture; but I ask to have it read into the RECORD to show how the Senators who signed it felt on July 2 about this matter. The one which has already been read, with 21 names on it, is the motion for cloture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the paper.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., July 2, 1917.

The undersigned Senators, in accordance with the amendment to Rule XXII of the standing rules of the Senate adopted March 7, 1917, move that debate upon the pending measure (H. R. 4961) be brought to a close.

Jas. E. Ransdell, Jas. K. Vardaman, Thomas S. Martin, Ed. S. Johnson, Claude A. Swanson, J. O. Wolcott, John Walter Smith, Frederick Hale, W. F. Kirby, W. L. Jones, F. E. Warren, Duncan U. Fletcher, John Sharp Williams, Robert L. Owen, J. C. W. Beckham, James D. Phelan, C. A. Culberson, C. S. Thomas, J. S. Frelinghuysen, Paul Trammell, Peter G. Gerry, LeBaron B. Colt, Ollie M. James, Key Pittman, George E. Chamberlain, Wm. S. Kenyon, James H. Brady, Jos. T. Robinson, Henry F. Ashurst, Henry F. Hollis, Morris Sheppard, Wm. H. Thompson, P. C. Knox, Frank B. Kellogg, Chas. L. McNary, Geo. P. McLean, Paul O. Husting, Atlee Pomerene, John B. Kendrick, H. L. Myers, T. J. Walsh, Francis G. Newlands, John F. Shafroth, A. A. Jones.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I simply want to call attention to the absurdity of this proceeding. Those signatures were attached to that paper when the situation was entirely different, and I know that some of the names on that paper this afternoon, at least, do not intend to vote for cloture.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I stated to the Senate that the reason why I did not base the application on that was because the conditions had changed and I did not know how many of them, if any, desired to have cloture now.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator consumes the time of the Senate by reading an obsolete paper which comes in the classification of useless papers and ought to be destroyed by a committee.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator from Pennsylvania read one of such papers himself this morning and took a good deal of time to get it in the RECORD.

RECESS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the further pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, July 10, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 9, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, hold us close to Thee in the great crisis through which we are passing lest we forget that "God's in His heaven; all's right with the world," in the terrible shock, in the shaking up of the dry bones, in the waking up of the soul from its lethargy through the clash of arms, the sanguinary conflict, the great sacrifice of life and limb, the trials and sorrows which chill the heart. Out of it all shall come a higher, purer, nobler civilization, for Thy will is supreme; and through the baptism of fire the world shall be purified and made better for all mankind and Thy name shall be glorified. In the name of Him who taught us life, liberty, wisdom, and justice. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, July 6, 1917, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 33. Joint resolution to relieve the owners of mining claims who have been mustered into the military or naval service of the United States as officers or enlisted men from performing assessment work during the term of such service.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2356) to amend the act to regulate commerce as amended, and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. NEWLANDS, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, and Mr. CUMMINS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the President had approved and signed bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

On July 2, 1917:

S. 2453. An act to authorize condemnation proceedings of lands for military purposes.

On June 30, 1917:

S. J. Res. 13. Joint resolution extending the time within which the "Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to issue temporary permits for additional diversions of water from the Niagara River" shall remain in effect.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate concurrent resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Senate concurrent resolution 8.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed in document form 50,000 copies of the bill (H. R. 4280) to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes, and Senate Report No. 75 thereon, of which 25,000 shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 20,000 for the use of the Senate, 2,500 for the use of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, and 2,500 for the use of the Committee on Finance of the Senate.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, upon the request of Mr. WOOD of Indiana, leave of absence was granted for 10 days to Mr. SANDERS of Indiana.

By unanimous consent, upon the request of Mr. MCFADDEN, indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. HEATON, on account of illness.

By unanimous consent, indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, on account of illness in his family.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD the aims and purposes of the Patriotic Service League, a league formed in my district, and now extending throughout the United States, for the purpose of aiding the Government in the prosecution of the war.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a report and also the papers of incorporation of the White Cross Society, of St. Louis, which is organized for the purpose of caring for the wounded and cripples who may return from the war in Europe.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

The SPEAKER. The matter is not debatable.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. DYER. On what subject?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a short story of the landing of the Pilgrims on Plymouth Rock and the notable achievements of some of the early settlers of New Bedford, Mass.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a short history of the landing of the Pilgrims on Plymouth Rock, together with the achievements of some of their successors. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein the proclamation issued by the President with reference to the exportation of foods and other materials and the regulations of the Secretary of Commerce.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas whether he knows why the President eliminated cotton, a war munition, from the embargo proclamation?

Mr. GARNER. I have no knowledge on the subject at all.

Mr. HEFLIN. Cotton is not a food.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Neither is coal.

Mr. GARNER. I merely ask that this be printed in the RECORD because I think it is public information such as the country ought to have.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Of course.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The proclamation is as follows:

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA—A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas Congress has enacted and the President has on the 15th day of June, 1917, approved a law which contains the following provisions:

"Whenever during the present war the President shall find that the public safety shall so require, and shall make proclamation thereof, it shall be unlawful to export from or ship from or take out of the United States to any country named in such proclamation any article or articles mentioned in such proclamation, except at such time or times and under such regulations and orders and subject to such limitations and exceptions as the President shall prescribe, until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress: Provided, however, That no preference shall be given to the ports of one State over those of another.

HEAVY PENALTIES PROVIDED.

"Any person who shall export, ship, or take out, or deliver, or attempt to deliver for export, shipment, or taking out, any article in violation of this title, or of any regulation or order made hereunder, shall be fined not more than $10,000, or, if a natural person, imprisoned for not more than two years; and any article so delivered or exported, shipped, or taken out, or so attempted to be delivered or exported, shipped, or taken out, shall be seized and forfeited to the United States; and any officer, director, or agent of a corporation who participates in any such violation shall be liable to like fine or imprisonment, or both.

POWERS FOR ENFORCEMENT.

"Whenever there is a reasonable cause to believe that any vessel, domestic or foreign, is about to carry out of the United States any article or articles in violation of the provisions of this title, the collector of customs for the district in which such vessel is located is hereby authorized and empowered, subject to review by the Secretary of Commerce, to refuse clearance of any such vessel, domestic or foreign, for which clearance is required by law, and by formal notice served upon the owners, master, or person or persons in command or charge of any domestic vessel for which clearance is not required by law, to forbid the departure of such vessel from the port, and it shall thereupon be unlawful for such vessel to depart.

VESSELS TO BE FORFEITED.

"Whoever in violation of any of the provisions of this section shall take, or attempt to take, or authorize the taking of any such vessel out of port or from the jurisdiction of the United States, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both, and, in addition, such vessel, her tackle, apparel, furniture, equipment, and her forbidden cargo shall be forfeited to the United States."

And whereas the public safety requires that succor shall be prevented from reaching the enemy.

ARTICLES AND NATIONS NAMED.

Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim to all whom it may concern that, except at such time or times and under such regulations and orders and subject to such limitations and exceptions as the President shall prescribe, until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress, the following articles, namely: Coal, coke, fuel oils, kerosene and gasoline, including bunkers; food grains, flour and meal therefrom; fodder and feeds, meat and fats, pig iron, steel billets, ship plates and structural shapes, scrap iron and scrap steels, ferromanganese, fertilizers, arms, ammunition, and explosives, shall not, on and after the 15th day of July, 1917, be carried out of or exported from the United States or its territorial possessions to Abyssinia, Afghanistan, Albania, Argentina, Austria-Hungary, Belgium, her colonies, possessions, or protectorates; Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, China, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, her colonies, possessions, or protectorates; Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, France, her colonies, possessions, or protectorates; Germany, her colonies, possessions, or protectorates; Great Britain, her colonies, possessions, or protectorates; Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Italy, her colonies, possessions, or protectorates; Japan, Liberia, Leichtenstein, Luxemburg, Mexico, Monaco, Montenegro, Morocco, Nepal, Nicaragua, the Netherlands, her colonies, possessions, or protectorates; Norway, Oman, Panama, Paraguay, Persia, Peru, Portugal, her colonies, possessions, or protectorates; Roumania, Russia, Salvador, San Marino, Serbia, Siam, Spain, her colonies, possessions, or protectorates; Sweden, Switzerland, Uruguay, Venezuela, or Turkey.

ORDERS FROM TIME TO TIME.

The orders and regulations from time to time prescribed will be administered by and under the authority of the Secretary of Commerce, from whom licenses in conformity with the said orders and regulations will issue.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 9th day of July, in the year of our Lord 1917 and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-first.

WOODROW WILSON.

By the President:
FRANK L. POLK,
Acting Secretary of State.

MRS. NANCY E. MULLINS.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 646) for the relief of Mrs. Nancy E. Mullins, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Mrs. Nancy E. Mullins, mother of W. S. Mullins, late captain Company I, First Regiment Mississippi National Guard, shall be regarded as the duly designated beneficiary of the late Capt. W. S. Mullins under the act approved May 11, 1908, as amended by the act approved March 3, 1909.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman to explain the necessity for action upon this bill at this time? There are other local bills that are being held up under the plea that we can not let down the bars for any of them without letting them down for all.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied that the gentleman from Arkansas will not object when he knows the facts in reference to this. This is the case of a soldier who died after going into the service during the present war. He failed to designate a beneficiary. He has a mother who is living, who is old and feeble, and who was dependent upon him. She had another son who has died since this boy died. People down in that section, relatives and others, write me that this old woman is absolutely in distress, and if this bill is passed it will permit her being designated as the beneficiary of her soldier son, and she can get the salary due him. That is all there is to it.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the condition that exists. There are other cases similar to this that should be reported and taken care of by Congress. I am glad to see this one taken care of, and for that reason I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain why this deserving mother can not obtain relief under the general law? As I understand the general law, a mother is entitled to six months' pay when she is dependent upon the soldier who has died from injuries received in the service. What is the necessity of having a private bill to entitle her to this six months' pay?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The general law requires that the soldier shall designate the beneficiary. He failed to make the designation and died without making it. If he had designated his mother——

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, I think there is no question if the mother makes a showing she is dependent upon the soldier that she is entitled to this six-months' salary of the soldier.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. The soldier has to make a designation, and in this case there are some——

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, a case was called to my attention a year ago where a dependent mother received the six-months' allowance granted by the act upon the decease of her son.

Mr. MANN. She can where he makes the designation.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe in that case no designation had been made.

Mr. MANN. We passed a good many of these bills at different times.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to renew my request for unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman upon what subject?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Upon the subject of raising money to carry on the war and the proper expenditure thereof.

Mr. WALSH. Does the extension contain only the gentleman's remarks?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Only my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request to extend my remarks in the RECORD in regard to the organization of the White Cross. It is one of the most important pieces of work——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of creating the order named. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the aims and purposes of the Patriotic Service League, a league which has been formed in my district and has now gone throughout the country, for the purpose of aiding the Government in the prosecution of the war.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4960) to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes; and pending the motion, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] if we could not agree upon time for general debate.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I have had several requests, and I think we could utilize on our side possibly two hours.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I will say to my colleague from Wisconsin and gentlemen of the House generally, that, so far as I am concerned, and I believe so far as every member of the committee is concerned, our purpose is to have liberal debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it desirable to commence the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule to-day. Why not say that general debate shall conclude to-day, the time to be equally divided between the two gentlemen?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understood from the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] that two hours on a side would be ample.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, since making that statement I have had three additional requests which would make at least two and a half hours, which would take this afternoon.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then, Mr. Speaker, I submit a unanimous-consent request that general debate on this bill in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union shall close upon adjournment this afternoon.

Mr. MANN. The time to be equally divided.

Mr. MONTAGUE. To be equally divided between my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] and myself.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman add to that request an agreement that the debate shall be confined to this bill?

Mr. MANN. I do not think that is necessary. That will be controlled by gentlemen who yield time. Somebody might want to say something else.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I would like to see that, but it seems to be an insuperable obstacle in the progress of the business of this House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] asks unanimous consent that the general debate on this bill close with the adjournment of the House to-night, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 4960, with Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 4960, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4960) to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the committee substitute for H. R. 4960 may be considered in lieu of the original bill, with all of the privileges attaching to the original bill. My purpose in making this request is that there were a good many amendments considered in connection with the bill, which the committee adopted, and in order to make the whole bill more convenient for consideration by the House a committee substitute was reported in lieu of the original bill which was agreed upon, as the substitute itself was unanimously agreed upon. And every member, Mr. Chairman, has had a copy.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the committee substitute be considered in lieu of the House bill on the same subject, with all of the privileges attaching to the House bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, this is a very unusual request. If the committee had a substitute why did they not report it to the House? Here is the original bill reported to the House, and no committee substitute and no amendment reported to the House.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will state to the gentleman that long subsequent to reporting the bill the gentleman having in charge the bill had a meeting of the committee called and submitted a good many committee amendments, and all were merely consolidated in the version of the bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman ought to obtain permission to withdraw the report and file a new report with the substitute report submitted to the House.

Mr. ADAMSON. We had it printed and furnished every Member with a copy several days ago, and there are many other copies here.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says he furnished every Member of Congress with a copy. I was out of the city, but I have been back nearly a week and I have not heard of nor seen any committee substitute.

Mr. ADAMSON. We tried to do so.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's effort was not very valiant.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that when this substitute was offered we expected the consideration of the bill that was in the House, and there was no time to formulate another report.

Mr. MANN. There has been plenty of time since.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is true.

Mr. MANN. I shall object to the request at this time, and suggest to the gentleman that when the committee rises and we go into the House that he ask unanimous consent to have a reprint of the bill with the committee substitute printed in italics in place of the bill, and then probably there will be no objection to considering the substitute. But this is a very important measure. We have the right to have the print that is to be considered before the Members of the House, and not merely up in the committee room.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I think that is entirely satisfactory, that we go on with general debate, and on adjournment to-night we ask unanimous consent to have a reprint of the bill, and when we reprint it, we reprint it as pertaining to this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] is recognized.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, international law, as adjudicated by our nisi prius courts and our Supreme Court, holds that one of the immediate consequences of war is the interdiction of commercial relations between the citizens or subjects of the belligerent nations. International law has been often held by our Supreme Court to be a part of the law of our country, so it is necessary for the committee and the country to realize that from the outbreak of this war all commercial intercourse, with negligible exceptions, between American citizens and German subjects has been abruptly suspended or revoked. Any continuance or revival of this commerce on the part of our citizens can only be had by the express permission of our Government. This seems the accepted Anglo-American doctrine.

In 1799 Sir William Scott, in the leading English case of the ship The Hoop, after stating the case as one involving the shipment of goods from Holland to Great Britain, declared:

In my opinion there exists such a general rule in the maritime jurisprudence of this country, by which all trading with the public enemy, unless with the permission of the sovereign, is interdicted. It is not a principle peculiar to the maritime law of this country; it is laid down by Bynkershoek as a universal principle of law—Ex natura belli commercia inter hostes cessare non est dubitandum. Quamvis nulla specialis sit commerciorum prohibitio, ipso tamen jure belli commercia esse vetita, ipsae indictiones bellorum satis declarant, etc. He proceeds to observe that the interests of trade and the necessity of obtaining certain commodities have sometimes so far overpowered this rule that different species of traffic have been permitted—prout e re sua, subditorumque suorum esse censent principes. But it is in all cases the act and permission of the sovereign. Wherever that is permitted it is a suspension of the state of war quoad hoc. It is, as he expresses it, pro parte sic bellum, pro parte pax inter subditos utriusque principis. It appears from these passages to have been the law of Holland. Valin (1. III, title 6, art. 3) states it to have been the law of France whether the trade was attempted to be carried on in national or in neutral vessels; it will appear from a case which I shall have occasion to mention—The Fortuna—to have been the law of Spain; and it may, I think, without rashness, be affirmed to have been a general principle of law in most of the countries of Europe.

Mr. Chairman, this opinion is still the law of England, as may be seen by an examination of her text writers and her latest decisions. I would refer here to the report submitted in relation to the pending bill to the cases of Hugh Stevenson & Sons (Ltd.) against Aktien-Gesellschaft and the Distington Hematite Iron Company (Ltd.) against Possehl, both decided by the high court of justice of the King's bench division in 1916, as confirming what I have stated to be the law of Great Britain.

Mr. Chairman, I would now ask brief consideration of the American view. The leading case is The Rapid, decided by the Supreme Court in 1814, involving the bringing into the United States, from a small island situated near the boundary line between our country and Nova Scotia, goods purchased in England and carried to this island before the outbreak of the War of 1812, where the court held the transaction a trading with the enemy, and a consequent forfeiture followed.

In the case of Insurance Company against Davis, decided in 1877, the Supreme Court discussed quite fully this doctrine in relation to an insurance contract between parties resident, respectively, of opposing belligerents, but the policyholder and the agent of the company, appointed before the outbreak of the war, were residents of the same State, and the court said:

That war suspends all commercial intercourse between the citizens of two belligerent countries or States, except so far as may be allowed by the sovereign authority, has been so often asserted and explained in this court within the last 15 years that any further discussion of that proposition would be out of place. As a consequence of this fundamental proposition it must follow that no active business can be maintained, either personally or by correspondence, or through an agent, by the citizens of one belligerent with the citizens of the other. The only exception to the rule recognized in the books, if we lay out of view contracts for ransom and other matters of absolute necessity, is that of allowing the payment of debts to an agent of an alien enemy, where such agent resides in the same State with the debtor. But this indulgence is subject to restrictions. In the first place, it must not be done with the view of transmitting the funds to the principal during the continuance of the war, though if so transmitted without the debtor's connivance he will not be responsible for it. Washington, J., in Conn v. Penn (Pet. C. Ct., 496); Buchanan v. Curry (19 Johns. (N. Y.), 141). In the next place, in order to secure the subsistence of the agency during the war it must have the assent of the parties thereto—the principal and the agent. As war suspends all intercourse between them, preventing any instructions, supervision, or knowledge of what takes place on the one part, and any report or application for advice on the other, this relation necessarily ceases on the breaking out of hostilities, even for the limited purpose before mentioned, unless continued by the mutual consent of the parties. It is not compulsory, nor can it be made so on either side to subserve the ends of third parties. If the agent continues to act as such, and his so acting is subsequently ratified by the principal, or if the principal's assent is evinced by any other circumstances, then third parties may safely pay money for the use of the principal into the agent's hands; but not otherwise. It is not enough that there was an agency prior to the war. It would be contrary to reason that a man, without his consent, should continue to be bound by the acts of one whose relations to him have undergone such a fundamental alteration as that produced by a war between the two countries to which they respectively belong—with whom he can have no correspondence, to whom he can communicate no instructions, and over whom he can exercise no control. It would be equally unreasonable that the agent should be compelled to continue in the service of one whom the law of nations declares to be his public enemy.

Mr. Chairman, it would weary the committee to discuss in detail the cases of our Supreme Court upon this great question. I desire, however, for the sake of brevity, to read the syllabi of a few of these cases taken from the Digest of the Supreme Court, published by the Lawyers' Cooperative Publishing Co.:

In war the belligerents and all their citizens and subjects are enemies to each other. All intercourse and communication between them is unlawful. (Jecker v. Montgomery, 18 How., 110.)

While the existence of war closes the courts of each belligerent to the citizens of the other, it does not prevent the citizens of one belligerent from taking proceedings for the protection of their own property, in its own courts, against the citizens of the other whenever the latter can be reached by process. (Masterson v. Howard, 18 Wall., 99.)

Absolute suspension of the right of the citizens of one belligerent to sue the citizens of the other, and prohibition to exercise such right, exist during war by the law of nations; but the restoration of peace removes the disability and opens the doors of the courts. (Caperton v. Bowyer, 14 Wall., 216.)

Citizens of a neutral country established in business in the enemy's country may be regarded as enemies and their property as enemy's property. (The Flying Scud v. United States (The Flying Scud), 6 Wall., 263.)

Mr. Chairman, the most abbreviated discussion of this subject would be incomplete without reference to Judge Gray's great opinion in Kershaw against Kelley, decided in the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts in 1868, and where his extraordinary genius for assembling precedents was, perhaps, never equaled by him in his subsequent career upon the Supreme Bench of the Nation. After an exhaustive collocation and analysis, he says:

The result is that the law of nations, as judicially declared, prohibits all intercourse between citizens of the two belligerents which is inconsistent with the state of war between their countries; and that this includes any act of voluntary submission to the enemy or receiving his protection, as well any act or contract which tends to increase his resources; and every kind of trading or commercial dealing or intercourse, whether by transmission of money or goods or orders for the delivery of either, between the two countries, directly or indirectly, or through the intervention of third persons or partnerships, or by contracts in any form looking to or involving such transmission, or by insurances upon trade with or by the enemy.

So, Mr. Chairman, I may affirm that the suspension, the interdiction, and sometimes the revocation of all commercial intercourse between the citizens or subjects of belligerent nations, upon the outbreak of war, is the accepted Anglo-American law. All such trading or commercial intercourse, unless specially licensed, becomes ipso facto illegal upon the outbreak of war. This rule, I may add, is undoubtedly also the law of Europe.

The converse of the rule, namely, that all such trading is permissible until prohibited, is contended for by some publicists, but it does not seem to be sustained by administrative pronouncements or juridicial deliverances, however desirable such international practice may be.

The nearest approximation to such a rule may be found in the new provision of article 23 of the "regulations respecting the laws of land warfare," added under the letter (h) at the second Hague peace conference in 1907, and which runs as follows:

It is forbidden "to declare extinguished, suspended, or unenforcible in a court of law the rights and rights of action of the nationals of the adverse parties."

The interpretation of this rule by Great Britain and the United States is likely to confine the provision to the right of the belligerent nation to instruct the commanders of its forces in the enemy's country not to declare such rights extinguished, suspended, or unenforceable in a court of law in such country. For example, Germany has no authority to extinguish or suspend such rights on the part of the citizens of Belgium, as a matter of administration, during military occupancy of her territory. This seems to be the interpretation of the rule by Davis, one of the American delegates to the second Hague conference, as found in the third edition of his very excellent work, The Elements of International Law, page 576. I may add that Germany was the author of section (h), but that her practice is in brutal conflict with an interpretation of the rule even so narrow as that made by Davis; indeed, Germany seems rather to have forgotten the rule in all of its aspects, or designedly to have considered it another "scrap of paper."

Mr. Chairman, I venture now to hope I am justified in concluding that this committee, in view of the state of the law of nations as recognized by the United States, realizes that our commercial intercourse with Germany has been brought to an impasse, and that none of this trade, no matter how necessary and beneficial to our citizens, can be resumed or carried on in the absence of appropriate legislation by Congress. This bill, therefore, is submitted as according the most adequate, the most equitable, and the most practicable method for the conduct of all desirable trade.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Before the gentleman leaves that subject I would like to have him expand his statement a little as regards contractual rights between people or citizens of belligerent countries. As to those countries, are these contractual rights ipso facto null and void, or do they continue after the resumption of peace?

Mr. MONTAGUE. As a rule, all contracts concluded during war are void. No action upon such contracts will be entertained during or after the war, as I understand the law. But contracts made before the war are usually suspended as to their execution, and the right of action or suit revives after the war to the former enemy.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will it interrupt the gentleman if I ask him a question?

Mr. MONTAGUE. No.

Mr. MADDEN. I am interested to find out just exactly what effect this law will have, and I think the people of the United States who are not lawyers are anxious to know what effect this law, when passed, will have upon alien enemies living in this country and doing business in this country.

Mr. MONTAGUE. This bill does not recognize "alien enemies living in this country" as enemies. Germans living in America are not enemies; they are entitled to all the rights of American citizens unless their conduct becomes so hostile or offensive that they must be reached by Executive proclamation, as provided for in the bill. The chief definition of an enemy is one resident within Germany or within the territory occupied by her military forces.

Mr. Chairman, perhaps in no former war was trade ever so potential a weapon in the hands of a belligerent as in the present conflict. This is not a war of soldiers so much as a war of economic forces. Trade extended or trade suspended—commerce wisely withheld or commerce employed to exert the greatest economic pressure—is of transcendent moment now. But, happily for us, this bill seeks to accomplish these great ends by creating no new rules of international law. It recognizes that these rules work an abatement of trade by reason of war, but it undertakes to surmount this barrier by allowing trade under the sanction of law. That is to say, the bill recognizes and affirms the interdiction of international law, and then at once relaxes the scope and rigor of such interdiction by allowing almost all forms of trade under the authority of licenses issued by the Secretary of Commerce, under the direction of the President. In other words, the bill would prohibit all trading with a German subject by an American citizen unless permitted by the license of the Government. The extent and content of these licenses are almost unlimited, depending upon prudent and wise administrative discretion. Therefore it may be affirmed that all trade will be allowed that does not conflict with the national safety and the successful prosecution of the war.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will.

Mr. FESS. Without this legislation what is the legal status of an enemy resident here? Has he any standing in court at all?

Mr. MONTAGUE. A German resident in the United States is not an enemy under the terms of the bill, unless he should be so declared subsequently by the proclamation of the President, in which case he would have no standing in court.

Mr. FESS. He could not sue on a contract?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Not unless the contract were one of the exceptions contemplated by general international law.

Mr. FESS. And therefore this legislation is simply to enable him to do what otherwise he could not do.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman in his interrogatory has stated the response to his question. Under existing international law there is no forum in which enemies can stand to protect or enforce their contracts. The courts do not open their doors to enemies.

Mr. FESS. The citizen of an enemy country resident here has no rights under the patent law, has he—rights that he had already secured before the war? Such rights, either under the patent law or the copyright law, do not longer exist, do they?

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman answer a question right there in connection with this?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Suppose that some German patentee has entered into a contract with an American citizen to manufacture his product in America for sale to the American people. What becomes of the contract after the declaration of war?

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is suspended under existing law—that is, the general law. This bill gives reciprocal rights as respects patents.

Mr. MADDEN. Would there be any means by which an American citizen having any such contract could prosecute the business under the contract during the pendency of the war? He may have invested a lot of money.

Mr. MONTAGUE. He may conduct the business under the license provided in this bill. Under this bill the citizen can obtain a license to do everything provided in the original patent.

Mr. MADDEN. Would there be any means by which the money could be impounded?

Mr. MONTAGUE. This bill undertakes also to do that if the income of the enemy is in form of money or demand notes.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; so that he could continue to do his business without losing his investment.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The enemy patentee would not continue to do business, but the American licensee under the patent would do the business, being ultimately liable for certain profits or royalties prescribed in the bill.

Mr. HULBERT. Do I correctly understand that the purpose of this bill is to provide rules and regulations for the carrying on of business which now we are permitting to be carried on as a mere matter of suffrance?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Of course trade now carried on is carried on in violation of general international law and at a very great risk to those conducting it. They may be violating international law, and these violations may be recognized by the American courts without congressional legislation.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The general opinion regarding the enemy-trading act has been that it has an element of punishment in it, but instead of that this is a friendly attitude toward the enemy citizen——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Enemy resident.

Mr. FESS. Enemy resident. It is in his behalf rather than against him?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The first intention of the bill is to give the German resident in the United States almost every right that a citizen has. The German resident can be disturbed, not by the first operation of the act, but by the subsequent proclamation of the President, issued in pursuance of authority given in the act, manifestly to be done only when it is apparent that the German or ally of Germany residing in America is giving aid or comfort to the enemy or doing some act of somewhat similar character.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand that this bill confers upon the President any authority to grant to an alien subject doing business in this country the right to sue in the courts to enforce his contract?

Mr. MONTAGUE. If he is a resident of this country, he has that right under this bill without the proclamation of the President.

Mr. STAFFORD. If so, where is that authority?

Mr. MONTAGUE. In the very terms of the bill defining an enemy, whereby German residents in the United States have all rights in this respect of native-born citizens, unless these rights be recalled by the proclamation of the President for hostile conduct on the part of the Germans resident in the United States.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will.

Mr. LENROOT. With reference to the statement the gentleman has just made, that the purpose of this bill is not to infringe in any way upon international law, I wish to ask the gentleman with reference to section 2—

The word "enemy" shall be deemed to mean any resident outside of the United States and doing business within such belligerent territory.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Where is the gentleman reading?

Mr. LENROOT. At the bottom of page 1 of the committee substitute. I want to ask the gentleman whether that does not violate international law in this, that, irrespective of whether the business of the resident outside of the United States is within belligerent territory or not, if he does any business within belligerent territory it makes him an enemy, not only for such business but for all business done by that resident, and is not that in violation of existing international law?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The purpose of the bill is to make neutral citizens or subjects doing business within the enemy's country enemies. This is not new law. The English trading-with-the-enemy act so determines such neutrals, and I think our Supreme Court declares business so carried on in the country of the enemy by neutrals makes them enemies. Certainly it is not in contravention of international law for the Congress to declare such business residents to be enemies.

Mr. LENROOT. I call the gentleman's attention to the consequence of section 7, where it renders void any contract or payment made to any enemy. To illustrate, a citizen of Denmark, we will say, has an agent doing business in Germany, a very small percentage of his business and a business which he has the right to do under international law; but he has had business dealings with American citizens, not with relation to the business which he has done with Germany but entirely foreign to it. Under the bill as it stands it renders void every contract, irrespective of the kind of business in which the Denmark subject is engaged, and treats him as an enemy, not only so far as business done with Germany but all business done.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I can only repeat that a neutral carrying on business in Germany is an enemy under this bill, and because he does business, the larger part of the business as to that, with citizens of friendly countries does not alter his enemy character. It would be impossible to separate or distinguish his enemy business from his neutral business. His credit, his solvency, could not be separated and apportioned. He has in law a business residence in Germany, and of necessity he must, quoad this business, stand as other residents of Germany.

Mr. LENROOT. But section 7 has no exceptions, but renders every contract void.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That seems true, but there is no practicable way of distinguishing and separating his business as to enemy credits and neutral credits. It is one business, regardless of the character or residence of the purchasers or contractors.

Mr. Chairman, returning now to my line of argument, I have heretofore suggested that the definition of enemy found in the bill is significant, for it is determinative. This is the Anglo-American definition in that it makes the residence of the person in enemy territory the test of the enemy character, in contrast with that of Europe which makes nativity or nationality the test. A German subject residing in America, for example, is not per se an enemy, and under this bill is only an enemy when the proclamation of the President so declares him upon grounds of public safety.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman give his construction of the phrase "resident outside of the United States doing business within such territory"?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I have heretofore discussed this definition and test of enemy character, and endeavored to show that it was in no sense novel or an extension of the rule recognized by England and by the United States. I will now answer that it would be most unfortunate to exclude enemies falling under this definition, for it is this class of enemies who by indirect methods and circuitous routes carry on trade of America to strengthen the credit of Germany.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman's construction is that it means all business done by that resident, if he does any business within enemy territory?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes; his business is not susceptible of division into lines or degrees of hostile activity or friendly activity. No such apportionment is practicable, and a definition of enemy into such a divided character would destroy the entire definition. He can not be half enemy and half neutral at the same time.

Mr. LENROOT. How does the gentleman think the United States would have considered Germany's action if, prior to the beginning of the war, she had treated every citizen who did business with England as an enemy and forfeited all property held in Germany by that citizen?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Germany would have had a right to so hold if he did business within England.

Mr. LENROOT. Absolutely not, under international law—only that part of the business done with England would she have a right to forfeit.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. HILL. There is one question that troubles me a little in regard to this bill and that is this: What becomes of the dividends of railroad companies due to foreign stockholders? For many years the great railroads of the country have been placing loans abroad and many of them are held there now represented by bonds and stocks. Understand me, I am in sympathy with the general provisions of the bill, but I would like to know what becomes of future dividends and future interest upon stocks and bonds, amounting to millions and millions of dollars due to foreigners.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am answering the gentleman generally. The bill provides machinery by which there shall be a complete disclosure and discovery of all foreign stockholders and their interests, and provides that that interest shall be impounded and cared for by our Government during the war.

Mr. HILL. How cared for? Is it compulsory that these dividends and that interest shall be paid to the Secretary of the Treasury, or can it be held back by the companies owing the debt?

Mr. MONTAGUE. It will be compulsory in this sense, that the Secretary of Commerce shall make rules and regulations with respect to the payment. The report is compulsory, the collection of the money reported may or may not be compulsory. I imagine a great deal of it will never be attempted to be collected.

Mr. HILL. Then there is no definite provision in the bill?

Mr. MONTAGUE. There is a definite provision in that the bill gives ample authority to deal with that subject. Administrative discretion, under appropriate regulations, is provided for.

Mr. HILL. But no specific provision is made by the bill itself, except that millions of dollars are to be put into the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury if the Secretary of Commerce shall so prescribe.

Mr. MONTAGUE. One of the objects of this bill is to put those particular millions into the hands of this Government if it is deemed wise or necessary so to do. If it is money or demand notes, it goes into the Treasury and can then be invested in Government bonds and certificates by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HILL. Is there any provision made for a subsequent payment to the owner of that property?

Mr. MONTAGUE. After the war?

Mr. HILL. What is the provision then made? As I read the bill the owner of a patent can sue and recover for royalties and for use, but there is no provision in the bill whatever for the return of dividends and interest upon stocks and bonds, an investment which we ourselves have solicited from investors in foreign countries.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The question of patents is a reciprocal one.

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That right is given provided the enemy nation accords a similar right to the citizens of America. There is a provision made that all money and property may be impounded by the Government. If it is money it can be reinvested by the Secretary of the Treasury. At the end of the war Congress may deal with all property so impounded. No hard-and-fast rule can be made now, because the question of indemnity, of offsets, will arise and we should fortify our Government for the final negotiations of peace.

Mr. HILL. Then, as I understand it, it is practical confiscation now, but subject to the courtesy and kindness of Congress after the war is over, so far as actual money is concerned, but giving a legal right to recover in case of patents?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Not confiscation at all. The Government will act, if I may use a legal term, as bailee. It will take this property and invest it in the best security in the world. It will take property which does not belong to debtors in this country, and who may not be solvent at the end of the war, and hold it for final disposition after the war. In other words, the Government undertakes to do by these enemy creditors better than the resident debtors or such enemy creditors could do for themselves.

Mr. HILL. That might be. I do not want to take the gentleman's time, but I want an understanding of this situation, because it is true that we shall in the future, as in the past, probably be applicants for the investment of foreign funds in the development of the industries and the railroad situation of this country, and no one needs it more than the railroads do now. What position are we going to be in if we confiscate the stocks and bonds owned abroad and put the dividends and interest from them into the Treasury of the United States for the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to hold, to invest, to sell, and make no provision whatever at the time we do it that there shall be at least a prescribed legal way for the owner to come back and make claim against the United States.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the gentleman's assumption that the bill authorizes confiscation is a violent one.

Mr. HILL. No disposition is made of it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The disposition is to hold it in safety, and use it to our advantage during the war.

Mr. HILL. Why not let the companies hold and refuse to pay the dividends and interest to the foreign stockholders instead of taking it out of investment. Let them refuse and hold it and report to the Government they have got it, and let the Government authorize them to hold it back, absolutely hold it back and not pay it over until——

Mr. MONTAGUE. Because in war enemy property can be best held and cared for by the Government itself. It is primarily the function of government to deal with enemy property.

Mr. HILL. I heartily agree with the gentleman on that proposition.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is what the bill endeavors to accomplish.

Mr. HILL. Why not make some declaration of what will be done with it after the war is over?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Because you can not make a proper disposition in advance of the end of the war. We preserve this property in its integrity until the war is over, and then we will deal with it in the final negotiations.

Mr. HILL. These dividends and interest must be paid to a United States custodian?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. HILL. And held by the Secretary of the Treasury until after the war is over.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The dividends go into the Treasury.

Mr. HILL. There is no provision whatever for the presentation of claims on the part of owners, except that they must trust entirely to the action of Congress after the war is over. Do I understand the gentleman correctly?

Mr. MONTAGUE. In so far as the Government has taken possession of the money or other property.

Mr. HARDY. If the gentleman will permit, it seems to me the purpose of this bill is to leave the international rights of citizens of different nationalities for adjustment between the nations now at war after the war is ended.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman correctly states it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield for just a question? Will the gentleman inform the committee, either now or before he concludes his remarks, whether belligerent Governments have pursued any similar policy since the beginning of the great war?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Great Britain and France have, so far as I am informed. They may not invest or reinvest the moneys so taken over; that is an American contribution to belligerent finance.

Mr. STAFFORD. To the extent as embodied in this bill?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think Great Britain goes further than we do. I am not prepared to say how far the French Government has gone as respects the custodian.

Mr. ESCH. If the gentleman will permit, I understand the Germans also have a custodian.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In response to the question of the gentleman from Wisconsin my answer was meant to convey the idea that the laws of the other belligerent nations as respects enemy property are perhaps more drastic than this bill.

Mr. ESCH. If the gentleman will permit, in reference to an inquiry made by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], these stocks and bonds are not to be turned over to the custodian, but they must be left with depositories selected by the Secretary of Commerce on recommendation by Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. ESCH. And after the depositories pay over to the custodian they deposit in the Treasury the dividends on the stocks and interest on the bonds.

Mr. DEWALT. And further, in reference to that, these depositories must furnish bonds for safekeeping.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will say that was in my mind when I replied to the gentleman from Connecticut that the Government was a quasi bailee. Now, the increment, the interest, goes to the custodian, and the custodian turns it over to the Secretary of the Treasury, who may invest it in Government bonds or certificates.

Mr. HILL. I am not criticizing that, but I wonder if some better way could not be had? For instance, take the case of the Pennsylvania Railroad. Nobody questions the financial solvency of that railroad. Would it not be better to pass a law authorizing and requiring the Pennsylvania Railroad to withhold the dividends from the foreign stockholders until the close of the war to be then paid, rather than require them to pay it over to a custodian and that custodian invest it in such bonds as he sees fit——

Mr. MONTAGUE. The character of investment is prescribed by the act.

Mr. HILL. Within the last 30 or 60 days the 3 per cent Panama bonds have gone to the eighties. Is there any justice in taking the money of the foreigner, investing it without his knowledge or consent, if it can be safely retained in the property in which he made the investment?

What harm would there be in allowing the Pennsylvania Railroad, for example, to withhold the dividends and also keep here the interest on the bonds held by foreigners?

Mr. DEWALT. The answer to that, let me say to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] is this: The purpose here is to take the increment arising from these bonds, place it in the hands of this Government, and let this Government use that for its purposes during the continuance of the war.

Mr. HILL. I would not have the slightest objection to that if there was any provision in the bill that the full amount should be returned when the war was over.

Mr. DEWALT. When the war is over, these parties are relegated to their rights under the act of Congress. This property is not confiscated at all.

Mr. HILL. To all intents and purposes it is, because it says it shall be held subject to the action of Congress, then——

Mr. DEWALT. Very true.

Mr. HILL. And who knows what the Government or Congress will do then?

Mr. DEWALT. But the gentleman seems to forget that these bonds themselves are not in the hands of the Government.

Mr. HILL. That is the way I understood it when reading the bill.

Mr. DEWALT. They are in depositories to be selected by the Secretary of the Treasury—trust companies or other security companies. Those security companies must enter bonds with the United States Government for the safe-keeping thereof.

Mr. HILL. What I think ought to be done should be to require those people to withhold the dividends during the continuance of the war.

Mr. MONTAGUE. As long as we do that the German owner of the dividends has a substantial basis of credit.

Mr. HILL. Not under the law. It is confiscation as the bill puts it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Why should a private or corporate debtor be permitted to hold property belonging to the enemy? The money belongs to the enemy. No individual should control it unless allowed by his Government.

Mr. HILL. Why does the bill provide that in the case of a patentee that provision shall be made for procuring his rights afterward, but not in the case of actual cash?

Mr. MONTAGUE. There is no analogy between patents and the dividends due enemies by citizens of America. We give patent rights to Germany upon condition that she give similar rights to the United States.

Mr. HILL. I want this country to so fairly and justly protect the foreigner that in the years to come when we go, as individuals and corporations in your State and my State and other States of the Union will go, to Europe to solicit funds, as they have done in the past, we will not be met with the reply that we have confiscated property.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the act does not permit the debtors of these dividends to retain them there is no injury to their rights, for their right is to pay it over to the owner, and when that owner is an enemy the Government steps in to forbid such payment.

Mr. HILL. Of course, there is not, but it is an injustice for the Secretary of the Treasury to have authority to invest in any form that he sees fit in Government funds, and then not return that money when the war is over until Congress shall provide how it shall be done or whether it shall be done at all or not.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Of course, the gentleman may take a case that he feels would be better conducted by doing as he suggests, but all of these debtors are not Pennsylvania Railroads. No one can foretell the status of business in the era now facing us, and therefore I submit that if the United States should become the custodian of this property it would protect rather than jeopardize the interests of enemy creditors.

Mr. HILL. Why not permit it to be placed in the bill, and not say as this bill does that we will invest it for our own benefit, and perhaps by and by, five years from now, after the war is over, Congress may take some action for their relief?

Mr. MONTAGUE. My individual views are that by impounding this property it is made to serve the interests of America in this great struggle, and, at the same time, its final and honest payment to the creditor is made more secure.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield? As to this Pennsylvania Railroad illustration, I understand the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] fears that the foreign investment in an American railroad may be disturbed and that its usefulness will be destroyed; that there will be a vacuum when the alien investment is taken away that will have to be filled up? If I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] the investment itself is not disturbed at all?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Not at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The increment is taken over by the alien property custodian and is held in the Treasury, but the investment goes on and serves its purpose. Am I right about that?

Mr. DEWALT. Yes. And permit me further. This is also true, that whilst there may be in time of war loss to the Pennsylvania Railroad investor, that may apply to the home holder of the same stock. So that it would not work any injustice to anybody at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The disposition of the investment itself and the increment is left for Congress to determine after the war?

Mr. DEWALT. Exactly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the investment fund itself remains in the hands of the operating companies?

Mr. DEWALT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And is kept working in the United States?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes; and money so held by the Government is for the benefit of the creditor and the Nation alike.

Mr. HILL. The bill does not so provide. I think it should do so specifically. May I ask the gentleman why provision is not made for the claiming and proving of the title, as in the case of a patent suit, in the matter of interest and dividends on bonds? As it is now it is temporary confiscation, trusting in the goodness of Congress after the war is over to provide some remedy. I can not understand why preference is made in one case and not in the other.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I answered the gentleman a few minutes since. The difference between the gentleman and myself is that he believes in private "confiscation" and I believe in Government "confiscation," to use the term employed by him, which is wholly inapplicable.

Mr. HILL. I do not believe in railroad confiscation. I believe in honesty in business. I do not believe in repudiation of State debts or any other kind of debts. I believe the Federal Government has the power to say to the Pennsylvania Railroad or to any other railroad, "You shall not pay one penny of interest on any bond to a foreign stockholder."

Mr. MONTAGUE. What would you do with it?

Mr. HILL. I would let them hold it where the investor originally put it. Your bill says, "We will temporarily confiscate it and leave it to the goodness of Congress by and by to provide some law by which relief will be afforded."

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman's use of the word "confiscation" is wholly arbitrary. This is only a question as to which is to be bailee or custodian—the private debtor or the United States. That is the whole question. The bill provides that the Government may be the custodian, not the private debtor of the enemy.

Mr. HILL. Oh, in one case the stockholder has a right to sue the corporation after the war, and he can not sue the Government.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There will be no trouble about suing the Government.

Mr. HILL. There is trouble. The law does not permit him to sue the Government. I say, "Treat them fairly and treat them strictly, but do not confiscate property." We may have occasion to go to them again for loans by and by.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The enemy creditor might not recover from the debtor in the absence of this law after the war is over?

Mr. HILL. Why not leave the investment there, but not let the proceeds go to him?

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is wiser and more expedient that earnings belonging to the enemy creditor may be turned over to the Government as bailee than that it should remain in the hands of the debtor. That is evidently the principle underlying the bill.

Mr. HILL. Suppose that money had been invested in Panama 3 per cent bonds two or three months ago, and the Secretary of the Treasury at the end of the war should sell those. Who is going to stand good and make the loss?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not think there will be any loss. But in any case where loss should occur, it would occur as well as if the interest were retained in the hands of the debtor himself.

Mr. HILL. Oh, you do not think there will be. There has been on every bond issued by every belligerent nation in the world, depending on the length of the war.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Virginia yield for a question?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I yield to the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. MANN. I thought the gentleman had been diverted from any argument.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I thank the gentleman for his rescue.

Mr. MANN. Is there any authority in this bill for an alien enemy to bring a suit pending the war against the United States, except in patent matters?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Not during the war.

Mr. MANN. How about a bankruptcy case?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The same prohibition applies, I would say.

Mr. MANN. Here is a bankruptcy case. A man has to file his claim or lose it. What are you to do? Shut him out entirely?

Mr. MONTAGUE. How could he bring a suit without this bill, I will ask the gentleman?

Mr. MANN. I think under international law he could. That claim has been made, but that has nothing to do with the question.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But if he has no such right in the absence of legislation, how is he injured?

Mr. MANN. We are passing a bill now to fix the rights. It seems perfectly manifest that if there is a case in bankruptcy and the alien enemy has a claim, there ought to be some way of proving the claim. It might not be desirable to pay the money to an alien enemy during the war, but does not the gentleman think that the claim ought to be allowed to be proven? There are many cases similar to that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not think suit, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, could be maintained under this bill or under international law.

Mr. MANN. This bill, as I understand it, covers the law on this subject. I am informed by reputable attorneys that there have been cases where it was held that in a bankruptcy proceeding an alien enemy could prove his claim, although the money might not be paid to him during the war. But this bill, determining the rights of the alien enemy, would forbid that right to be preserved.

Mr. DECKER. May I ask what part of it would forbid that?

Mr. MANN. The bill fixes the whole status.

Mr. DECKER. I think not. A claim or suit would not be a question of trading with the enemy, would it?

Mr. MANN. It plainly forbids the bringing of a suit except in patent cases.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Virginia will permit, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], if he will refer to section 9, on page 13, he will find that that section intimates, if it does not clearly express, the rights of those who have claims. I am very free to grant what the gentleman says, that there would be no inherent right of suit in the bankruptcy court.

Mr. MANN. I think there would be, except by this bill.

Mr. DEWALT. Except by this bill; and I judge from what the gentleman says in reference to it that a provision of that sort might be the part of wisdom; but if the gentleman will read section 9, it declares that anyone who has—any interest, right, or title in any money or other property which may have been conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered, or paid to the alien property custodian hereunder—may file his claim, and may also pursue his remedy in the district court. Now start out with the absolute idea that all the property assets of the alien bankrupt are conveyed ab initio to the custodian. Another thing that must be remembered is this, that in this bill the enemy is not described as an enemy by nativity or by citizenship. He is described as an enemy by the mere fact of location. In other words, it does not affect a man who is resident in this country. It does affect those who are resident in hostile territory.

Mr. MANN. It might affect a citizen of the United States in Germany.

Mr. DEWALT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Although he has an agent here with a power of attorney, under this bill the agent here with that power of attorney can not do anything and might entirely lose his claim, though evidently that is not the purpose of the bill.

Mr. DEWALT. The latter statement that the gentleman makes is a little too broad.

Mr. MANN. I do not think so.

Mr. DEWALT. Basically it might be correct, but it must be couched with an exception. If there is an established agency in this country which is recognized both by the agent and the party who employs him and the employer be living in a foreign country, then the agent can receive payment for the principal, and that is legally valid under the law and acts as an acquittance.

Mr. MANN. Is that provided for in this bill?

Mr. DEWALT. Yes; that is provided for in this bill, with this provision also, however, that if the Government of the United States has reasonable cause to believe that the agent located here will transmit to the alien in the foreign country the property which he collects, then he can be prohibited from so doing.

Mr. MANN. Are the provisions to which the gentleman refers in the original bill or in the substitute?

Mr. DEWALT. In the original bill and the substitute.

Mr. MANN. I must say I do not find them in the original bill. I have not examined the substitute. I should be glad to have any gentleman point out where they are in the original bill.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think they are in the substitute.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where?

Mr. MANN. I shall be glad to know where that is in the substitute.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I now desire to proceed in my own time. When interrupted, some minutes since, I was addressing myself to the definition of enemy, the enemy to whom trade and intercourse and communication are forbidden in this bill. I now desire to direct attention to the kind of trade and intercourse interdicted. The interdiction is very ample, very comprehensive; it embraces all forms of trade and commercial intercourse and communication; it forbids the transportation of an enemy or the ally of an enemy; it forbids the transmission out of the United States of all letters, documents, writings, pictures, diagrams, maps, or other forms of communication intended to be delivered to any enemy or his ally—prohibitions in the main and in principle long recognized by international law.

Mr. Chairman, it should be observed that these interdictions are at once comprehensive and definite. We know what is forbidden. We do not have to grope and search for meaning or subjects or argue for authority. But if the interdiction is of ample extent, so are the exceptions to the interdiction, for the doing of all the things prohibited is allowed in the next line of the bill. In one line, so to speak, we are told what we must not do, and in the next we are told that all these things can be done if properly sanctioned by the President under the form of licenses issued by the Secretary of Commerce under appropriate rules and regulations. So the character and scope of the licenses constitute the real measure of the modifications, the real extent of the relaxation, of the interdictions imposed by the bill. The prohibition and the exception go hand in hand.

Mr. Chairman, commerce in its ultimate analysis is property, and it is this property and the credits based thereupon that we wish to withhold from the enemy. To reach this end the bill provides for the discovery and disclosure of enemy property and a report thereof. So, under appropriate regulations, with the approval of the President, all corporations, associations, companies, or trustees within the United States must make a report enumerating every officer, director, or stockholder who is an enemy or ally of an enemy, together with the amount of stock or shares owned by such enemy officer, director, or stockholder. I will not, however, elaborate these provisions, as the interrogatories and colloquies heretofore occurring in my time have covered the subject.

But, Mr. Chairman, this property must be conserved. The report of its existence and character having been first made, the next step will be the taking over of the property by the Government, should it be proper and expedient to do so. It should be observed that the discovery and report of such property is compulsory, but its acquisition by the Government is discretionary. When acquired, however, it is manifest that some agency of Government must become the custodian of this property. To this end the bill provides the agency to be known as "the alien-property custodian," who is empowered to receive all money and property in the United States due and belonging to an enemy or to an ally of an enemy, and who is to hold and account for the same under prescribed regulations. This custodian is appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, with approval of the President. He receives a salary not exceeding $5,000 per annum, must give approved bonds for the discharge of his duties, and the clerks, investigators, accountants, and other employees necessary for the conduct of the office are to be selected from the list of eligibles prescribed by civil-service regulations and methods.

Mr. Chairman, in this connection a very novel and interesting feature of this bill should at least be brought to the attention of the committee. This is the provision authorizing the alien-property custodian to deposit all moneys, including checks and demand drafts, in the Treasury of the United States, and that this money may be invested and reinvested in United States bonds or certificates of indebtedness, and the interest and increment thereon may be used in the conduct of the war.

The holders of mortgages and liens, if not enemies or allies of the enemy, have their rights protected as far as possible. For mortgagees and lienors may enforce their liens under such regulations and after such notice as the Secretary of Commerce may prescribe, provided, however, that the regulations shall require no other notice than that required by the terms of the contract or the law in force at the time of making the contract of mortgage or lien. And, generally speaking, contracts entered into prior to the war between citizens or corporations of the United States with an enemy or ally of an enemy may be terminated upon notice in accordance with the terms of such contracts when served upon the alien-property custodian, and the notice so served is as effective as if served upon the enemy or ally of the enemy.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will.

Mr. LENROOT. Upon this subject of lienors the bill provides that any person not an enemy having a lien may have a remedy. The word "person" is defined in the bill, but what I want to ask the gentleman is this question: In the case of securities subject to taxation by the State or municipality and upon which they have a lien for tax, under the provisions of this bill the State or municipality will lose all such taxes, will they not?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Why does the gentleman think so?

Mr. LENROOT. Because section 14 provides that there shall be no lien upon any of this property except as specifically provided in the bill. That is in section 9, page 14. The word "person" as defined in the bill does not include State governments or municipalities.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman may be correct, and the definition of "person" may not embrace States or political subdivisions. I incline to believe he is correct, and perhaps an amendment should be offered to meet the difficulty.

So, too, Mr. Chairman, are the rights and interests of persons, not enemies or allies of the enemy, in and to property conveyed, transferred, or assigned or paid to the alien property custodian fully protected. The claimants of such property may litigate their rights under the rather wide latitude conferred by the bill, the procedure provided for being somewhat analogous to the interpleader commonly known to lawyers.

I would now advert for a moment to the subject of patents, trade-marks, and copyrights. All of these subjects are dealt with in section 10. This section has been drawn with great care, has had the consideration of the Commissioner of Patents, and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and I am justified in affirming that the rights of American citizens are fully protected. Fundamentally, patent rights are intended to be reciprocal.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman point out where that is provided for?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Section 10, dealing with this precise question, says:

Provided, The nation of which the said applicant is a citizen, subject, or corporation shall extend substantially similar privilege to citizens and corporations of the United States.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I did not understand from the hurried reading of the bill exactly what the regulations are in regard to patents. Suppose a patent is taken over under a license, is there any provision as to what price may be asked for the goods?

Mr. MONTAGUE. It gives the licensee a right to take the patent not to exceed a prescribed charge.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And he can sell at his own price.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The Federal Trade Commission may prescribe the conditions under which the license is granted, the fee to be charged therefor—which, however, is not to exceed $100—and a further charge not exceeding 1 per cent upon 5 per cent of the gross sums derived by the licensee from the sale of the invention, or 1 per cent upon 5 per cent of the value of the use of such invention as decided by the Federal Trade Commission. Subsections (c) and (b) of section 10 deal fully with the fee and charges to be paid by the licensees.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Has the gentleman any information as to what the rights are of American citizens in regard to patents in Germany at this time?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think Germany accords reciprocal rights. Russia is the only exception.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with respect to the clearances of vessels, I need only say it is obvious that the Government should have regulatory powers as to the clearance of all vessels, and the bill gives ample powers in this particular.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Before the gentleman takes his seat I want to say that my recollection as to the international requirements touching the annulment of contracts does not touch the issuance of bonds by the Government or the State. The question was suggested awhile ago by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The validity of the bonds is not in question; the question is how to collect the interest on them. The right is either suspended or abrogated by war; the remedy for collection must be afforded by legislation.

Mr. FESS. In other words, the Government would not discount its own obligation?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Payment is suspended, and when the war is over the question of an accounting and settlement arises, the question of offsets and indemnities, and therefore this whole matter, it seems to me, is wisely left to Congress when the conflict is over.

Mr. FESS. As a Member well informed in international law as is the gentleman——

Mr. MONTAGUE. I thank the gentleman for his compliment, but I am afraid he does violence to the fact.

Mr. FESS. No; I do not. Is it not true that that is one exception in international law—the matter of annulling contracts?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I would not like to answer the gentleman offhand.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The reciprocal provision applies to applications for patents.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What I had in mind was paragraph (c) of section 10, which provides that citizens of this country may manufacture any article protected by patent belonging to an alien enemy. That is not reciprocal, is it?

Mr. MONTAGUE. That right is acquired by license.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Has Germany in any way suspended patents applying to American citizens?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The war suspends them.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Why should not this be limited to similar action taken on the part of the German Government?

Mr. MONTAGUE. If we did, we might find our hands tied.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that a good many patents are owned in Germany by American citizens?

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is true; more than are owned by German citizens in this country.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I would want to limit that to similar action taken by the German Government.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I doubt whether it is practical to effect such an arrangement.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. What effect would this bill have upon the collection of the income tax from foreigners?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman means enemy foreigners?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not know how it is possible to collect it. If the foreigner had property here, it could be subjected to payment of the tax, but I do not see how the tax could be collected in the absence of such property in this country. Perhaps there might be at the end of the war collections made in the form of offsets.

Mr. Chairman, I have not discussed this bill with the detail and continuity I anticipated, and the many interruptions have perhaps rendered my explanations unsatisfactory to the committee. The bill, Mr. Chairman, is complex, technical, and dry, but is nevertheless a great war measure, and I hope it may reach a final passage at the earliest practicable moment. I thank the committee for its attention. [Applause.]

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I asked the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] some questions during the early portion of his speech, as to whether or not this bill in any of its particulars violated existing international law. He replied that it did not, that it was not the intention of the committee in reporting the bill to do anything other than to mitigate the harsh conditions of existing international law, and I am entirely in sympathy with the committee in that, but in section 2, defining the word "enemy," we find this language:

The word "enemy" as used herein shall be deemed to mean: Any individual, partnership, or other body of individuals, of any nationality, resident within the territory (including that occupied by the military and naval forces) of any nation with which the United States is at war—or resident outside the United States and doing business within such territory.

And this is the language to which I particularly wish to direct attention—

Section 7 of the bill makes void all contracts of every character and payments made after the beginning of the war to any such enemy. I contend that that is clearly in violation of international law, and such a violation that, if it had been made by Germany when we were neutral, would have called for notes and condemnation second only to the condemnation with which the submarine warfare was met by us. It will be observed that this is not limited to business done with the enemy by residents outside of the United States. If it were so limited, it would be proper and in accordance with existing international law, but as the language reads, if anyone outside of the United States in a neutral country has an agent in Germany for the purpose of carrying on a business which he has a perfect right to carry on under international law, the existence of that agency in Germany makes that man an enemy not only so far as the business with Germany is concerned, but so far as all business is concerned, and renders void all contracts that he has made in this country.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the gentleman think his argument is wholly sound in consideration of the proviso found in line 21, on page 9?

Mr. LENROOT. The proviso has nothing whatever to do with it, because if the payment is made to a person in Holland, we will say, and it is known at the time the payment was made that that Holland party had an agent in Germany, but that the subject of transaction had nothing to do with Germany, might have concerned England, nevertheless the contract and the payment would be absolutely void under the bill. The proviso does not in any degree limit it or rectify it. What is international law on the subject? I was amazed at the statement of the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE], an eminent international lawyer, which he made in response to a question which I put to him. I asked him what we would have thought of Germany's action if, when we were neutral, Germany had undertaken, because of some American citizen carrying on some perfectly ligitimate transaction with England, to render void all contracts made in Germany, had undertaken to confiscate all of the property of the American citizen in Germany, because he had done a perfectly legitimate business in England. The gentleman made the surprising statement that he believed Germany would have had the right to so confiscate the property of Americans in Germany. I am very sure upon reflection the gentleman will see that that could not possibly be done without the grossest and most palpable violation of international law. Now, what is the international law upon this subject? I read first from Woolsey, page 297:

But a person having a house of commerce in the enemy's country, although actually resident in a neutral country, is treated as an enemy—

But it does not stop there—is treated as an enemy so far forth as that part of his business is concerned, or is domiciled there quo ad hoc.

That is to that extent, and that extent only. And in Hall's International Law, reading from page 494, we find this:

A person though not resident in a country may be so associated with it through having, or being a partner in, a house of trade there, as to be affected by its enemy character, in respect at least of the property which he possesses in the belligerent territory; if he is a merchant—

Mark the words "if he is a merchant"— in two countries, of which one is neutral and the other belligerent, he is regarded as neutral or belligerent, according to the country in which a particular transaction of its commerce has originated. Things are different when a merchant living in a neutral country and carrying on an ordinary neutral trade has merely a resident agent in the belligerent State, the agent being looked upon as only an instrument for facilitating the conduct of a trade which in other respects is not distinguishable from that of other neutral merchants.

That is the unquestioned international law upon this subject, and yet this bill, as at present framed and reported by the committee, would regard as an enemy and render void all contracts made by anyone residing in a neutral country if he did any business within the territory of an enemy, and before the committee has any right to ask this House to adopt that provision, clearly violating international law as I see it, the House is entitled to some better exposition than the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] has undertaken to give that it is justified by existing international law. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is important that the United States, as it has entered upon this war for justice and democracy, shall be careful that in the prosecution of this war it shall not itself violate plain and unquestioned principles of international law. We can not be too careful in observing international law in everything that we shall do in the prosecution of this war, and I am sure that the committee has had in mind throughout the preparation of this bill that it has no intention of violating those principles of international law, but rather to mitigate them, but the fact remains that if this bill does remain, as reported by the committee in this provision, it does violate international law, and violates it in such a way that if it had been practiced by Germany when we were neutral we would most vigorously have protested. Indeed, we all remember that while we were neutral England had what was called a blacklist and we protested then.

England made no attempt to forfeit contracts made by American citizens because of their doing business with Germany. What they attempted to do in that black list was to operate upon their own citizens only to prevent them from trading with certain firms. It was merely domestic and municipal legislation. It did not in the least attempt to affect the rights, duties, and obligations of any citizen of any foreign country. It may be—I would not care to discuss that now—that we would have the right to pass any legislation we choose, so far as obligations of our own citizens are concerned, and penalize them in any way we choose, but when we undertake to deal with rights and properties of citizens of neutral nations and say they shall be forfeited and confiscated, we can only do it by violating one of the plainest and most unquestionable principles of international law, and I sincerely hope before we reach the consideration of this bill under the five-minute rule the committee will see to it that this provision, so far as citizens outside the United States are concerned, will be amended so that in treating them as enemies they shall be treated as enemies only to the extent of business done by them in the enemy's territory. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON].

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I shall speak more particularly upon section 10, relative to patents. I am not going to make a very broad address but narrow my remarks probably to one or two patents. Much has been said here to the effect that probably Germany will suffer because of the rules or laws laid down by this bill, but I feel sure that since the Federal Trade Commission has control of it, no injustice will be meted out to any alien patentee.

In the early part of the session I introduced a bill for the suspension of a patent that was issued to a citizen and resident of Germany. The administration afterwards drafted the intent of my bill in section 10 as part of the measure now under consideration. This is the first bill in the history of our legislation to suspend a patent owned by an enemy. The Department of Justice, in its judgment, did not advise this step without compensation to the patentee. The Magna Charta, which guaranteed the rights and provileges to the English barons, contained the principle that "merchant strangers are, upon the breaking out of war, to be attached and kept without harm to body and goods until it should be known how English merchants are treated by the sovereign of their State, and if the latter are safe there then the former are to be safe here."

In the case of Brown against the United States, Chief Justice Marshall said, "It is urged, in executing the laws of war, the Executive may seize and the courts condemn all property, which according to the modern laws of nations is subject to confiscation, although it might require an act of legislation to justify the condemnation of that property which according to modern usage ought not to be confiscated." Thus the rule of civilized nations is to favor moderation and humanity in dealing with the property of an enemy in time of war.

This section has been drawn with the view of carrying out those reasonings under rules and regulations prescribed in section 12. On account of the conditions issuing out of the war trade relations for a time between the people of Germany and ourselves will be abandoned. There are many German drugs covered with American patents that are extensively used in this country but manufactured in Germany, and have become indispensable to the medical world. It is for the public welfare that these drugs be manufactured in America in order to obtain them. An infection prevails in the Army and Navy—not necessarily originating from camp life—but an infection most important to be eradicated in order that greater efficiency may be obtained from our officers, soldiers and sailors. The German remedy to which I allude is 30 times more effective than any other known drug. Chemical history reveals that our Army is more infected than any other in the world, being 16.77 per cent among the younger men and a larger percentage among the older. It is impracticable to extend to every recruit a complete physical examination; the infection becomes known after his enlistment, and then he is a patient under the care of the Government. I have been informed by the medical department of the Council of National Defense that 100,000 ampoules are needed at once, and that it is impossible to obtain them even at the market price of $4.50 per ampul, which represents one dose. Before the war the price was $2.50 an ampul. The office of the Surgeon General reports that during the year 1914 the Army purchased 9,380 ampuls, and during the fiscal year of 1917 to June 1 the Army purchased 2,074 ampuls at a cost of $9,344, nearly $4.50 an ampul.

To show the very great importance of this I ask that the letter from Surg. Gen. Gorgas be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 25, 1917.

Hon. HENRY W. WATSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. WATSON: In reply to your favor of the 24th, inclosing copies of H. R. 3768, 3769, 3770, and 3771, I have the honor to inform you that salvarsan or its equivalent is now considered an indispensable remedy in the treatment of syphilis. Being produced by German manufacture under the protection of American patents, the existing conditions have caused great difficulty in obtaining the drug. A limited quantity is obtainable from the Farbwerke-Hoechst Co., who it is understood are the agency in this country, under the management of Mr. Metz, for the German producers. The Medical Department has been obliged to pay the agency $4.50 a dose for all supplies recently obtained as compared with $2.50 before the war.

The Dermatological Institute in Philadelphia can make this same material, which it designates arsenobenzol. Arsenobenzol is an entirely satisfactory substitute for salvarsan, and Dr. Schamberg, the director of the institute, informs me it could be sold for $1 a dose or less, were the patent laws not in question.

I should be very glad if it were possible to abrogate or suspend the patents upon salvarsan or if some other step could be taken that would enable us to purchase arsenobenzol in quantities needed in the Army.

Very truly, yours,

W. C. GORGAS, Surgeon General.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is the gentleman aware of the results of this Philadelphia preparation?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. To a degree.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Has it been as successful as the original salvarsan?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I think so.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is it not true that the doctors would not use it because they could not obtain the same results?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. On the contrary.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is it not true that a preparation has been made in Canada and that the doctors of this country have used it in the hospitals and that they say that it is not satisfactory?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I do not know it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The hospitals in New York have made a practical investigation of it——

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I am not fighting for Canada, but for America.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is it not true that the salvarsan people in New York are in a position to make it and put it on the market?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. They are not. I have a letter from them stating that they are not able to put it on the market.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have a letter saying that they can.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. They asked the Philadelphia people to manufacture it for them, and they have been promising the Government to supply its needs, but they are unable to do so.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The trouble is that they can not make the preparation in this country.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I can not yield further, as I have but a few minutes left.

If this bill is enacted the drug can be manufactured for $1 per ampul and within a year at a much lower cost. The medical profession is in need of 3,000 ampules per diem to treat the cases under their care. The statistics from a Government report issued by the authority of the Surgeon General show that 20 per cent of the adult made population of the United States, that 22.10 per cent of the inmates of the soldiers' homes, and that 21.65 per cent of the Army prisoners are infected, and further, "that the infection is a greater menace to the public health than any other infectious disease, not even excepting tuberculosis."

It is of great consequence to preserve the health of the men of our Army and Navy in order to procure the best of service, and it is quite as essential to guard the sanity of the public, from whom our soldiers must be conscripted in the future. Grave responsibilities have been forced upon our Government by the great nations of the Continent, and no man can foretell how they may affect our Constitution or change our present policies. We are therefore compelled to use every honorable means to terminate the war. The youth of America are fast developing into the highest type of soldiers, for in them we find intelligence and patriotism combined. The old Roman maxim is imprinted in their hearts, "Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori."

It is greater to be an American than ever it was to be a Roman. Rome rose to the zenith of her power by the might of the sword, America by the love of liberty. [Applause.] Liberty, love, and home are the three sweetest words in the English language, and by those words we will preserve the perpetuity of our Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I dislike to disturb the effect of that beautiful peroration, but as the gentleman is a prominent member of the Committee on Patents I desire to interrogate him before he yields the floor. I have a recollection that the gentleman introduced a bill covering the matter of the manufacture in the United States of salvarsan, a German patented product about which many physicians have been memorializing Congress. Do the provisions of this bill embody the points covered in the bill introduced in the House by the gentleman?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. My bill was simply to suspend the patent, without any provisions. This bill is broader and takes care of the German patentees.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The point was to obtain for the United States this German product, which we have been unable to get by reason of the German patent. The gentleman's bill proposed to cover that?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. My bill covers the point—in order to suspend the patent during the time of the war.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And what the gentleman had in his bill is incorporated in the present trading-with-the-enemy bill?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Yes. In order that the product may be obtained in this country, as the letter from the Surgeon General says it is greatly needed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In effect, then, we are making a short cut to the purposes intended by the gentleman when he introduced his bill?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I have not given as much attention to this bill as perhaps I should have given it if I had been here all of the time, but I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Under the terms of this bill a German-owned patent may be worked in the United States, as I understand it, on obtaining a license and upon the payment of 5 per cent of the gross receipts as royalties?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Yes. If the sales are $10,000, then the German patentee would get $500. If he is not satisfied with the $500, then he has the right to sue for the sum which he thinks he ought to have.

Mr. MANN. After the war he can commence suit?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. After the war is ended, within the year, he can commence suit.

Mr. MANN. If he can commence suit after the war is ended, how does the licensee know on what basis he can carry on the business?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. The person who obtains the license knows he must not only pay $100 for the license but must also pay 5 per cent.

Mr. MANN. He does not know how much more he will have to pay?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Under this bill the patentee may sue for a much greater sum than the 5 per cent if he feels that this amount is insufficient.

Mr. MANN. How is that going to get people to work the patent?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I do not know, except in cases such as I have just alluded to, where it is very important. The people will be willing to take a risk. In the case of ordinary patents I fancy they would not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a further question?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is there anything in the patent law which requires a foreign patentee to manufacture in the United States?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Not so far as I know.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that England requires of one to whom a patent is issued that manufacture shall ensue within the jurisdiction of England?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Yes; for instance, in the case of a war with Germany, or any war, if a foreigner obtains a patent in England, and the foreigner refuses to manufacture that patent, a subject of Great Britain has the right to manufacture it within a certain time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In other words, while Great Britain grants a patent, it controls it in any event?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And that is what we have failed to do in the United States?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Yes; our laws should be amended in order that we may exercise our control over patents issued to foreigners.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT].

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MCKEOWN). The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, necessarily in the consideration of this bill we have to do considerably with the question of international law. In fact, as far as we have already gone there has been considerable discussion in regard to that subject. Primarily it should be understood by the members of this committee that during a state of war the sovereign belligerent power has plenary powers. It has the absolute right of confiscation, if you please. It has the undoubted right of use. In other words, the sovereign belligerent power, as against the citizens of the other belligerent, has unlimited powers unless one thing is provided, and that one thing is if there be an existing treaty which operates against that international law.

Now, I know of no clearer explanation of the definite powers given to belligerents under international law than is expressed in the case of the Insurance Co. against Davis. In the starting and beginning of this argument it might be well to refresh our minds upon that subject. Now, what is it? I read:

> That war suspends all commercial intercourse between the citizens of two belligerent countries or States except so far as may be allowed by the sovereign authority, has been so often asserted and explained in this court within the last 15 years, that any further discussion of that proposition would be out of place. As a consequence of this fundamental proposition it must follow that no active business can be maintained, either personally or by correspondence, or through an agent, by the citizens of one belligerent with the citizens of the other. The only exception to the rule recognized in the books, if we lay out of view contracts for ransom and other matters of absolute necessity, is that of allowing the payment of debts to an agent of an alien enemy, where such agent resides in the same State with the debtor. But this indulgence is subject to restrictions. In the first place, it must not be done with the view of transmitting the funds to the principal during the continuance of the war; though, if so transmitted without the debtor's connivance, he will not be responsible for it. Washington, J., in Connecticut v. Pennsylvania (Pet. C. Ct., 496); Buchanan v. Curry (19 Johns (N. Y.), 141). In the next place, in order to the subsistance of the agency during the war, it must have the assent of the parties thereto—the principal and the agent. As war suspends all intercourse between them, preventing any instructions, supervision, or knowledge of what takes place, on the one part, and any report or application for advice on the other, this relation necessarily ceases on the breaking out of hostilities, even for the limited purpose before mentioned, unless continued by the mutual assent of the parties. It is not compulsory; nor can it be made so, on either side, to subserve the ends of third parties. If the agent continues to act as such, and his so acting is subsequently ratified by the principal, or if the principal's assent is evinced by any other circumstances, then third parties may safely pay money for the use of the principal into the agent's hands, but not otherwise. It is not enough that there was an agency prior to the war. It would be contrary to reason that a man, without his consent, should continue to be bound by the acts of one whose relations to him have undergone such a fundamental alteration as that produced by a war between the two countries to which they respectively belong; with whom he can have no correspondence, to whom he can communicate no instructions, and over whom he can exercise no control. It would be equally unreasonable that the agent should be compelled to continue in the service of one whom the law of nations declares to be his public enemy.

Now, I cite this case of Davis and the insurance company simply for the purpose of surely establishing, by this edict of the Supreme Court, what the relation of the parties who are belligerent to each other clearly are during the continuance of the war; in other words, to reaffirm what I stated in the beginning, that the sovereign power has the absolute right of confiscation if it seeks and determines to enforce it.

Now, the purposes of this bill, may it please the committee, are not for a strict enforcement of the provisions of international law, but they are really in amelioration thereof. They are a relaxing of the strict tenor and effect of international law.

I was rather surprised at my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] when he stated as an absolute fact, as a primary fact in international law, that the belligerent power and sovereign power of the Government had no right either to suspend or to take over the contracts of a citizen of a belligerent power, or of a citizen of a neutral country who was living in the belligerent country.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. DEWALT. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman should not attribute that statement to me.

Mr. DEWALT. That is what I understood the gentleman to say.

Mr. LENROOT. No; I made no such statement. What I said was that a belligerent had no right to sequester the property of a neutral with reference to the business of that neutral outside of the belligerent country.

Mr. DEWALT. That is a different proposition. I did not so understand the gentleman.

Now, the fact of the matter is this, that as to the power of the belligerent Government, and in our case as to the power of the United States, as fixed by international law, we have the determinate right of confiscation if we desire to use it in regard to every dollar's worth of property of any alien enemy wherever he has residence. But this bill does not go as far as that, and it is well for some of those who are vitally interested in the welfare of those who are not naturalized citizens of the United States, and who are really aliens to this territory, to consider primarily this important fact, that the enemy as described in this bill is not described in terms of nativity, if you please, or in terms of citizenshp, but he is described in terms of locality.

What do I mean by that? The enemy is a party who lives in enemy territory, or who lives in territory of the allies of the enemy, and it makes no difference whether that party be a citizen of the United States or whether he be a citizen of the alien country. In other words, to repeat what I have tried to make clear, the enemy description is a local description. It is not one of nativity, or of naturalization, or of citizenship. Therefore this bill primarily sets forth to do this, that it does not in any way affect anyone who is a resident of Germany, if you please, now living in the United States, nor does it affect in any way a party who is, if you please, a resident of Austria and who is now temporarily here, or who has been here for continued time. The same thing applies to citizens of Turkey and of Bulgaria, except in so far as the bill provides that if the emergency demands and the necessities of the case arise the President may by proclamation make those parties who are residents of this country and who are citizens of Germany, or Turkey, or Bulgaria, or Austria, subject to the provisions of this act.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. DEWALT. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman recalls the discussion about holders of Pennsylvania Railroad stock?

Mr. DEWALT. I do.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let us take another illustration which will get nearer to the plain people, that of holders of building association stock, with whom I assume the gentleman is familiar. Taking the gentleman's description of alien residents, does this bill mean that a German alien resident in the United States would be liable to have his stock in a building association seized?

Mr. DEWALT. No; it does not in any way affect the rights of any citizen of any enemy country who is a resident of this country, unless the President, by proclamation, determines that that party shall be thus affected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To put it plainly, so that a layman like myself may understand it, a resident of my city who is an alien——

Mr. DEWALT. Who is a German by birth and who never has been naturalized——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes—owns stock in a building association.

Mr. DEWALT. His rights will not be affected by this bill one iota.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But if a German alien resident in Germany, or in any other unneutral country——

Mr. DEWALT. Or in any country, the ally of Germany——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes—owns stock in a building association or railroad, that would be taken into custody.

Mr. DEWALT. And placed in the hands of the alien-property custodian, and the disposition thereof would await the determination of an act of Congress after the war.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So that an alien resident of the United States would not be affected in his property rights by this bill?

Mr. DEWALT. He would be absolutely unaffected, unless he misbehaved himself and the President of the United States by special proclamation made him subject to the provisions of this act.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Exactly. That makes it clear.

Mr. MANN. Does it require a special proclamation?

Mr. DEWALT. When I used the word "special" I meant special in regard to the subject, and not in regard to the individual.

Mr. MANN. It is not a matter of misbehaving. It is a matter of opinion of the President as to whether it is desirable to cut off all communication.

Mr. DEWALT. I should judge that is the primary idea; yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. DEWALT. Certainly. We are all here for information, and if I have it I will give it. If not, I will refer the gentleman to some one else.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and I am now addressing him as the spokesman of that committee. Does this bill have the approval of the President of the United States?

Mr. DEWALT. This bill, as I understand from the information I have received, not only from the chairman of the committee but from the membership of the committee, is the draft of the Department of Justice partially, the Patent Office partially, and the Department of Commerce as well, and has the approval, if you so choose to call it, of the administration.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. By whom was it indorsed before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Warren appeared. He is one of the assistant attorneys general. Mr. Redfield also appeared.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Warren, of the Department of Justice?

Mr. DEWALT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Redfield, of the Department of Commerce?

Mr. DEWALT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And Secretary Lansing?

Mr. DEWALT. I believe Secretary Lansing did not appear in reference to this bill.

Mr. SNOOK. Yes; Secretary Lansing, also.

Mr. DEWALT. Yes; he did appear in reference to this bill, as well as another one.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, it may be stated authoritatively that this is an administration measure.

Mr. DEWALT. That is possibly a definition which is subject to the ideas of the party who seeks to define. I would not call it an administration matter. I would call it a matter of general public interest which the administration desires for the public welfare.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is just this about that, if the gentleman pleases: Many Members of Congress on both sides of the political aisle are expected to stand by the President on these bills.

Mr. DEWALT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I assume it would help the passage of this bill very much if it were known that the President approved it.

Mr. DEWALT. No better proof of that could be obtained than the fact that his Secretary of Commerce, his Secretary of State, and a representative of his Attorney General all appeared in person and advocated the provisions of the bill. Of course, the bill as reported was changed somewhat from the bill as originally presented.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does this bill follow the English form?

Mr. DEWALT. It is not as drastic as the English form. It follows the English form, but it is not as severe.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It may be called an American bill, then? It originated in this country?

Mr. DEWALT. It did.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And it originated in the departments of this administration?

Mr. DEWALT. So far as I know, that is the fact; yes.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. Yes.

Mr. STEELE. Have your committee considered this bill in connection with any treaty obligation?

Mr. DEWALT. We have.

Mr. STEELE. Is there anything in the provisions of this bill that would violate the treaty with Prussia of 1828?

Mr. DEWALT. Nothing. I am glad the gentleman referred to it, although it is rather out of the line of my sequence of argument; but the provision which the gentleman refers to is this:

> If war should arise between the two contracting parties the merchants of either country then residing in the other shall be allowed to remain nine months to collect their debts and settle their affairs, and may depart freely, carrying off all their effects without molestation or hindrance.

Now, if the gentleman will observe, that article 23 of this treaty has reference to whom? "The merchants of either country then residing in the other." Bearing in mind that specific definitive mark as to the contracting parties, namely, that they shall be merchants then residing in one or the other of the countries, and knowing also that this bill does not in any way affect the alien whether he be merchant or otherwise who is residing in this country, and that the description of the enemy is a local description, and that the enemy must be resident in the territory which is hostile or a territory of the allies hostile to this country, then you will clearly see that this provision does not in any way affect merchants resident in this country.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. DEWALT. Certainly.

Mr. STEELE. In the discussion of this morning reference was made to some provision in this bill being confiscatory. The Hague Convention of 1907, to which the United States and Germany were both signatory parties, provided against the confiscation of private property in the event of war between any parties to the convention.

Mr. DEWALT. Yes.

Mr. STEELE. Are any of the provisions of this bill in violation of that convention?

Mr. DEWALT. Absolutely none, and I think it was in conformity with that idea that the proclamation of the President as early as last June was made reaffirming the doctrine that private property should not be confiscated and that the provisions of this bill were made as they are. If the gentleman has studied the bill, as I have no doubt he has, for I know his assiduity as a student and his carefulness as a lawyer, he will see clearly that instead of its being confiscatory in its nature it is in the nature of a requisition of property and a conservation of the property in the hands of the trustee, who is to hold it in escrow until the termination of the war, when this property is to be returned to the legal owner thereof subject to the equities existing between the parties.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to have some more time.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How much more time does the gentleman want?

Mr. DEWALT. How much time can the gentleman give me—15 minutes?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania 15 minutes more.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. As soon as I get through with the inquisitor on my right, I will yield to the gentleman on my left.

Mr. STEELE. Under the provisions of this bill, no property is forfeited to the public.

Mr. DEWALT. No property is forfeited.

Mr. STEELE. The holding of the property by the public agent is only for the benefit of the owner of the property?

Mr. DEWALT. Precisely so. Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The gentleman read an extract from what treaty convention?

Mr. DEWALT. Article 23 of the Prussian treaty of 1799. The gentleman will find it on page 644 of Senate Document, volume 37.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I am somewhat familiar with that. Does the gentleman contend that that treaty or any other treaty with Prussia is still in force?

Mr. DEWALT. I do not. I think they are all abrogated by the conduct of Germany. My position is very clear and emphatic on that.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Does the gentleman say that hostilities between nations abrogate treaties between the belligerents?

Mr. DEWALT. It does not necessarily. If the conduct of any belligerent at war with another party, with whom we are not at war, as against us, a neutral, having a treaty with one of the belligerents, is so outrageous as to make us declare the treaty abrogated, we should abrogate it at once.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. We have declared that they are abrogated and repudiated them.

Mr. DEWALT. Certainly.

Mr. ROSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I have only 10 minutes remaining and I have not time to yield. This power of the sovereign is so great that it oftentimes presents itself in the oddest of instances. Let me refer the committee to a very noted case, that of Mottley against the Nashville Railroad Co., and see how far the powers of Congress can go in reference to matters of this sort. It is found on page 480, volume 219, United States Reports, and I desire to state only the doctrine so as to enforce what I have already said in regard to the powers of the Government.

This is from the opinion of Justice Harlan:

> In the Addyston Pipe case, this court said that, under its power to regulate commerce, Congress "may enact such legislation as shall declare void and prohibit the performance of any contract between individuals or corporations where the natural and direct effect of such a contract will be, when carried out, to directly, and not as a mere incident to other and innocent purposes, regulate to any substantial extent interstate commerce."

Applying that in the same opinion, he said:

> As in a state of civil society, property of a citizen or subject is ownership, subject to the lawful demands of the sovereign, so contracts must be understood as made in reference to the possible exercise of the rightful authority of the Government, and no obligation of a contract can extend to the defeat of legitimate Government authority.

This case was rather peculiar, and I desire to cite it for this particular purpose. Mottley was a passenger on the Louisville & Nashville Railway. He met with an accident. In consideration for his settlement of the case, they gave him an annual pass. After he had enjoyed the privileges of this annual pass for a number of years Congress passed an act by which it declared that no railway company could, under any circumstances, accept anything except money or the equivalent thereof for transportation. In other words, they forbade the giving of passes. Mottley had settled his case, and in consideration or part consideration he had received a pass. He asked for his pass and they refused to grant him an extension of the same. He then brought mandamus proceedings in the Kentucky courts to enforce his rights. The Kentucky courts affirmed his rights and said that the railroad company must regrant the pass. The case was carried to the Supreme Court of the United States and, in this decision I have just read, Mr. Justice Harlan states this rule and lays it down flatly, that although the man was paid a consideration, namely, the settlement of his case with the railroad company, although he had enjoyed the rights of that pass for a number of years, yet when Congress passed an act declaring that he did not have the right to that pass, that the railroad company had no right to issue a pass, that was the end of the matter. And now I am coming to the point that the gentleman who has this bill in charge delegated me to speak upon, namely, What is the right of a patentee under the Government of the United States? Because if he has a vested right for 17 years to the exclusive enjoyment of that privilege, then he has a property right, and under the decision in this Louisville & Nashville case that property right is always subject to what? It is subject to the sovereign power of the United States Government which at any time, according to its necessities, may declare, first, that that right given to him, either exclusive or in part with others, can be declared void.

That being the law it follows as a matter of legal sequence that, as to patents issued by foreign countries enjoyed in this country or as to patents issued to residents of foreign countries by the United States, the sovereign power has the right to do what? It has the right to confiscate, if you please, that patent, it has the right to make sole use of that patent under this decision, and the right to declare that the foreign patentee who obtained his patent in the United States can no longer use the same in any regard and obtain no profits or emoluments therefrom; but this bill does not go so far as that. This bill says this: That where the patentee is a foreigner he shall have his rights suspended during the war unless he receives a license from the Government to go on with his patents. The bill goes further than that. The bill goes so far as to say that if the patentee be a foreigner and has obtained a patent in the United States, that then any citizen of the United States may apply to the United States Government and obtain from the Federal Trade Commission a license to operate under that patent; but in consideration of so operating the sublicensee, I shall call him, or the subpatentee, must do what? He must pay 5 per cent of what? First, 5 per cent of the gross receipts if that is demanded. If, however, that is not demanded, or if it is thought that that is not commensurate with the value of the patent, then he has to pay 5 per cent of the value use of that patent as determined by the Federal Trade Commission. This 5 per cent is to be paid to the Treasury of the United States and it is to remain there during the continuance of hostilities; and upon the declaration of peace ther what happens? Then the original patentee has the right to demand of the subpatentee that he be reimbursed, and he gets his reimbursement from this 5 per cent, or if not from the 5 per cent thus deposited, he gets his reimbursement from the 5 per cent of the gross value of the use of the patent. This I make as clear as I can in order to inform my friend, Mr. LAGUARDIA, in order that he may know perhaps more definitely the rights of the patentee and the licensee.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I thank the gentleman, but I do not agree with his law.

Mr. DEWALT. It may be that the gentleman does not agree with it, but after all it is conservation of the property. He has received a license from the United States, and that property should be used by the granting power if it becomes necessary during a state of war.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not agree with the analogy drawn by the gentleman from the Mottley case.

Mr. DEWALT. Reasoning by analogy is always dangerous, particularly when the other fellow does it.

Mr. MCKEOWN. Is it not a fact that Russia has already confiscated German patent rights?

Mr. DEWALT. Russia is the only belligerent country that has done that. The rest of the countries have still observed the amenities of the situation, and have not forfeited the patents. This is not a new theory as to patent rights, and it is not a new theory as to confiscation, as some have it, of property. We call it a requisition of property, a conservation of property. During the Civil War this same thing was done in regard to property, and by reading the report of Gov. MONTAGUE, or rather the testimony in regard to this matter when pending before the committee, the gentlemen of this committee will find a long list of cases, all of which reaffirm and clearly establish the right of the Government even if confiscation is necessary or the granting of licenses for the permission of doing business. Now, I have as clearly as I possibly could explained what I believe to be the vital and pivotal points in regard to this matter of licensing under the rights of the original patentee. However, there is one thing that should be remembered as well. After the subpatentee, as I call him, gets a privilege from the Government, the Government does not give him by this act an unrestricted privilege, but still holds a check upon the valuable right which it has given to the original patentee, and gives to this subpatent or license a right under the original patent, for how long? "We will give it to you for such time as we deem proper, and, more, we will give it to you for such time as you obey the regulations which we enforce from time to time"; and to make it liberal, so that no man will lose by going into the venture, they say this: "If in the meantime you invest large sums of money for the establishment of plants or other means of production, then you shall be granted a license to operate under this patent during the lifetime of the patent, or so long as we find that it is necessary to remunerate you and to recompense you the outlay you have made."

Now, the value of this matter is very clear. There are millions and millions of dollars' worth of remuneration annually coming from the use of these patents that are held by foreign patentees. Resuming the argument, then, gentlemen, this is a privilege given by a sovereign power, given for a period of 17 years, and if that sovereign power has the right to revoke and annul that privilege at any time, it may do that according to the necessities of the Government in a state of war; then it follows, as a matter of clear reasoning, that if it has the power to annul it has also the power to restrict, and if it has the power to restrict, then it has the power to grant a sublicense, and if it has the power to grant a sublicense it has the right to define the terms upon which those sublicenses shall be granted; and then the United States Government steps in and says, "We grant this license, this subpatent, to a citizen of the United States." And then he must do what? He must pay a license fee of $100 as provided by the act, and must also pay the sum of 5 per cent, as above stated, of the gross receipts for the use of the patent, or 5 per cent of the value of the use of the patent as determined by the Federal Trade Commission. At the end of the war the alien who has a patent right originally from the Government is recouped, and how does he get it? He gets it from the United States Government, which is holding in escrow this 5 per cent from the gross receipts, or 5 per cent of the value of the patent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my remarks in regard to the pending bill may be revised; not extended, but revised.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to revise his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE].

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I rise this time for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by having published a short patriotic poem written by Mr. J. M. Burriss, of Leavenworth, Kans., who is secretary to the Hon. D. R. ANTHONY.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The poem is as follows:

O STARRY BANNER!

[By J. M. Burriss.]

O Starry Banner! Above the clamor
And clash of men with the army of might,
We hail thy beauty, O flag of duty,
O wondrous emblem of power for right!
Oh, may thy stars hold and may thy bars fold
The golden truth that thy mission's designed
To have thy story of peace and glory
Enshrined in all of the hearts of mankind!

CHORUS.

So wave, wave, wave, Starry Banner, liberty proclaiming;
Shield America from foes unknown!
But flash, flash, flash when the battle o'er the field is raging
Till the enemy is overthrown!

To thy defender, O flag of splendor—
O boy in blue, how our hearts you thrill!
Resolve unaltered, you have not faltered
From Saratoga to San Juan Hill.
And where Old Glory has led before thee
The nations know that a wrong was made right;
That Yankee manhood has ever firm stood;
That Dixie Land never ran from a fight.

O native land, dear, the bugle call hear;
Salute the flag and the boy in blue!
On field of battle, through muskets' rattle,
Just think what blessings they've wrought for you!
Whate'er thy station or thy vocation,
O son of freedom, be loyal, be true!
Let thy devotion, deep as the ocean,
Exalt the banner of red, white, and blue!

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER].

NATIONAL HOSPITAL-SCHOOL FOR CRIPPLES.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and correct my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts can take his seat——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I have not objected. I simply desired to ask the gentleman if this is the same matter——

Mr. MEEKER. It is.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I shall insert as a part of my remarks a copy of a letter sent to the Council of National Defense, the articles of agreement and incorporation, and some other items in regard to the organization of the National Hospital-School for Cripples. This organization, which is to be national in its scope, has been brought into existence by a body of St. Louis women for the purpose as stated of teaching the crippled and wounded soldiers who will return from the battle fields of Europe, who, because of incapacities which they suffer, will be no longer able to follow their old trades and vocations. It is the purpose of this organization, which has already come to be known as the White Cross, to provide for such instruction as is now being done by the people of England at a tremendous cost, something like over £7,000,000 having been already subscribed for this work. It is furthermore the purpose of this organization to take off of the hands of the Government the board and care of soldiers and sailors who are wounded in the European conflict, to take from the shoulders of the Government the care of those men and do it so far as possible by teaching them some new trade whereby they may become self-supporting.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. MEEKER. I will.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman state what is the difference between the scope of this organization in reference to these matters and the Red Cross?

Mr. MEEKER. The work of the Red Cross is primarily the relief work in the field, to look after the wounded and after the families of the wounded and those killed, while the purpose of this organization is that of the education in some new line of activity of those who are incapacitated to follow their old vocation. It is a hospital-school for cripples.

Now, Mr. Chairman, without taking any more of the time of the committee, I ask that I may extend my remarks by inserting there the articles of incorporation to which I have referred.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting the articles referred to. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, in further extension of my remarks, I submit herewith the letterhead of the National Hospital-School for Cripples, which letterhead gives the names of the officers of the members of the board of directors and members of the medical staff. I follow this with a few extracts from a letter of Mrs. J. G. Nugent, the president:

ST. LOUIS, MO., June 25, 1917.

Hon. JACOB E. MEEKER,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Attached hereto please find copy of a communication and data addressed to the Council of National Defense, which is self-explanatory.

As a Representative in Congress of the State of Missouri, will you not be good enough to give this some of your personal attention?

For instance, first, to add to an already chartered, recognized, and growing movement the valuable moral aid and support of our Government, and at the same time relieve the Government of what will eventually become an enormous financial burden.

This organization has already perfected every detail of executive effort and is ready and able to carry its cause before the entire Nation. It has even gone so far as to perfect an organization of eminent physicians, who have worked out the details of training and management.

Respectfully, yours,

NATIONAL HOSPITAL-SCHOOL FOR CRIPPLES,
Mrs. J. G. NUGENT, President.

I submit here a copy of the letter addressed to the Council of National Defense on June 25, and attach thereto such other data as will be of service to those interested in aiding in the splendid enterprise of mercy undertaken by these noble and self-sacrificing women and their assistants:

ST. LOUIS, MO., June 25, 1917.

COUNCIL OF NATIONAL DEFENSE,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: A news report in this morning's St. Louis Globe-Democrat advises that a number of physicians have made a report to the medical board of your body with reference to the education and training of maimed and crippled soldiers and sailors.

Inclosed is a copy of the constitution of the National Hospital-School for Cripples, which is self-explanatory.

This organization was incorporated by the State of Missouri as a benevolent corporation on June 2, 1917. Since that time and while the general plans were being worked out its membership in the city of St. Louis alone has grown to nearly 5,000, without any intensive effort. Within the next two weeks the St. Louis membership will have totaled more than 25,000. A definite working organization has been evolved. It is now ready to forge ahead. It has already been established and proven that the idea, which is known as the White Cross, finds a ready response in the hearts of our people. Within the next 90 days the White Cross idea will have spread throughout the entire United States and its membership will have reached the million mark.

An organization has been perfected. The advisory board in St. Louis is composed of 150 of the most prominent citizens—male and female. Among others are the governor of the State and the postmaster of the city of St. Louis, and others as influential though perhaps less prominent.

The idea has received the enthusiastic indorsement of the Associated Advertising Club of the World, the United Spanish War Veterans of Missouri, the Egyptian Hustlers (an organization of the traveling salesmen of the States of Illinois, Indiana, and Kentucky), and many minor organizations. All of these have not only pledged themselves to membership but have agreed to put forth their individual efforts when called upon.

Inclosed you will find clippings from the various papers showing the impetus that has already been given to the movement. The idea has sprung from the existence of a similar organization in England and to which the English public has subscribed the sum of £7,000,000. The inceptors of this movement felt it to be a subject for private charity, and that inasmuch as the Governments of other lands had left the matter to the initiative and generosity of their citizens, such should be done in the United States.

If, in accordance with the above-mentioned newspaper item, it is the council's intention to take up the matter in addition to its other arduous duties, the National Hospital-School for Cripples desires the cooperation of the council, or should the matter be considered a proper subject of direct governmental action, then it desires to cooperate with and aid the movement whenever and wherever possible.

It should be noted that the idea of the White Cross is feasible as a private charity, since the Red Cross, an organization operating on identical lines, has just raised a sum of money in excess of $100,000,000, thereby relieving the Government and administration of all expenses and responsibility.

Inasmuch as the National Hospital-School for Cripples is at present directing most of its work to prepare for the care and retraining of the crippled soldiers and sailors, it would appreciate an immediate and direct advice as to what action is to be taken by the Council for Defense, to the end that should the Government take up the work the energy and finance of the National Hospital-School for Cripples can be devoted to its more permanent end—the care and education and training of the crippled child, whose numbers in the United States count up to approximately 300,000.

Very truly, yours,

NATIONAL HOSPITAL-SCHOOL FOR CRIPPLES,
MRS. J. G. NUGENT, President.

STATE OF MISSOURI,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

To all to whom these presents shall come:

I, John L. Sullivan, secretary of state of the State of Missouri and keeper of the great seal thereof, hereby certify that the annexed pages contain a full and true and complete copy of articles of incorporation of the National Hospital-School for Cripples, filed June 2, 1917, as the same appears on file in this office.

In testimony whereof I hereunto set my hand and affix the great seal of the State of Missouri. Done at the city of Jefferson this 4th day of June, A. D. 1917.

[SEAL.]

JOHN L. SULLIVAN, Secretary of State.
L. J. POWERS, Chief Clerk.

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT OF NATIONAL HOSPITAL-SCHOOL FOR CRIPPLES.

Know all men by these presents, that the undersigned, residents of the State of Missouri, desiring to establish hospital-schools for cripples for educational purposes, as in these articles set forth, do hereby associate themselves together and form an association to be incorporated under and pursuant to the provisions of article 10 of chapter 33 of the revised statutes of Missouri, 1909, and acts amendatory thereof, and do hereby adopt for the said corporation the following:

CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1. Name: The name of the corporation shall be "National Hospital-School for Cripples."

ART. 2. Location: The location of this corporation shall be at the city of St. Louis and State of Missouri.

ART. 3. Objects: The objects and purposes of this corporation shall be—

First. For the purpose of reducing mendicancy, vagrancy, and pauperism; to promote the educational, moral, mental, spiritual, and physical betterment of all crippled children of mental power and of all persons who may be now or hereafter become crippled or disabled on account of having participated in any lawful war to which these United States shall be or become a party.

Second. To promote social service among crippled children and crippled soldiers, as above.

Third. To promote the employment of crippled children and crippled soldiers, as above, under the name of the National Hospital-School for Cripples.

Fourth. To initiate, promote, and aid in the passage of such legislation—municipal, State, or National—as will further the educational facilities and opportunities of crippled children and crippled soldiers, as above, and concerning any other matter conducive to the needs, objects, and purposes of this corporation.

Fifth. To own, operate, erect, or maintain, or assist in the erection, maintenance, and operation of schools, industrial colleges, universities, and hospitals, wholly or in part, especially constructed, equipped, and fitted for the training, education, and medical and surgical treatment of crippled children and crippled soldiers, as above, in which shall be taught such trades, occupations, or professions as in the discretion of this corporation may be suitable and practicable to the physical and mental needs of the individual requirement.

Sixth. To solicit, receive, hold, manage, and dispose of all money and property—real, personal, or mixed—which may from time to time be given, loaned, conveyed, devised, bequeathed, or endowed in any manner to the said corporation for the objects and purposes aforesaid, and to sell, pledge, transfer, and mortgage the same. And the said corporation shall have the power to recognize or cause to be recognized, affiliate, or cooperate with such auxiliary persons, societies, associations, or corporations as in its judgment may be useful to promote or further any or all of the objects and purposes of this corporation.

Seventh. To provide or aid in providing the necessary medical or surgical treatment for any crippled child or crippled soldier, as above, in whose welfare this corporation is concerned.

Eighth. This corporation shall be forever exclusively charitable, nonsectarian, and nonpartisan, and shall be operated solely through humanitarian motives and for the purposes heretofore set forth, and, as it is not formed for pecuniary profit, all money and property and income and the increase thereof, if any, shall be held by the corporation upon express trust to apply and use the same for the purposes aforesaid.

ART. 4. The membership of this corporation shall consist of the signers hereof and such other persons as may be hereafter admitted as members of this corporation under and in pursuance of the by-laws of this corporation.

ART. 5. The first officers of this corporation shall be: President, Mrs. James G. Nugent; secretary, Dr. Julius Rotteck; and treasurer, Mrs. Colin N. Selph.

ART. 6. In the event that it should become necessary in the judgment of the membership of this corporation to dissolve this corporation and abandon the objects for which it has been formed, then and in that event all of the assets, both real and personal, of this corporation shall be sold and the proceeds thereof applied in payment of the debts of this corporation, and the remainder, if any, shall be given to the Red Cross Society, in part or all, or to any other association or society that this corporation may choose: Provided, That in the absence of any other choice the Red Cross Society shall receive same.

ART. 7. First meeting: The first meeting of this corporation for the adoption of by-laws and for the transaction of such other businesses as may properly come before it shall be held at the city of St. Louis, Mo., at 10 o'clock a. m., on the 14th day of June, 1917. No further notice need be given of such meeting. Other meetings of this corporation shall be held as provided by the by-laws.

ART. 8. This constitution may be amended by a two-thirds vote of the membership present at any annual meeting or any special meeting called for that purpose: Provided, That notice of the proposed amendment or amendments shall be given as provided in the by-laws.

In witness whereof we, the undersigned named persons forming this corporation, have hereunto set our hands and seals this 17th day of May, 1917.

MRS. COLIN N. SELPH.
MRS. A. E. MORGAN.
A. D. TIBBALS.
MRS. W. H. HUDSON.
DR. ALEXANDER E. HORWITZ.
DR. JULIUS ROTTECK.
MRS. J. G. NUGENT.

Filed May 18, 1917.

NAT GOLDSTEIN, Clerk.

[In the circuit court, city of St. Louis, State of Missouri. In the matter of the National Hospital-School for Cripples. 2602. April term. Monday, May 28, 1917.]

And now on this day comes Mrs. J. G. Nugent, as president; Dr. Julius Rotteck, as secretary; and Mrs. Colin N. Selph, as treasurer, of the National Hospital School for Cripples, and submit to the court the articles of agreement of said association, together with a petition praying for a pro forma decree thereon, in manner provided by law, and it appearing to the court that said petition has remained on file in the clerk's office of this court for at least three days since the same was first presented to the court, and the court having duly examined said articles of agreement and being duly advised in the premises, do now consider, adjudge, and determine that such articles of agreement and the purposes of the association as therein expressed come properly within the purview of article 10 of chapter 33 of the Revised Statutes of the State of Missouri, 1909, entitled "Benevolent, religious, scientific, educational, and miscellaneous associations," and are not inconsistent with the Constitution or laws of the United States or of the State of Missouri.

STATE OF MISSOURI,
City of St. Louis, ss:

I, Nat Goldstein, clerk of the circuit court of the city and State aforesaid, certify the above to be a true copy of the order made in the matter aforesaid, as fully as the same remains of record in my office.

In witness whereof I hereunto set my hand and affix the seal of said court at the office in the city of St. Louis, this 29th day of May, A. D. 1917.

[SEAL.]

NAT GOLDSTEIN, Clerk Circuit Court.

Filed for record, Corporation Book 60, page 51, May 30, 1917, 3.25 p. m.

CHAS. F. JOY, Recorder.

STATE OF MISSOURI,
City of St. Louis, ss:

I, the undersigned recorder of deeds for said city and State do hereby certify that the foregoing instrument of writing was filed for record in my office on the 29th day of May, A. D. 1917, at 3.25 o'clock p. m., and is truly recorded in Corporation Book 60, page 51.

Witness my hand and official seal on the day and year aforesaid.

[SEAL.]

CHAS. F. JOY, Recorder.

Filed and copy issued June 2, 1917.

JOHN L. SULLIVAN, Secretary of State.

[Extract from St. Louis Republic.]

WHITE CROSS FOUNDED IN ST. LOUIS—ORGANIZATION OF NEW RELIEF BODY APPROVED BY AD CONVENTION—CARE FOR MAIMED SOLDIERS—ORGANIZATION EXPECTED TO SPREAD ALL OVER THE UNITED STATES.

A St. Louis movement, which is expected to become national in scope, to take care of the soldiers maimed and crippled in the war, yesterday was indorsed at the convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World. It is planned to call it the "White Cross."

The National Hospital-School for Cripples was organized by a score of St. Louis women several weeks ago and was granted a charter by the State on June 2.

The organization, which has gained more than 1,000 members in a remarkably short time, has the following officers: President, Mrs. J. G. Nugent; treasurer, Mrs. Colin M. Selph; chairman, Mrs. A. E. Morgan; secretary, Mrs. Charles H. McDaris; corresponding secretary, Mrs. F. H. Littlefield; vice presidents, Mrs. W. H. Hudson, Mrs. John C. Roberts, and Mrs. E. P. Melson. Gov. Fred D. Gardner and Postmaster Selph are members of the advisory board.

The plan of the organization is to retrain and reeducate all of the soldiers who return from the war crippled. The association also has pledged itself to educate all crippled children of sound mind who are not taken care of through the present educational system of the schools.

The present medical staff of the hospital are Dr. Alexander E. Horwitz, Dr. Julius Rotteck, Dr. Cleveland H. Shutt, Dr. I. Lee Kelly, jr., Dr. Max W. Jacobs, and Dr. J. J. Houwink.

A campaign to get a membership of 25,000 and to raise funds to establish a permanent hospital will be started in a few weeks, following the drive of the Red Cross.

[Extract from St. Louis Star.]

"WHITE CROSS" FOR CRIPPLED TROOPS IS ORGANIZED HERE—PLAN FOR NATION-WIDE AFTER-CARE SYSTEM IS INDORSED BY "AD" MEN.

The National Hospital-School for Cripples, an organization perfected in St. Louis in the last two months, has grown to such proportions and aroused such interest that it is planned to make it nation-wide. It is planned by the advisory board to adopt the name of "White Cross."

The movement yesterday was indorsed by the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World at the closing session of the convention. Festus J. Wade recommended it in a letter, and it also had the backing and indorsement of Gov. Gardner and prominent business men.

The idea of forming an organization to care for crippled American soldiers who will return from France was conceived by Mrs. A. E. Morgan, 1338 Euclid Avenue, last January. Friends became interested.

"It is our plan," said Mrs. J. G. Nugent, president of the organization, "to make every cripple self-sustaining and to give every man his chance. Some of the greatest works of history and some of the best results obtained in any field have been due to the inspirations of those who were crippled in body.

"We hope to be in a position, by the time our crippled boys will be returning to us, to take them in hand, train and reeducate them, so that they will not be a burden on the State, but will be able to aid in the world's work."

The organization will not only care for the cripples returning from the war, but also will take the children and dependents of those called to the front who are not provided for by the State and train them so they may obtain self-sustaining work.

At the close of Red Cross week next Friday a campaign for new members and for funds to spread the movement will be initiated. Buttons bearing the emblem of the Liberty Bell, under which will be the initials C. S. F.—Crippled Soldiers' Fund—will be sold at prices ranging from $1 to $100. As soon as the local organization is established representatives will be sent to near-by cities and the work continued.

The work is not identified with that of the Red Cross or like organizations. The officers say no similar movement has been attempted before. It is hoped that the "White Cross" can be so firmly established that it will endure not only during the present war but also far into the future. It is nonsectarian.

At a recent meeting of the advisory board a committee consisting of Dr. A. E. Horwitz and Dr. Julius Rotteck was appointed to select a site for a permanent home.

At an informal meeting of members of the advisory board to-day plans were discussed for waging the campaign for funds when Red Cross week closes.

The officers are: President, Mrs. J. G. Nugent; vice presidents, Mrs. W. H. Hudson, Mrs. John C. Roberts, Mrs. E. P. Melson, and Mrs. E. C. Van Nort; secretary, Mrs. Charles H. McDaris; chairman, Mrs. A. E. Morgan; corresponding secretary, Mrs. F. H. Littlefield; treasurer, Mrs. Colin M. Selph.

—

[Extract from Post Dispatch.]

HUSTLERS JOIN WHITE CROSS—CONVENTION DELEGATES PLEDGED TO OBTAIN MEMBERS.

The Egyptian Hustlers on the final day of their convention at Highland, Ill., yesterday joined the Order of the White Cross in a body. Each delegate was pledged to sponsor membership campaigns in his trade territory. It was announced that the four local camps of Spanish-American War Veterans would engage in competitive campaigns for new members for the organization.

The White Cross, an organization for aiding disabled soldiers, has already an enrollment of 1,000 in St. Louis, although it was established June 2. A campaign to increase the number to 25,000 will be started July 4.

—

[From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, June 9, 1917.]

THE WHITE CROSS.

One of the last acts of the 1917 convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World was the formal indorsement of the work and aims of the new organization to be called "The White Cross." From such action taken by such a body should arise many influences to encourage and aid the St. Louis originators of this movement in their plan to make "The White Cross" an organization of national scope and activities.

The White Cross was first raised in this city, or had its inception here, when, some weeks ago, the National Hospital School for Cripples was instituted here through the encouragement and active efforts of a number of leading St. Louis women. Since then the membership of the organization has increased to more than 1,000. The plan of the organization is to train and educate all of the American soldiers returning from the war crippled or maimed along those lines best fitting their diminished capabilities and promising the best opportunities of affording them employments which will at once relieve the monotony of their lives and contribute to their self-support. The scope of the plan, as it will touch St. Louis, includes also the education of crippled children of sound mind for whom no provision is made under existing systems of education.

The wish to make the White Cross a national organization is one which ought to be easy of realization. If we enter the war in an active way and with a large army of men, as now seems probable, the return home of many crippled and unable to maintain themselves is certain. Their number will be greater than the number of those who will return not at all. A generous government will pension all of them, but to young men, a reliance upon a pension as the only means of livelihood, and who still feel in themselves the ability to do something for themselves, as they once did, must be abhorrent. The debt the country will owe such men can not be discharged in the quarterly payment of pensions. The White Cross organization, acting as the agent of all who are willing to help such men back to the independent standing which once was theirs, can do a great and necessary work. A campaign for a membership of 25,000 will soon be started. Enlist under the White Cross when you find it raised. (Reprinted from St. Louis Globe-Democrat, June 9, 1917.)

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SNOOK].

Mr. SNOOK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SNOOK. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, Congress has now been in session a little over three months, and almost all of that time has been devoted to subjects directly connected with the war.

It has been criticized by the public and the press for not acting more promptly, and it has often been asserted in the newspapers that it has wasted time.

As the question now under discussion is one of the last war measures it will have to pass upon at this session, in order to determine whether or not this criticism is well founded, it may not be out of place to briefly review its work and call attention to some of the more important measures acted upon.

At this session, which convened April 2, in addition to the routine work the House has passed the following measures, many of which have been concurred in by the Senate:

The resolution declaring that a state of war existed between the United States and the Imperial German Government. No more far-reaching and important step was ever taken by an American Congress.

The bill authorizing the Government to issue bond to the amount of $5,000,000,000 and Treasury certificates in the sum of $2,000,000,000, to sustain its credit and provide funds for carrying on the war.

The law to increase the military force and to provide for the raising of an Army to carry on the war in which we are engaged, and under which 9,500,000 men have already registered. This same act also authorizes the raising of the National Guard and the Regular Army through volunteers to full war strength, which when complied with will furnish an Army of about 1,000,000 men in these two branches of the service.

The law increasing the enlisted men of the Navy to 150,000 and the Marine Corps to 30,000, which, with the officers, the Naval Militia, and apprentice seamen, will afford this branch of the service about 200,000 men.

The Regular Army appropriation bill, carrying $281,176,000, which failed to pass the Senate at the last session of the Sixty-fourth Congress.

The bill to supply deficiencies in the Regular Army and Navy appropriation bills, which as it passed the Senate carried $3,342,404,000.

The bill to raise revenue for the support of the Government, which has not yet passed the Senate, but which as it passed the House provided for the levying of taxes in the sum of $1,800,000,000.

The espionage bill, conferring power on the Government to protect itself against enemies who may be within its own border.

The bill to promote export trade, which permits exporters to maintain joint agencies to further the sale of American goods in foreign countries.

The two important bills reported by the Committee on Agriculture, the one to conserve the food supply and to provide for a survey of food products, and the other to conserve and control the supply of feed, food, and fuel, known as the food-control bill.

The act to regulate and control the railroads in respect to car service.

The bill amending the interstate-commerce law and increasing the number of Interstate Commerce Commissioners.

The bill amending the act providing for a War-Risk Insurance Bureau, so as to provide for adequate insurance of our vessels engaged in foreign trade, together with their cargoes, and compensation for the sailors and workmen thereon in the event of injury, and to their dependents in case of death or capture by an enemy.

These are the most important bills only and do not include those of less importance.

In many instances the subjects dealt with have been new, and there have been very few, if any, precedents by which to be guided. Therefore much more than the usual time was required for the preparation and consideration of these laws.

The amounts to be raised by taxation and the sums appropriated to meet the expenses entailed by the war have been far in excess of that ever considered by any legislative body.

The questions presented for solution were as difficult to solve as have ever been presented to Congress. It may be that we deserve criticism for not acting more speedily, but, speaking for myself, I must confess that the time given for the consideration of these measures has been none too long.

While I have devoted my whole time and attention to these questions, I am quite sure that the subjects under consideration were so important and complex, the objects sought to be attained of such great importance to the country, that I have been unable in the short time allotted to give these matters the investigation and study that they deserved.

I feel that we have made some mistakes, yet if one will examine the question in an impartial manner he will be bound to conclude that Congress has not wasted its time or been negligent in the manner that it has met and performed the duties presented to it.

I am not unmindful that there have been times in the history of our country when Congress has had the duty of meeting and solving questions which involve the very existence of the Government itself.

Every time that it has stood face to face with such a crisis it has fulfilled the hopes and expectations of the people. When the war in which we are now engaged has been fought and won and its history has been written, I have faith to believe that it will be recorded that the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress fulfilled its duty in a spirit of patriotism as lofty as that displayed by any of its predecessors.

In closing what I have to say upon this subject, let me read part of an editorial from the Evening Star of July 2:

Congress has been sitting three months, and has not wasted a day. On the contrary, it has been complimented for the progress made. As experienced a parliamentary "hand" as Mr. Balfour, who had been interested in the record, spoke publicly while on his visit of how much important legislation had been accomplished in a very short period.

The chatter heard in some quarters that Congress is in the way and retarding operations is unworthy of serious attention. It proceeds in the main from those who amuse themselves and disgust thoughtful men with occasional suggestions that the country would profit if Congress met only once in 10 years and then for a session of a few months.

Congress is in session; its work should not be hurried or shirked and can not be delegated; war is on by the decree of Congress; and hence it is the duty of Congress to "stand by"

"While the waves of trouble roll,
While the tempest still is high."

The title of the bill now under consideration is "To define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes." This advises us that it is a war measure.

A study of the act shows that it deals with questions and situations growing out of the war in which we are now engaged; in fact, the hearings show clearly that it was a study of questions connected with and growing out of the war as presented to the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Attorney General in the daily conduct of their official duties which suggested the preparation of this measure and a determination by these officials to bring the matter before Congress.

In speaking of the bill as originally presented to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Secretary Redfield says a committee was appointed, representing four departments—the State Department, the Department of Justice, the Treasury Department, and the Department of Commerce—to consider what we should do in this particular matter. That committee gave this subject very, very thoughtful study. The committee was composed of Assistant Attorney General Charles Warren, the Comptroller of the Currency, Mr. Woolsey, the Solicitor nominate of the Department of State, and Dr. Pratt, the Chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce. They went over the matter for weeks with very great care. They submitted their draft of a bill to the Secretary of State, the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Treasury, and myself. We made a number of comments upon it, and it was returned to them. It was then again studied with great care, and this is the result of their unanimous report, which was, in substance, conveyed to you.

The language of Secretary Redfield in this respect will answer the question, to some extent, that was asked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] as to whether this bill has the indorsement of the committee or not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNOOK. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is also a prominent member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and I would like to have an expression from him as to whether he regards this as an administration measure, one that the President deems necessary for the proper prosecution of the war?

Mr. SNOOK. I can not answer the gentleman in any other way than by the answer of my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT] and by the statement I have just read from the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Secretary Redfield, having originated the movement, conferred with his colleagues in the Cabinet, and some of them appeared before the committee. But what I am interested in knowing, and what some of my colleagues are interested in knowing, is whether the President is interested in this?

Mr. SNOOK. Doubtless he is.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So it may be regarded as an administration measure?

Mr. SNOOK. I can not say as to that. The gentleman can put it that way if he likes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman pleases, it is a serious question. The people are asked to support the President in the prosecution of this war.

Mr. SNOOK. I understand the gentleman's position.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And it may be that a great deal of the legislation that we are passing is not what the President wants and feels is necessary for the prosecution of the war.

Mr. SNOOK. I have no doubt he feels that this is necessary.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wanted to get the gentleman's view. That is his opinion.

Mr. SNOOK. The courts of all the civilized countries hold it to be the law that war suspends all commercial intercourse between the citizens of two belligerent countries or States, except so far as may be allowed by sovereign authority.

In time of war, therefore, some such law as the one under consideration becomes a necessity. The rule of law to which I have referred is announced by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of United States v. Lane (8 Wall., p. 195) in the following language:

At the time this contract purports to have been made this country was engaged in war with a formidable enemy, and by a universally recognized principle of public law commercial intercourse between States at war with each other is interdicted. It needs no special declaration on the part of the sovereign to accomplish this result, for it follows from the very nature of war that trading between belligerents should cease. If commercial intercourse were allowable it would sometimes be used as a color for intercourse of an entirely different character, and in such case the mischievous consequences that would ensue can be readily foreseen. But the rigidity of this rule can be relaxed by the sovereign, and the laws of war so far suspended as to permit trade with the enemy. Each State settles for itself its own policy and determines whether its true interests are better promoted by granting or withholding licenses to trade with the enemy.

There seems to be but one exception to this rule; this exception is explained by the Supreme Court in the case of Insurance Co. against Davis, in Ninety-fifth United States, page 425, where that court announces the rule laid down in the Lane case and then explains the exception in the following language:

The only exception to the rule recognized in the books, if we lay out of view contracts for ransom and other matters of absolute necessity, is that of allowing the payment of debts to an agent of an alien enemy where such agent resides in the same State with the debtor. But this indulgence is subject to restrictions. In the first place, it must not be done with the view of transmitting the funds to the principal during the continuance of the war, though, if so transmitted without the debtor's connivance, he will not be responsible for it. (Washington, J., in Conn. v. Penn, Pet. C. Ct., 496; Buchanan v. Curry, 19 Johns. (N. Y.), 141.) In the next place, in order to the subsistence of the agency during the war, it must have the assent of the parties thereto—the principal and the agent. As war suspends all intercourse between them, preventing any instructions, supervision, or knowledge of what takes place on the one part and any report or application for advice on the other, this relation necessarily ceases on the breaking out of hostilities, even for the limited purpose before mentioned, unless continued by the mutual assent of the parties. It is not compulsory, nor can it be made so on either side to subserve the ends of third parties. If the agent continues to act as such, and his so acting is subsequently ratified by the principal, or if the principal's assent is evinced by any other circumstances, then third parties may safely pay money for the use of the principal into the agent's hands, but not otherwise. It is not enough that there was an agency prior to the war. It would be contrary to reason that a man, without his consent, should continue to be bound by the acts of one whose relations to him have undergone such a fundamental alteration as that produced by a war between the two countries to which they respectively belong, with whom he can have no correspondence, to whom he can communicate no instructions, and over whom he can exercise no control. It would be equally unreasonable that the agent should be compelled to continue in the service of one whom the law of nations declares to be his public enemy.

Before analyzing the provisions of the bill I might say that this exception is recognized, and situations growing out of facts such as are discussed in this exception are provided for in the proviso found on the bottom of page 9 and top of page 10 of the bill.

Inasmuch as under the law as stated in the cases from which I have quoted practically no commercial intercourse can be carried on between two citizens of belligerent countries or States except so far as allowed by the sovereign authority, it follows that it becomes necessary to have some exercise of that authority. This is attempted to be done by this bill, as it attempts to define what things a law-abiding citizen may do and what he may not do in regard to his commercial intercourse with an enemy, and what disposition he may make of the property of an enemy that may come into his hands or under his control.

Exercising the sovereign authority to make clear just what a citizen may do, what he may not do, and what he should do the bill defines certain terms and lays down certain rules which I shall undertake to analyze as briefly as possible.

Section 2 defines the words "enemy and ally of enemy"; these being the persons or classes of persons with whom trade is forbidden except as provided in the law. An enemy is any person resident of the nation with which we are at war or resident outside of the United States and doing business within such nation with which we are at war.

This provision is the one which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] criticized, and I am inclined to think that in connection with section 7, subdivision (b), there is something to his criticism. I want to be fair and frank. Because the bill comes from the committee of which I am a member I do not feel that I am certain that it is not open to honest amendment in the House. And I wish to say, in connection with this subdivision (b), of section 7, there is something to the criticism which the gentleman made in this regard, and I think that can be remedied by an amendment which will be offered probably before the bill comes to passage.

Any corporation formed within a nation with which we are at war or formed within any country other than the United States and doing business within such nation.

The Government of any nation with which we are at war or any of its divisions, agents, or agencies.

It is plain to be seen that this is an essential provision, because the Government with which we are at war or any of its agencies or divisions would certainly come within the term "enemy" as described in this or any other measure along this line.

Such other persons as may be natives or are subjects of any nation with which we are at war wherever resident or doing business as the President may by proclamation include within the term "enemy."

Section 2 also defines the term "ally of enemy." This definition follows in substance the terms used in defining the term "enemy" with such changes as make the terms applicable to an "ally" of enemy.

Section 2 also defines the word "trade" as covering every sort of commercial transaction that may be carried on between persons or nations. This definition is minute in its details and is found in paragraphs (a), (b), (c), (d), and (e), on pages 4 and 5.

Section 3 forbids trading with an enemy or an ally of an enemy, and makes such trade unlawful except under a license issued by the Secretary of Commerce. By this section the forbidden intercourse or commerce also extends to the transportation of an enemy or ally of an enemy, and also to the transmission, or attempted transmission, out of the United States of any letter, document, writing, message, picture, diagram, map, device, or other form of communication addressed to an enemy or the ally of an enemy. The necessity of this particular prohibition is too obvious to require explanation.

As my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT] just said, this is no new provision as to issuing a license under which trade may be had. In the case to which the committee's attention has been called, the Lane case, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, you will find there is a review of all the acts of this kind that were in effect during the Civil War and an exposition of the law regarding them. And so it is an application of an old principle that was in effect during the Civil War—this providing for a license for trading with the enemy.

Mr. McKEOWN. Is there any provision in this bill that will cover a case like this: Suppose horses in Oklahoma have been sold to Austrian agents or German agents, to be delivered in New York, and a contract made and an agreement made before the declaration of war, and the horses are delivered in New York after the declaration of war, but have not been delivered to the enemy, in that case what provision is there, if any, to take care of the owners or the men who have sold this property?

Mr. SNOOK. I am afraid there is no provision in the bill to take care of such a thing as that, and I do not know that there ought to be a provision of that kind, because I really think we ought not to send horses or property of that kind to the enemy to help them in this war in which we are engaged against them. I do not see how you can make a provision of that kind. It is one of the risks of war that they will have to assume.

Mr. McKEOWN. Then, those people in Oklahoma in that case will have no redress in the courts under this bill?

Mr. SNOOK. I think not. Under section 5 of the bill the President may suspend the act so far as it applies to an ally of the enemy. This is a provision that the department thought to be wise, because at sometime it might be necessary in the course of trading for the President to suspend it.

This provision further provides that licenses may be granted under the direction of the President to any person if he be of opinion that such license is advisable. This is the provision of the bill that allows the President to grant licenses to alien citizens who may be residents of the United States, so that that matter may be taken care of if he thinks that some person is transgressing the law or is pursuing some kind of trade to the detriment of this country.

As to the provisions of section 6, I only want to say this: It seems to be the opinion of some Members of the House that this bill provides for the confiscation of the property that is to be turned into the hands of this custodian. On the other hand, it is the opinion of the committee and of the people who framed this bill that that will not be the result if this bill is enacted into law. Indeed, it is the opinion of the committee and of the people who framed the law that it will take care of that property, so that it will be in readiness to be disposed of at the end of the war according to an act of Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNOOK. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. What provision is there in the bill that at the close of the war the property of those enemy foreigners who have seen fit to allow their property to be invested in this country is to be returned to them?

Mr. SNOOK. The provision in the bill is that that is to be disposed of in the discretion of Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, if Congress does not act, then their property is withheld from them and confiscated by the Government.

Mr. SNOOK. Does the gentleman think that Congress will assume that position? Has the gentleman so little confidence in the Congress of the United States as to think it will not act fairly and justly with those men?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, it is not a question of acting fairly, but a question of Congress not acting expeditiously—a question of how long the property of these foreigners will be withheld.

Mr. SNOOK. The thing is not one-sided, the gentleman should know. There will be so many things to adjust when this war is over. The enemy will have property of our citizens. There will be claims for indemnity, and the German Government will undoubtedly have property belonging to our citizens. And it seemed wise to the committee, although it may not seem wise to the gentleman, that this property should be left in the position it is in, so that when all these questions are taken up they can be adjusted equitably.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is confusing in the statement he has made the rights of the belligerent government with the rights of individual subjects. It is not sought by this bill to appropriate the property of foreigners who are domiciled in this country. That remains in the hands of those aliens who are domiciled here, but you are attempting to take the property of foreigners resident abroad who have seen fit to leave their property for investment perhaps with a corporation or some individual, or turn it over to the Government without any right whatever, so far as the provisions of the bill are concerned, to require the Government to turn it over to them after the end of the war.

Mr. SNOOK. This property is taken and placed in the hands of the custodian under the powers of Congress. Congress passes the law under which it is done, and I do not see why Congress could not be trusted to pass a law governing the matter when the war is over; why it should not be trusted to adjust this matter and see to it that the property is returned to the owner. I am sure there is no disposition on the part of the Congress to confiscate any property.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman know of any treaty at the close of any war where the conditions have been to take the property of subjects resident abroad and adjust those claims? They are always exempt. It is only the property of the government itself that is taken into consideration.

Mr. SNOOK. I would remind the gentleman of this fact, that when the war is over Germany may have enacted a law similar to this, under which the property of our citizens will be held in Germany. Does the gentleman think that, without regard to the way they have treated our citizens, we should turn this property over to them?

Mr. STAFFORD. While the Government has the right to take the property of an alien living in its jurisdiction, no government has in recent times gone to that extent, and all authorities on international law recognize the fact that individual property should not be taken during a state of belligerency.

Mr. SNOOK. I understand that; but this proposition is not only—as the gentleman will see if he examines it closely—for the benefit of our Government, but is also for the benefit of the foreigners who own this property, because in all cases the property will not be, as the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] pointed out, held by corporations which are as solvent as the Pennsylvania Railroad. This property, if it must be kept in the hands of the debtors, may be lost; but if it is put into the hands of the United States it will be saved.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit right there, I have in mind a case where an alien enemy, formerly a governess in the home of a constituent of mine, left property in this country in his hands to take care of. She exercised her judgment as to who should be her debtor. Now, you enact this bill and take away her right of recovery—of suing her agent or trustee for her property.

Mr. SNOOK. Well, that is the gentleman's view of the matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the bill itself.

Mr. SNOOK. I think the property would be just as much safeguarded and all rights as well protected if it is left to Congress to dispose of after the war as it would be to give the party a right to bring a suit in the Court of Claims.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNOOK. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. If the custodian of the money of this governess that the gentleman speaks about were to send it to her, and when it got across the sea it were to get into the hands of one of the Governments at war with Germany, they would take it and keep it?

Mr. SNOOK. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. And use it against Germany?

Mr. SNOOK. Certainly. Alien enemies have no legal rights that a belligerent is bound to respect, as a matter of law.

Mr. STAFFORD. But this Government does recognize them.

Mr. GORDON. We are recognizing them in this country by providing in this act for a trustee to hold the property until the close of the war.

Mr. SNOOK. I see that my time is running.

By section 4 an enemy and an ally of an enemy is forbidden to assume and use any other name than that by which it was known at the beginning of the war, except under license issued by the Secretary of Commerce.

Under section 5 the President may suspend the act so far as it applies to an ally of an enemy and licenses may be granted under the direction of the President to any person if he shall be of opinion that such grant shall be compatible with the successful prosecution of the war.

Section 6 provides for the appointment of a Government agent to be known as the alien-property custodian, and all money and property in the United States due or belonging to an enemy or an ally of enemy is to be delivered to this custodian to be held by him and accounted for under the terms of the act.

Such clerks and employees as may be necessary to carry out the law shall be appointed through the Civil Service Commission, and the Secretary of Commerce is empowered to accept voluntary services. In this connection it has been stated that it will require an additional force of 1,000 employees to administer the law.

In the hearings, on page 30, Secretary Redfield assures us that this report is entirely unfounded, and that it will not require one-tenth of this number; on pages 17 to 19 of the hearings the Secretary minutely describes the nature of the work that this bureau will have to do and estimates the number of clerks that will be required to perform these duties at 45; he then makes the statement, to be found on page 19, that he is of the opinion that he will be able to secure volunteers to do quite a large part of this work without compensation.

Section 7 (a) provides for the disclosure of all property of an enemy or of an ally of enemy situate within the United States and of all debts due an enemy or an ally of enemy through reports which must be made to the custodian.

Section 7 (b) declares that any conveyance or transfer of the property of an enemy or ally of enemy after the beginning of the war with knowledge that it was such property shall be void. This section also contains the exception to which I have heretofore referred to concerning payment to an agent.

Section 7 (c) provides that if the Secretary shall so require any money or other property of an enemy or ally of enemy or which is owing to or belongs to an enemy or ally of enemy shall be conveyed, assigned, delivered, or paid to the custodian, and that any person not an enemy or ally of enemy who owes to such persons any money may, at his option, pay the same to the custodian, and that such delivery of such money or property to the custodian shall be a full discharge of the obligation to the extent of such payment or delivery, and the custodian is empowered to issue receipt for the same, which shall be evidence of such delivery or payment.

Section 8 provides a method of disposing of property belonging to an enemy or an ally of an enemy where it is incumbered by mortgage or other lien.

Section 9 provides a method whereby any person not an enemy or an ally of enemy, claiming an interest in money or property which has come into the hands of the custodian or to whom a debt may be owing from an enemy or an ally of enemy, may have such claim adjudicated and adjusted.

Section 11 provides that all moneys, including checks and drafts payable on demand, received by the custodian shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States and invested in United States bonds; this section also provides for the keeping and safeguarding of all property coming under the control of the custodian. It contains the further important provision that the final disposition of the property coming under the control of the custodian belonging to an enemy or to an ally of enemy shall be disposed of at the conclusion of the war at the discretion of Congress.

1. Sections 12 and 13, pages 20 and 21, relate to the regulation of clearance of vessels bound for foreign ports, in order that there may be full control of both vessels and cargoes, domestic as well as foreign.

2. An appropriation of a sum not to exceed $250,000 is contained in the act to be used in the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce for the administration of the provisions of the act during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for the payment of salaries of all persons employed under the act, together with the necessary expenses for transportation, subsistence, rentals in the District of Columbia, books, periodicals, stationery, miscellaneous supplies, printing, and other necessary expenses.

Section 15, page 22, provides punishment and penalty for the violation of the act. And section 16, pages 22 and 23, confers jurisdiction upon the district courts of the United States to issue such process as may be necessary to enforce the provisions of the act, with the right of appeal as provided in sections 128 and 238 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary." Jurisdiction of offenses against the act committed in the Philippine Islands and the Canal Zone is given to the several courts of the first instance in the Philippine Islands and the district court of the Canal Zone, and concurrent jurisdiction for like offenses is conferred upon the district courts of the United States for offenses against the act committed upon the high seas.

The analysis I have made of the act under consideration will show that its purpose is to define what trade may be carried on and what trade is forbidden. The object of its framers was to provide authority to protect our country against any aid being given to the enemy by our citizens or any other persons, and yet to cause as little interruption as possible of our commerce. To accomplish this the trade forbidden to an enemy or an ally of an enemy in the first instance is not fixed by the nationality of the person with whom the trade is to be carried on but by the domicile or the residence of that person.

The intention is to make it impossible to aid our enemy by forbidding that money or property of any kind held in this country should reach the hands of the enemy.

Secretary Lansing, who was one of the persons responsible for this bill, in the hearings before the committee put the matter in this way:

> You will observe, in the definition of the word "enemy," that an enemy is a person, corporate or otherwise, who resides in the territory of an enemy or an ally of an enemy, or in territory occupied by their armed forces, or in neutral countries and doing business in such territory, on an official or agent of the Government of the enemy or his ally. By proclamation the President may extend this definition to include natives, citizens, or subjects of the enemy or his ally wherever resident, i. e., in neutral countries or even in the United States.

The officers of the Government inform us that there may be some kinds of business transactions between citizens of this country and enemies, allies or enemies, or subjects of such countries which may be carried on with safety to the United States. The bill, therefore, provides for the granting of licenses for the carrying on of such business if such grant shall be compatible with the safety of the United States and with the successful prosecution of the war.

This principle was applied during the Civil War quite successfully. It is believed that it can now be used in many cases with great benefit to the Government. A discussion of this principle as it was applied during the Civil War, together with an analysis of the various acts, rules, and regulations in force at that time, are set forth in the Lane case, to which I have referred.

It will be noted in this connection that trade with aliens who reside in the United States is to be forbidden only by proclamation of the President, and then only "if he shall find that the safety of the United States or the successful prosecution of the war shall so require." The bill is drafted in this way to permit as little interference with our domestic affairs as possible.

While we are passing so many laws for the regulation of our trade and commerce, it is also highly important to keep in mind that we now have in this country the greatest source of credit in the world, and that if we hope to win the war it is necessary to maintain that credit.

War can not be carried on successfully in these times without credit. In the long run credit will probably be the deciding factor in this great struggle. So while regulation in certain cases is absolutely necessary, it is also important that both our domestic and foreign commerce be just as free as it is possible to keep it without impairing our efficiency or giving aid and comfort to our enemy.

The first object of the bill, therefore, is to provide such regulations as will prevent anything from this country reaching the enemy that might prove of value to it in carrying on the war. Another object of the legislation which is worked out through the alien-enemy custodian is to protect the rights and property of enemies and allies of enemies.

It is perfectly apparent that such persons are the owners of valuable property situate in the United States; that they are parties to contracts entered into prior to the beginning of the war which have not yet been carried out, and that there are millions of dollars now due to such persons from Americans and American business concerns; and that there will be, before the close of the war, many more millions due them from dividends on stocks in American business concerns and from interest on American securities.

The law as it now stands prevents the turning over of this property, the carrying out of these contracts, and the payment of such interest and dividends.

It would be neither right nor moral to confiscate the property of these persons because they happen to reside in a country with which we are at war. A study of these facts show that a law like this, providing for the safe-keeping of such property by a custodian, is both just and proper.

The Secretary of Commerce, in the hearings before the committee, stated the case in this way:

> The creation of an alien-property custodian is a novelty and is in line with that same effort toward equity which impels us to indicate an earnest desire to show to the people with whom, unfortunately, we are engaged in war that here is the opposite of confiscation and here is the opposite of requisition. A responsible officer of the Government is created who shall receive the property of an enemy and put it in the safest place known to us—that is, in the Treasury of the United States—and invest it in Government bonds, so that the property of the enemy in our country shall be used to support the war, but at the same time to remain safely in the custody of the Treasury, and to remain there until the war is over. Then this bill does not give to that custodian the final disposition of that property, but it expressly declares that after the war shall have ceased the property thus secured shall be at the disposition of Congress and that it shall be for Congress to say how it shall be handled. It is evident to you, sir, I am sure, what a remarkable power the possession of that enemy property thus safeguarded would be to you if you were negotiating terms of peace. I hardly need do more than to suggest the weight that this would give your words, and also as being an act of good faith even toward an enemy.

Then, too, you can readily see in what an embarrassing position our own people are placed on account of the rule of law to which I called your attention. Many of our people hold property which belongs to an enemy; many others have entered into contracts before the war with persons who are now our enemies; still others have money which belong to such persons.

Almost daily these persons are asking the Department of Justice for advice; they wish to know what to do. The adoption of this measure will relieve the embarrassing position in which they are placed; all property held by our citizens belonging to an enemy or to an ally of an enemy may be turned over to the custodian and all money in which an enemy or an ally of an enemy has any interest may be paid to the custodian and the holder relieved of further liability, and everyone will be assured that this money and property will be safely held and equitably and justly disposed of.

The necessity for this law, then, grows out of the fact that all this money and property of the enemy held by the people of this country can not, under the present state of the law, be turned over to the foreign enemy in any way and can not be used by the enemy as a basis of credit nor for his benefit.

Therefore unless the law is changed all this money and property must remain in the hands of the present holders, and no one can receive any benefit therefrom except such people as hold it for the owners.

The theory of the bill is that it shall not be allowed to remain in the hands of the debtor or the holder, but that it shall be turned over to the custodian, to be held by him during the war and to be invested in Government securities, thereby helping to finance our Government and to build up its credit.

Thus this feature of the bill provides a means for assisting the Government, but at the same time is just and fair to the enemy.

For if the war is to last very long and a measure of this kind is not passed, the enemy will be bound to take the risk of the solvency of his debtor in America. In times of peace, in the ordinary course of business, the risk of insolvency is quite great. This risk may be increased in times of war. This bill does away with that risk. It absolutely affords a means by which all this property and money will be taken care of and invested in the highest securities, so that when the war is ended the owner may make and prosecute a claim for his property.

At the same time the bill safeguards and protects the rights of the Government, for the whole question as to the final disposition of this property and money, together with the income thereof, is left to the discretion of Congress and is to be settled by appropriate legislation when the war is over.

Heretofore I have not referred to section 10 of the act for the reason that the provisions of this section refer to a subject different from that which we have been discussing. This section is divided into eight paragraphs, the first of which provides that an enemy or ally of enemy may file and prosecute in the United States an application for a patent, trade-mark, print, label, or copyright in practically the same manner as if we were not at war "provided the nation of which the said applicant is a citizen, subject, or corporation shall extend substantially similar privileges to citizens and corporations of the United States."

Paragraph (b) provides, in substance, that this same action may be taken by a citizen of the United States in an enemy country, but that his application therefor must be first approved by the Secretary of Commerce.

Paragraph (c) provides that any citizen or corporation of the United States may be licensed by the Federal Trade Commission to manufacture or produce any article under patents or copyrights owned or controlled by an enemy or an ally of enemy.

The commission shall prescribe the regulations under which such license shall be exercised and require the licensee to pay a fee not exceeding $100 and not exceeding 1 per cent of the fund to be deposited by such licensee under the provisions of the act.

Paragraph (d) provides that the licensee must file with the commission a report showing to what extent it has used and enjoyed the license and pay to the commission not to exceed 5 per cent of the gross sum received by it from the sale of articles produced by it, or 5 per cent of the value of such products as established by the commission. These sums are to be paid to the custodian and held by him as a fund for the payment of the owner of the patent or copyright for its use.

Paragraph (e) provides for the term of the license.

Paragraph (f) provides that at any time within one year after the end of the war the owner of such patent or copyright may bring suit for the recovery of compensation for the use of his invention or copyright. The custodian is to be made a party to this suit, and the owner is to be paid in so far as can be done from the fund in his hands arising from the 5 per cent payments provided for in the paragraph.

Paragraph (g) provides for the bringing of suits by an enemy or an ally of an enemy to prevent the infringement of letters patent and copyright.

Many patents and copyrights have been granted by this country to citizens falling within the classes designated in the act as enemies and allies of enemies. It is also true that many of our citizens hold patents and copyrights of great value issued to them by the German Government and by Governments that are allies with Germany in the present war. After much careful thought the scheme contained in this bill is presented as the very best under all the circumstances that can be devised to protect the Government and at the same time to deal justly with aliens and our citizens who hold such patents and copyrights.

Let me call your attention to a letter written by the Commissioner of Patents to the Attorney General in explanation of this provision of the law.

> DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
> UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE,
> Washington, D. C., May 11, 1917.
>
> Hon. ATTORNEY GENERAL,
> Washington, D. C.
>
> SIR: The European countries at present at war have (with the exception of Russia and a retaliatory measure by Germany directed against Russia only) mutually respected the patents and copyrights and trade-marks of each other's citizens and subjects and have granted privileges of filing applications and paying fees, annuities, etc., necessary to preserve these rights and have granted liberal extensions for filing and prosecuting applications and paying fees.
>
> It is essential that our citizens be permitted to file applications and pay fees and annuities and and receive the benefit of extensions, and these advantages can be gained only by similar concessions upon our part.
>
> Moreover, in the patent acts of many of the foreign countries there are general provisions for the granting of compulsory licenses. These provisions were not found to be of much importance and were in many respects disadvantageous prior to the outbreak of this war, but since the outbreak of the war they have become important in connection with enemy-owned patents.
>
> Our Government may supply its own needs under existing laws either directly or through contractors who are protected against suit or interference, the only remedy to the patentee being recovery through the Court of Claims. But the needs of State governments, municipalities, and private citizens can not be supplied in this way. It is therefore suggested that our patent statute be amended to provide that whenever a state of war exists the Federal Trade Commission may grant licenses under enemy-owned patents.
>
> I have in a large measure myself drafted and have discussed with Mr. Warren in detail the bill herewith submitted covering the points indicated.
>
> Respectfully, THOMAS EWING, Commissioner.

Some of the articles covered by these patents and copyrights are almost indispensable. During the war some are required by the Government and are of almost daily use.

Since the war has begun the production of these articles has been interrupted, and some have become so scarce that they can hardly be obtained at all. The demand for some of these articles of necessity has become so great that bills have been introduced in Congress to annul the patents under which they have been produced.

The Commissioner of Patents has devised and presented this scheme whereby these articles may be produced under this license system. It will be observed that this scheme is far more simple, and that it can be worked out and the rights of every party interested be amply protected. We are also assured that the scheme will be successful, and that many persons and firms are anxious to take out these licenses and undertake the work of producing these various articles which are protected by foreign patents.

The plan proposed in the bill follows the course taken by all other countries engaged in the war except Russia. It is a broad and liberal one and in my judgment deals fairly and justly with a great subject in which the Government is directly interested. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire any further time?

Mr. SNOOK. No; but I thank the gentleman from Virginia for offering it to me.

Mr. ESCH. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD a statement of the aims of the Patriotic Service League, an organization formed in my congressional district and designed to be extended into all the congressional districts of the United States. The aims and purposes are stated in the printed leaflet which I submit, and whose contents I ask the privilege of inserting in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANDLER] to extend his remarks, as stated by him?

There was no objection.

The statement is as follows:

"PATRIOTIC SERVICE LEAGUE—STATEMENT OF AIMS.

"At present our business is war, with no likelihood of 'a short war.' The time to strike hard is now. Therefore, to shorten this war, to lessen the misery, we must organize all the resources of our Nation. We must link ourselves to the Federal Government. We must be the third line of defense.

"Patriotic men and women in the nineteenth congressional district of the State of New York have seen this need. They started with the smallest political division—the election district. Now all the 115 election districts have been organized to form the first congressional district member of the Patriotic Service League. Neighbors inspired with community spirit are acting together.

"The question arises, 'Why are we organizing?' And the answer is: We are organizing that we may serve the Government of the United States and assist to the full in this great 'fight for the things which we have always carried nearest our hearts—for democracy, for the right of those who submit to authority to have a voice in their own governments, for the rights and liberties of small nations, for a universal dominion of right by such a concert of free peoples as shall bring peace and safety to all nations and make the world itself at last free.'

"The Patriotic Service League aims to form in every congressional district an organization to arouse, coordinate, and direct on the nonmilitary side the patriotic efforts of all citizens of both sexes and of every age so that an early and successful termination of the war may result.

"There are other war organizations in existence, but not on local geographic lines. For an organization such as the Patriotic Service League, which is founded upon geographic lines, there is real need. The other societies with their particular objects will find contact through this local unit of neighbors with the individual men and women in every household by whose loyal service the Nation's task will be accomplished. We are not competing; we desire to cooperate.

"It is at this time obviously impossible to name all of the activities in which the organization may become engaged; but it is wise to state some present specific duties.

"First. Food requirement, the nutrition of children, the economical purchase and use of food in the home and cooperation with the food administration of the Government must be taught and practiced in order that we and our allies may not fail of an adequate food supply.

"Second. The welfare of soldiers' families is to a large degree peculiarly a neighborhood affair. It will be our duty to investigate and ascertain where relief is needed; to furnish immediate assistance pending Governmental action; to cooperate with other organizations having relief work in charge; to raise funds not only through our neighborhood units, but also through our larger divisional units and generally to do all in our power to protect these families from unnecessary hardship and need.

"Third. Enlistment, conscription, and exemptions present problems which such an organization as the Patriotic Service League, both through its neighborhood divisions and its larger divisions, can aid in solving.

"Fourth. We must work with the Red Cross in all its urgent, manifold activities.

"Fifth. Men in training camps and at the front must be provided with amusement and recreation. We can collect reading matter for them. Other methods to this end will later become evident.

"Sixth. The Boy Scouts, the Campfire Girls, the Woodcraft League, the Junior Police, the movement of boys to the farms, and like social activities must be recognized, used, and encouraged by us for their general patriotic value, and also especially as a means of preventing such juvenile delinquency as has resulted in other countries from the absence of the father from home.

"Seventh. We shall make known to those who may lose their jobs and those women who must seek employment the method of finding work.

"Eighth. The Government will need our aid to float coming loans. Each bond issue must have our aid in creating enthusiasm and in organizing participation.

"Finally. The Patriotic Service League, realizing that it is more difficult in a democracy than in an autocracy for the Government to initiate and to get things done, will bring home to every citizen through speakers and literature and its neighborhood and other meetings the necessity and opportunity for universal service.

"The Patriotic Service League knows no distinction of party. Its motto is universal service and its standard the flag."

PATRIOTIC SERVICE LEAGUE—GENERAL ADVISORY COUNCIL.

Charles S. Fairchild (chairman), James C. Egbert, Franklin H. Giddings, Charles E. Hughes, William T. Manning, Langdon P. Marvin, Morgan J. O'Brien, Alton B. Parker, James T. Shotwell, John B. Stanchfield, Oscar S. Straus, Maude Wetmore, Everett P. Wheeler, George W. Wickersham.

Ellery C. Stowell, secretary.

Office of the league, 509 Fifth Avenue (near Forty-second Street), New York City. Telephones, Murray Hill 1166-1167-1168.

Mr. ESCH. I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, it is indeed gratifying and restful to find that the regiment of employees to be engaged under this bill are to be appointed in pursuance with the civil-service laws. I do not know whether that indicates that the supply of "faithful and deserving" in certain sections of the country is becoming scarce or whether it is due to the action of the House accepting the civil-service rule in the food-control bill. However, as a member of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, a committee somewhat dormant and inactive, I wish to thank the chairman and members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for relieving me from the necessity of introducing such an amendment to this bill.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] emphasized the fact that the patent provision of this bill was a reciprocal measure; that it was to apply in the event that a similar privilege was extended to citizens of this country having patent rights in Germany. I want to point out that this reciprocal provision refers only to applications for patents or trade-marks, and does not apply to the license provision permitting citizens of this country to manufacture an article patented and owned by an alien enemy. I believe, however, that the reciprocal provision should extend to the entire section dealing with patent rights.

Now, the gentleman was unable to state whether the German Government intended or at this time had limited or abrogated patents or patent rights owned by citizens of this country. If the purpose and intent of this bill is only one of reciprocity or retaliation, I suggest that a similar provision should be inserted in this bill to cover the provisions of subsection (c) under section 10. From what I gather from what has been said to-day and from the testimony before the committee, the only purpose of subsection (c) is to manufacture salvarsan, commonly known as "606." The trouble with that is that if salvarsan could be manufactured in this country there would be no need of any such provision. It is conceded that it is a medicine much needed and demanded by the requirements of public health. If a Philadelphia concern or any other concern in this country were able to manufacture salvarsan they could have done so and there is not a court in the country that would restrain them. The only limitation that any court would impose in connection with an action for infringement would be an order to keep complete and accurate accounts pending the action. That would protect all parties for the duration of the war when the matter could be immediately adjusted.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I will state that Mr. Metz had a contract with Dr. Shoenberg to manufacture at a certain price salvarsan, and therefore it could be made. Mr. Metz has the sole agency of the drug in this country and is the only one who could make a contract.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am glad the gentleman from Pennsylvania made that statement. I will state now that salvarsan has not been successfully made in this country. It has been tried since 1914. They have tried and experimented, imported an imitation from Canada, yet they can not obtain the result which careful practitioners say is equal to the original. It does not equal the result of Dr. Ehrlich's product.

What these men want is not the right to manufacture salvarsan, but they want the Government to O. K. and let them put on the market a spurious article. The health of the people is concerned here, and that is why we should be very careful before granting to anyone a license to manufacture an imitation salvarsan of uncertain result and sell it as the original preparation under a Government license. It is misleading. The public will be deceived. Patients will believe that they are being cured with the original "606." Results may be fatal. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON] states that Mr. Metz had a contract with a manufacturer and that the preparation could be made in this country. I have a letter from Mr. Metz, and he is very frank and honest in his statement. He says this:

> Salvarsan has been and is being manufactured in this country by others. If through the competition a better article or a cheaper article can be placed on the market than I can produce I will be taking the ordinary business risk and will have no reason to complain. I feel confident that I can do at least as well, if not better, than anyone else, and believe I am in a more favorable position, owing to past experience with the patented product which I control, and no doubt there are others whose relations to enemy patents are the same as mine.

I will put the whole letter in the RECORD.

This is an honest statement from Mr. Metz, who is the sole agent of the original salvarsan. He does not state that the preparation can be duplicated here. He admits the chances. It is all a matter of experiment, which after nearly three years has not yet been successfully accomplished. If the gentlemen of the committee who must have given serious study and consideration are able to state that anyone in this country has experimented and has reached a stage of making a preparation as good as the original salvarsan, then, of course, there will be no danger. But I repeat that so far they have not been able to do so. They are seeking to market an imitation of doubtful medical value. This is the only patent article mentioned. If it is the only reason for the section, I do not hesitate to say that the section should be stricken out, for two reasons, first, it will not accomplish the purpose as far as salvarsan goes, and, second, citizens of this country have more at stake. You seem to overlook the fact that we have hundreds of patent rights in Germany owned by American citizens. We must protect them as much as a certain few chemical companies. We do not hear that Germany is interfering with their rights. Let us consider that. In all fairness, let us protect the American citizen in his patent rights in Germany and limit the enforcement of this provision to a confiscation or limitation of patent rights owned by American citizens in Germany.

Mr. HILL. One moment. Two months ago, when the tax bill was under consideration, on the proposition of the president of the American Chemical Society, correspondence was had with the leading chemists of the country as to the possibility of manufacturing salvarsan, and replies came back, three out of four or four out of five of which stated that the only thing which stood in the way of the manufacture of salvarsan in this country was the rights under the German patent, and that if they could be abrogated or suspended there would be no trouble in making it just as good as that made in Germany. That correspondence is in the possession of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not care what the chemical people say. I will say that no self-respecting, reliable practitioner will make such a bold statement. I am concerned with the health of our own people. The Ehrlich preparation was subjected to 50,000 actual tests before it was placed on the market. The chemical people have the formula; they have experimented very largely, and yet have not reached the stage of perfection of the original preparation. The medical profession admit it. I repeat if it were possible to make it no one would be asking Congress for permission.

Mr. HILL. I simply call attention to the statements that have been made.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; and I simply want to call attention to actual conditions. I want to guard against the marketing of any untried or uncertain preparation with the Government's guarantee that it is "just as good" as the original and manufactured with the Government's license. Do not you see how dangerous that would be?

I shall present an amendment, if the committee does not do so, making the provision regulating patents subject to the attitude and action of the German Government toward the rights of our citizens in similar cases.

The letter referred to is as follows:

NEW YORK, July 6, 1917.

Hon. F. H. LAGUARDIA,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have your favor of July 2 addressed to me in care of the H. A. Metz Laboratories in Brooklyn.

In reply beg to say that I shall have salvarsan, made by the original process, on the market within the next few weeks. I will also manufacture other medical preparations covered by German patents in this country.

From my point of view I see no objection to the section in the Adamson "trading-with-the-enemy" bill which permits the granting of a license for the American manufacture of goods covered by enemy patents. So far as I am concerned, naturally my own personal interests would be best served if such licenses were not granted, but I take a broader view of the situation and feel that we should not be deprived of our ability to obtain necessary products just because their importation is prevented or their manufacture restricted by the foreign patents, provided the interests of the patentees are protected so that after the war they will have the benefit of their patents and receive a fair compensation while the patents are being used by others. It would be eminently unfair to abrogate or cancel the patents. Under the provisions of the Adamson bill we place our interests above those of the foreigner, which, of course, is perfectly proper, but at the same time preserve and safeguard his interests by certain restrictions which protect him for the future after peace has been declared.

Salvarsan has been and is being manufactured in this country by others. Undoubtedly they will apply for licenses, and if so, I shall have to face their competition. I will be manufacturing under license from the patentees, as the patents could not be transferred owing to the impossibility of communicating with Germany without censorship or confiscation on the part of the British during the last two years. If through the competition a better article or a cheaper article can be placed on the market than I can produce, I will be taking the ordinary business risk and will have no reason to complain. I feel confident that I can do at least as well, if not better, than anyone else, and believe I am in a more favorable position owing to past experience with the patented products which I control, and no doubt there are others whose relations to enemy patents are the same as mine. My only suggestion to Judge ADAMSON was that it might be possible in granting licenses to give preference to American citizens or American corporations who had before the war contractual relations with the patentees, if the Federal Trade Commission can be assured that they would use the licenses to the best interests of the United States during the term of such licenses.

I shall be glad to discuss this matter further whenever you are in the city or will look you up when I am next in Washington.

Yours, very truly,

HERMAN A. METZ.

Mr. SNOOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HULBERT].

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, nothing has been said during the debate upon this bill which even suggests that I should vote against it, and I can think of at least a dozen reasons why I should vote in favor of it, as I propose to do. But once again I desire to call the attention of this House to the fact that whenever Congress itself seeks to promote the commercial welfare of the country it does so only by the enactment of legislation of a restrictive character. I can not recall, nor have I been able to find, a single statute passed by this Congress in all of its history which has sought to improve commercial conditions except by restrictive legislation.

During the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress I introduced a resolution directing the Secretaries of the Treasury, War, and Commerce to report as to the advisability of establishing free ports at various points in the United States (H. Res. 209); subsequently I amended this resolution to omit of its application to the Panama Canal Zone, in accordance with the suggestion made by Gen. Goethals (H. Res. 296). During the consideration of the Webb export bill on September 2, 1916, I offered as an amendment the substance of my said resolution, full discussion of which will be found on pages 13714 to 13725, inclusive, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date. The amendment was rejected.

I have again introduced the resolution (H. Res. 6) which reads as follows):

> Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of Commerce be, and they are hereby, directed to report to Congress, on or before December 15 next, as to the advisability of the establishment of free ports within the limits of the established customs districts of the United States.

All that the resolution does is to direct the Secretaries of the three departments named to report to the House upon the advisability of the establishment of free ports in this country, and I may add that such a legislative provision, if found to be desirable in its application under our form of government, is designed to aid commercial development by the removal of restrictions. Some gentlemen on that side of the aisle voted against the amendment and were frank enough to say afterwards that they did so because they had been misled by the term "free port" into believing that it was some kind of a free-trade proposition. The fact of the matter is that free ports have thrived abroad in countries that operate under the protective tariff.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman give his interpretation of what a free port is? It is a term that is not thoroughly understood in the United States.

Mr. HULBERT. A free port is a harbor or a part of a harbor substantially free from customs control. It would have such customs surveillance as would be necessary to see that the goods entering such free port on leaving it went seaward, or, if inland, that the goods came under customs authority. It would be a neutral territory within which district vessels laden with foreign goods could dock and the cargo be transshipped to foreign countries or stored, handled, worked upon, and finally exported without coming under the administration of the customs law.

Of all hindrances to business transactions there is none equal to customs control for waste of time, trouble, and expense, especially as to goods imported for subsequent exportation either altered or after having been subjected to a greater or less number of processes. The result is no gain to the revenue, but simply an aggravation of the difficulties caused by foreign competition.

Not only could business now successfully carried on under customs restrictions be put upon a still more favorable footing by the help of such a free port, but many which are at present incapable of being remunerative undertakings would be changed to profitable enterprises.

Goods which under the present system are imported and reexported after various processes pay duties on their entries, of which 95 per cent are returned when the goods go out again. This involves loss of both time and money. This is what is known as drawback. There is no doubt a great deal of fraud practiced in this feature of our custom's administration, the proof required is often difficult to obtain, and a large part of what is paid back is consumed by the agents who make a business of collecting drawbacks, and there are thousands of articles manufactured here wholly or in part of imported materials on which a drawback is paid.

The various substances which are employed or consumed in their manufacture, such as oil, coal, machines, etc., carry no claim to compensation for the duties originally paid by them, all of which tends to enhance the difficulty of competing with foreigners.

A free port has little to do with goods imported into the country and consumed there. All such goods will naturally pay duty on leaving the grounds of the free port to be carried inland.

Its principal concern, therefore, is with goods imported from abroad and destined to be reexported with or without an intermediate operation. Transactions of other kinds may, of course, be combined therewith, but the main object of a free port will remain the transit trade.

A free port is not one exempt from dues, but only from customs. The same port dues may be charged as in the ordinary portion of the harbor, of which the free port forms one part. Its object would be defeated, however, were not the dues to be kept as low as possible.

Nobody denies that the exemption from duties should be accorded reexported foreign goods. It is equally clear that under the present system an immense deal of time and labor is wasted in the unavoidable customs operation, cramping and hindering trade and industry.

By the establishment of a free port all this can be saved. Great indeed must be the necessity which should require the maintenance of the present system with all its useless and costly hindrances in preference to one which would admit of ships running in and out of port at all times of the day with the least possible delay and expense.

Bonded warehouses afford considerable facilities for both inland and foreign trade. At the same time, they are but makeshifts when compared with a free port.

All the advantages they offer are shared to a greater extent by the other, and any possible disadvantage connected with the latter exist tenfold in bonded warehouses. These are, in fact, merely portions of a free harbor, hampered by restrictions and expenses unknown to the latter, the continued customs inspection, custom entries, permits, discharges, and cartage by bonded car men, bonded warehouse charges, the limit of business hours, the contracted space, the restriction upon the importer to exhibit his goods in the bonded warehouse, and many other obstacles combine to render transactions through the bonded warehouse difficult, expensive, and vexatious.

In order to allow commerce to have free play there ought to be one or more free ports in this country authorized by Congress, to be under the direction of the Secretaries of the Treasury and Commerce, where vessels with cargoes from foreign countries for distribution could go, and where such cargoes could be warehoused until a market should be found without having to go into customs custody or go through the delays and expense of the customs when not intended for domestic consumption. When a cargo of goods arrives and goes into bonded warehouse with intent even to be reexported, it is obliged to be entered in the customhouse, to be weighed, measured, or its value ascertained, a permit for its delivery to be obtained, to be carted by a private bonded truck to a private bonded warehouse, and when taken out for reexport it must go through the same involved process; a permit obtained for reexportion, the goods accounted for and marked off, and their reexportation followed. All of this involves unnecessary trouble and expense to the Government and the merchant.

It does seem to anyone who fairly and reasonably examines our tariff laws and statutes, relative to commerce and the customs regulations and practices, that there are too many dont's, too many restrictions. I believe most of these have been done unconsciously through excessive zeal to protect the Government.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is not that covered to a large extent in the United States by what we call the drawback system?

Mr. HULBERT. To some extent; but I am informed by the Secretary of Commerce that if the war-revenue bill that is pending over in the Senate passes in the form in which it is drawn, and substantial provision is not made with regard to the operation of the drawback provision, unless you adopt some means substantially of the nature of a free port you will have a more chaotic condition in this country than you have ever had in its commercial history; and all I want to direct the attention of gentlemen of this House to, and particularly the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], with whom I enjoy very cordial relations and with whom I have discussed this subject off the floor, is that the resolution that I have introduced does not commit the Government to anything, but if, as the gentleman has intimated by the question propounded to me a moment ago, he is looking for information, he can get it—Congress can get it—by the passage of my resolution, which, I again repeat, is to enable the Secretary of Commerce to collate the information that is now in his office, to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to collate the data now in his office, and also the Secretary of War, because his office, through the Engineer Corps, exercises jurisdiction over rivers and harbors, and the depth of the harbor and its tributaries is an essential factor in the establishment of a free port, to enable these three departments to report to this House, to inform you upon that subject. I stood here a year ago and I have been endeavoring ever since to awaken the interest of the Members of this House to that extent, in order that those who do not know anything about free ports will give the office of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Commerce an opportunity to enlighten them upon the subject; and if, after you have received their reports, you are not satisfied that the operation of a free port under our form of government can be made a financial and a commercial success you do not need to do anything more about it. The Government will be put to very little expense in collating this information and laying it upon the Speaker's desk, because it is now available, but only needs to be systematized and submitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to include an article which appeared in the New York Evening Post (Greater Port of New York Supplement, issued June 20, 1917) from the very able pen of the Hon. Frederic C. Howe, Commissioner of Immigration, Ellis Island, N. Y., and the distinguished author of "Socialized Germany":

BENEFITS OF ESTABLISHMENT OF FREE PORT—A MEANS OF STIMULATING OVERSEAS COMMERCE—NEW YORK HAS UNUSUAL NATURAL AND OTHER ADVANTAGES FOR THE CREATION OF A FREE PORT HERE—ITS IMPORTANCE TO SHIPPING.

New York is destined to remain far and away the greatest port of the world. At the close of the war there will be a great shifting of international trade and international finance. The United States has become an important creditor Nation, and New York is likely to supersede London as the financial center of the world. In addition, the clearance or exchanging of commodities which has heretofore been performed largely by England and Germany is likely to be performed in this country as an adjunct to international finance and as a result of the enormous increase in American shipping.

Our protective tariff is the greatest obstacle to international trade and the free movement of commodities. It is this that prevents our port from being a clearing house for South America, Africa, and other countries, and so long as the protective tariff intervenes we can never perform this function in competition with England, a free-trade country, and the Continental ports, where substantial free trade prevails or where free ports have been established.

One means of overcoming this obstacle and stimulating over-seas commerce is the creation of a great free port at New York similar to those established in Hamburg, Bremen, Copenhagen, and a number of other cities.

PROPOSAL HAS BEEN NEGLECTED.

In the discussion and legislation now going forward for the reestablishment of the American merchant marine and the development of our carrying trade a very important, possibly the most important, of all elements has been neglected. And that is the necessity of cargoes, not only for incoming ships but for outgoing ones as well. In order to recreate our merchant marine and enter the field for the carrying trade of the world in competition with England and Germany, it is necessary that ships should be able to speedily and surely find cargoes. And neither the modification of the registration acts nor the acquisition of ships by the Government will achieve the desired result unless provision is made for this primary condition as well. Incoming as well as outgoing cargoes are a sine qua non to the development of American trade and shipping.

It is the countries that have substantially free trade that do the carrying trade of the world. They are England, Germany (through her free ports), Belgium, Holland, and Denmark. The great bulk of the carrying trade is done by Great Britain, because she is a free-trade country, and a reference to the rise of British shipping in the years which followed the repeal of the corn laws shows a tremendous and immediate increase in her over-sea trade following the establishment of free trade. For 50 years she has been mistress of the seas, for the very simple reason that ships could come to her ports from all over the world; they could there discharge their cargoes and find other cargoes awaiting them without delay. Here there were no obstacles, obstructions, or tariff barriers to interfere with traffic.

ESCAPING TARIFF BARRIERS.

All history is unanimous in its demonstration that carrying trade will go hundreds of miles to escape tariff barriers. Protective tariffs killed the Spanish trade; they destroyed the rich and prosperous cities of the Netherlands. They killed our own foreign shipping, for commerce hates tariff barriers. In recent years Germany has begun to compete with Great Britain for the carrying trade of the world. She has been able to do this through her free ports, which have existed in Hamburg, Bremen, and Lübeck, ever since the Franco-Prussian War. These concessions were insisted on by these old free cities when they entered the Empire. And by imperial law there exists in the harbor of these cities a large free harbor, into which ships can come and go without the payment of customs duties upon their cargoes.

America can not hope to establish herself as a clearing house of the world until cargoes exist with which to fill ships' bottoms. For ships must be filled not only going but coming; they must be able to change their destination and do a tramp trade.

As it is now, we have cargoes of raw materials to European countries, and some outgoing and incoming cargoes to South America and the Orient. But our protective tariff prevents the importation of European wares and compels a large part of the trans-Atlantic shipping to go empty one way.

How can this obstacle be overcome? Aside from a policy of free trade, the only other alternative is the development of the free-port idea along the lines of German experience. And the suggestion is that Congress should provide for a half dozen free ports as an experiment, three of which should be on the Atlantic seaboard, one on the Gulf, one at Panama, and one or two upon the Pacific coast.

Quite obviously these free ports should recognize existing transportation and industrial conditions; they should be linked up with rail transportation. The leading Atlantic ports are New York, Boston, and Philadelphia. And New York and Boston have admirable natural advantages and harbor facilities for the planning of such ports.

New Orleans is a natural port upon the Gulf of Mexico and may become a port of great prominence in connection with the Panama Canal traffic. Upon the Pacific Coast San Francisco, Los Angeles, and Seattle are all ports of importance, all of which either own or plan to own a comprehensive system of municipal docks. These would seem to be the natural harbors for the making of preliminary experiments. In addition, all of these cities are rail terminals and have a substantial industrial life which would be quickened by contact with the free-port idea.

OPERATION OF FREE PORTS.

These ports might be opened in cooperation with various cities. Or it might be provided that any city with a certain amount of customs receipts that offered dockage for a free port would be entitled to enjoy this privilege. This would be an encouragement to cities to acquire and develop their own docks and harbors, which for the most part are in the control of private interests.

Into these ports ships could come from all over the world—from Europe, Africa, Asia, and South America. Here their cargoes could be placed in warehouses without the payment of customs dues, or cargoes could be broken and remade. Goods which remained in the warehouses would be placed in bond, as is now done for importers.

Now is the opportune moment for the development of this policy, while the ports of many nations are closed to trade. In addition, South America, the Pacific Islands, and the Orient have become more accessible to our ports through the Panama Canal than they have to the older ports of Europe. There is every reason why many of these countries should prefer to trade with us. But they can only do so when ships are in a position to earn the same return from our ports that they now earn from the ports of England, Germany, and the other countries of Europe.

ADVANTAGES OF A FREE PORT.

The advantages of a free port are obvious. They may be summarized as follows:

(a) Without exception the free ports—those of England, Hamburg, Bremen, Lubeck, Antwerp, Copenhagen, Hongkong, and Singapore—are among the commanding ports of the world.

(b) The free port will aid in the reestablishment of American shipping; it will furnish cargoes going and coming, as well as employment in the harbors.

(c) It will link the United States with South America, Asia, and Africa by trade connections which will tend to the promotion of friendly relations to the commercial advantage of each, and will supply an easier outlet for American goods.

THE DIRECT GAIN TO AMERICA.

(d) The most important gain is the direct gain to America. It will cheapen commodities by bringing great quantities of goods to our doors for importation or export, as trade needs demand. It will stimulate the growth of exporting houses, which can hold goods for an indefinite period without the payment of tariff dues—often equal to the cost of the article itself—for disposal to meet the trade demands of the whole world. It will upbuild international credit and shift to Amtrica an increasing and ultimately a predominant share in international exchange.

It will also aid American manufacturers in need of foreign supplies, who will be able to secure them at American ports of entry, in which merchants can exhibit samples, can mix, grade, and alter for domestic or export use, and to which buyers from America and other countries can come as to a great market place in which commodities of the world are exhibited for purchase and sale.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to go into an elaborate discussion of the details of this bill. The details have already been gone over with sufficient fullness, but there are a few features in connection with the bill that have not been adverted to in the course of the discussion, and as to them I wish to call particular attention. The discussion thus far impresses me with the necessity of amending the bill along the lines suggested by my colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], and also with the necessity for some amendments protecting payments in cases of bankruptcy proceedings, and no doubt amendments for these purposes will be offered in due course.

The purpose of the bill is to modify the severity of the law of the courts and of international law in time of war, to mitigate the severities of law in time of war, as was well said by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE], and to see to it that business in the United States is interfered with as little as possible during the pendency of the present strife. This bill does not seek to affect enemies or allies of enemies resident in the United States, with this qualification—that is the President, in his judgment, believes the safety of the Government or the successful prosecution of the war requires it he may by proclamation cover them into the "enemy" class, and they will then become subject to all the other provisions of the bill relating to enemies. It is the purpose to interfere with business as little as possible. Business and commerce are the basis of our financial strength, and our Nation, as well said by one of the witnesses, has become "the purse of the world." We have the largest gold reserve in the world, and it is to maintain our gold reserve and increase it and to maintain our business and increase it that we advocate the pending bill. Credits are based upon business, and international relations are indicated by credits, and the purpose of this bill is to make it as difficult as possible to exchange credit between the United States and her enemies. It may be difficult to do this, in view of the fact that credit can now be exchanged by cable or by wireless. Under existing law, under the espionage bill, control over cables and wireless has already been granted.

But even with censorship of the cables and the wireless it may be possible through wireless stations in Mexico or South America to communicate with stations in Spain or even in Germany itself and thus make transfers of credits to Germany. We believe this bill will greatly prevent such transfers. This war is to be won as much by dollars as it is by men and guns, and for this reason we are trying in this bill to make it impossible for a dollar of trade or business to inure to the advantage of the enemy.

Mr. HULBERT. Will the gentleman yield right there for a brief question?

Mr. ESCH. For a brief question.

Mr. HULBERT. What is intended to be done, so far as this bill is concerned, in relation to a company doing business wholly in this country, not with aliens but wholly in this country, where the stock of the corporation is owned wholly by citizens of the German Empire?

Mr. ESCH. I suppose the gentleman is referring possibly to an insurance company?

Mr. HULBERT. No; I have reference to a commercial company.

Mr. ESCH. Well, there are such. They are aliens and enemies under this bill, because corporations are not given the same rights and privileges as individuals or associations or a body of individuals, and the reason for it is this: A foreign corporation made up of German stockholders doing business in the United States and doing business wholly with citizens of the United States is nevertheless under the control of Germany, because such corporation is a creature of the laws of Germany. That does not obtain as to the alien enemy resident in the United States. He is not subject to the laws of Germany.

Mr. HULBERT. I think the gentleman misinterprets my question.

Mr. ESCH. Possibly.

Mr. HULBERT. For instance, I know a number of concerns in New York City which, before the war broke out, were acting in this country as purchasing agents for German concerns. Those concerns were organized under the laws of the State of New York. Two-thirds of the incorporators had to be citizens of the State, it is true, but a majority of the stock was owned by German citizens.

After the declaration of war between Germany and England some of those corporations, in order to continue their existence, suspended that part of their activities where they acted as purchasing agents or for the shipment of materials over there and entered into direct competition here with local concerns, because everybody connected with those companies were American citizens except as to the control of stock. Now, is it the purpose of this bill that those companies shall continue in existence and that their profits will be trusteed, or is it the intention under this bill absolutely to suspend its business and shut them off from all trade with the people here?

Mr. ESCH. Are those American corporations?

Mr. HULBERT. They are organized under the laws of the several States.

Mr. ESCH. And incorporated under the laws of the several States?

Mr. HULBERT. Certainly; and the stock is owned by German citizens.

Mr. ESCH. Then they will be permitted to do business in the United States, but the officers of those corporations, the president, the secretary, and trustees, will be required under this bill to report to the alien-property custodian the name of every German stockholder or bondholder, as the case may be, and when that is listed with the custodian, then the dividends on the stock or the interest on the bonds will be paid to the custodian or to a depositary, and put in the Treasury of the United States to be invested by the Secretary of the Treasury in bonds or in certificates of indebtedness. It will not mean that that corporation will cease business. It can apply for a license.

Mr. HULBERT. Now, will the gentleman allow one further question along the same line? What will be the course pursued in relation to a copartnership of German citizenship which is operating in this country through a power of attorney in which the power is vested in an American manager, an American citizen?

Mr. ESCH. The copartners are German?

Mr. HULBERT. Yes, sir.

Mr. ESCH. They are not residents of the United States?

Mr. HULBERT. No.

Mr. ESCH. Then they are aliens and enemies within the purview of this bill.

Mr. HULBERT. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And of international law.

Mr. HULBERT. Does this bill give any additional right to those men beyond existing international law?

Mr. ESCH. No; I do not think it gives any more right.

Mr. HULBERT. If they try to carry on business, will this bill step in——

Mr. ESCH. They could make their application for a license to continue business, and all assets or profits and so on would have to be accounted for to the alien-property custodian or to some other person designated by the President.

Mr. HILL. If the gentleman will pardon me, I think the committee has struck a great deal bigger problem than they have provided for. There are literally millions of such investments of European countries in this country, not only stocks and bonds of railroads, and so forth, but in corporations and in partnerships, and it seems to me that the honor and good faith of the United States would seem to require that it should be explicitly provided. I have this suggestion to make to the gentleman if he will be kind enough to allow it. If the gentleman will turn to section 11 of the bill, what earthly objection can there be to inserting something of this kind:

That all moneys paid to or received by the alien-property custodian pursuant to this act—

Now, understand I do not object to the purpose of the bill, but I am in favor of it. However, I want to do it squarely, openly, and above board—shall be deposited forthwith in the Treasury of the United States and held in trust for the original owners.

And at the top of page 21, at the end of the word "Treasury":

To the credit of the individual owners.

Then turn over to page 22, and in line 17 insert, and I will note the words in a minute:

After the end of the war any claim of any enemy or of an ally of enemy to any money or other property received and held by the alien-property custodian or deposited in the United States Treasury shall—

And I add the words—

on proof of ownership be paid as Congress shall direct.

Now, what harm is there in that? It would absolutely remove all possibility of a claim of confiscation of private property.

Mr. ESCH. I can not conceive it is a case of confiscation, although the gentleman seems to believe that it is.

Mr. HILL. Let me ask the gentleman this question: How long do you suppose that a corporation such as the gentleman from New York [Mr. HULBERT] has suggested would continue to do business if they knew the entire profits, dividends, and proceeds of any kind or character whatever were to be turned into the United States Treasury in an indistinguishable fund and disposition of them should be left until after the war was over, and after an act of Congress provided for their disposition?

Mr. HULBERT. I would like to say to the gentleman in that connection that there are thousands of people in New York City—American citizens—who are employed by such concerns, and who, if those concerns were put out of business, would be thrown out of work, and starvation and deprivation would be brought to their front doorstep.

Mr. HILL. Of course. And I want to say to the gentleman that New York City is the second largest German city in the world, next to Berlin, and this is going to raise complications that ought to be carefully considered. I am in favor of doing it, but let us do it so that there will be no mistake about it when the war is over.

Mr. ESCH. I do not want to pass on the amendments of the gentleman from Connecticut, because I have not had opportunity to consider them, for this is the first time I have heard them suggested, but I would be glad to consider them when they appear in the RECORD in the morning.

I wish to conserve these rights, and I wish to see that there is assurance that there will be a payment made at the conclusion of the war.

Mr. HILL. I will say to the gentleman that I have looked in vain through the bill to find any reference whatever to the holder of United States Government bonds in Germany. There is a case where the Government has a right to step in and provide definitely what shall be done, but the other cases to which I referred are cases between individual citizens of the two countries.

Mr. ESCH. This bill by its terms puts bankers, merchants, manufacturers, and all other citizens upon notice. In other words, they will know after it is enacted that they can not deal with an alien enemy without risk or hazard. They will know there is now an official, if this bill becomes a law, to whom they can apply in case of doubt and get authority by means of a license to continue the conduct of their business. In this way this bill will bring relief to commerce, will clarify the atmosphere, and will remove the last vestige of doubt.

There are many in the United States who, knowing that they are indebted to an enemy or an ally of an enemy, and desiring to be relieved from such obligation, can make payment into the hands of this Government official, the custodian, and receive from him the necessary quittance. This quittance will be protanto, based on the amount so paid, and the receipt which will be given by the custodian or by a depositary, or such other person as the President may designate, will be evidence in any court of such payment.

The money or property when turned over to the custodian becomes absolutely safe. In the ordinary course of business the creditor runs the risk of his debtor's malfeasance, of his conversion of the property, of his sudden death or bankruptcy. All these risks the creditor runs in ordinary course of business, but under this bill this money—these obligations—can be paid, evidenced by a proper receipt, and no further risks will be suffered by the creditor because of the death, bankruptcy, malfeasance, or criminal conduct of such debtor. The creditor will feel secure in the knowledge that his money is in the safest place in the world—the Treasury of the United States.

There is a provision in section 2 of the bill to which I wish to call brief attention. It is:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall impair or affect the President's proclamation of April 6, 1917, or any amendment or modification thereof, in relation to the branches of enemy or ally of enemy insurance companies in the United States when such branches are under the management of citizens of the United States and subject to rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce.

There are several very large and powerful German insurance companies that have been doing business in the United States for many years, and they have policies running up into the hundreds of millions upon property in the United States. At the outbreak of the war with Germany many of these policyholders and agents of these companies appealed to the President of the United States for relief and asked that these companies should be permitted to continue to do business within the United States.

The insurance commissioners of the various States of the Union met in conference and resolved upon a set of rules which should be enforced upon the German insurance companies, and the President on the 6th of April issued a proclamation authorizing and permitting these insurance companies to continue to do business under certain safeguards and restrictions. If this were not done it would result in great losses throughout the United States.

In the great Atlanta fire a few weeks ago these companies held risks of over $100,000. Unless they were permitted to do business, as indicated in this proviso, the policyholders in these insurance companies would be denied their right to claim indemnity against these companies. The committee therefore saw fit to insert this proviso as a portion of section 2.

I wish to call your attention to another provision in section 5, "That the President, if he shall find it compatible with the safety of the United States and with the successful prosecution of the war, may, by proclamation, suspend the provisions of this act so far as they apply to an ally of enemy"; not so far as they should apply to an enemy, but "so far as they apply to an ally of enemy," the thought being that possibly after this bill has been in effect a short time it may be found unnecessary to maintain its provisions against an ally of the enemy, we therefore gave the President the power by proclamation to exempt allies of the enemy from the provisions of the bill.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. COX. Would that enable the President to take care of a condition between this country and Austria and Bulgaria and Turkey?

Mr. ESCH. Yes. Those are allies of the enemy, and I think there might be at the bottom of that proviso something more than is indicated upon the surface. I think it is quite evident that in the diplomacy of the United States in the last six or nine months there has been a desire not to antagonize Austria-Hungary, and in fact an attempt to conciliate her and possibly estrange her from her ally, Germany, is indicated.

It may be that this very power which we seek to give in this provision, to suspend the operation of the bill as to an ally of an enemy, may become a useful instrumentality in affecting the destinies of this war. I have not time—and in fact the matter has been gone over already to quite a large extent—to go into many of the details of this bill, but it seems to me that the one feature that has met with most criticism upon this floor is the one requiring the payment of quick assets into the hands of the custodian or depositaries, who are in turn to pay them to the custodian, and he to deposit them in the Treasury to be converted into Government bonds or certificates of indebtedness. It seems to me that this is the most characteristic feature of this legislation. While other nations have created custodians, no nation, so far as I know, has given the custodian this power of taking the money due to the enemy nation and converting it into bonds by means of which war can be continued against such nation. It is a new feature in legislation, and while at first it seemed to me to be rather impracticable, the more I considered it the more I believed it was a very meritorious provision of the bill, and ought to be supported. I can not understand how there can be confiscations if the debtor corporations in the United States hold a debt due to the alien creditor, and it is not confiscation when the Government takes over the money and converts it into Government bonds to help prosecute the war. It seems to me we are acting wisely and safely when we use this money, which no longer belongs to the debtor of the United States, but convert it into bonds to help finance the war. For this reason I believe we should sustain this provision of the bill, giving the custodian this power, and where the assets are not quick assets—and by quick assets I mean checks and sight drafts—where they are notes and bonds and certificates of stock and time bills of exchange and other forms of security, they can be held in various depositaries throughout the United States, where in fact they are now held, and these depositaries can be required monthly or semiannually or annually to report and pay to the custodian here the amount of accrued interest, or the amount of accrued dividends on the stock held in the depositary. In this way we shall marshal these funds for a common purpose, to promote the prosecution of the war. [Applause.]

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman leaves the floor, I would like to have his time extended, because he has been interrupted several times. I do not think the gentleman referred to the provisions of the bill in regard to the transmission of letters, books, and things of that kind.

Mr. ESCH. No; I had forgotten that. That is a new provision. I am glad the gentleman from Pennsylvania called my attention to it. It gave considerable concern to the committee during the progress of the bill through the committee.

Mr. DEWALT. It is on page 6.

Mr. ESCH. Yes; it makes it unlawful—to transmit or take, or attempt to transmit or take, out of the United States, in any manner, any letter, document, writing, message, picture, diagram, map, or other device or form of communication addressed to or intended to be delivered or communicated to any ally of enemy, with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that the intended recipient is an ally of enemy.

As the bill first came to us from the committee which drafted it, it practically was confined to letters, documents, writings, or messages. The committee, after due deliberation, added "picture, diagram, map, or other device," and broadened the langauge, because much valuable information might be conveyed to the enemy through a picture, diagram, or map.

My impression is that we might still further broaden that language by incorporating the words "phonographic record"; for a phonographic record in these days is one of the most important and practical means of communication.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is not what is sought to be prohibited there covered in the espionage bill?

Mr. ESCH. Not fully. We asked the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Commerce with reference to that, and a discussion arose as to whether we were not duplicating the features of the espionage bill. We considered that this was not really a duplication and even if the provisions were cumulative they would do no harm.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is this intended to cover personal correspondence between persons in this country and residents of Austria-Hungary and Bulgaria?

Mr. ESCH. It means any letter taken or attempted to be taken out of the United States.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does not the gentleman regard that as rather extreme, with our censorship and control over letters? I am referring solely to personal letters.

Mr. ESCH. Yes; I know. There was correspondence presented to the committee by an organization in the city of New York, asking that the bill be so amended as to permit the sending out and receipt of what were designated as family or domestic letters—that is, letters between members of a family; but the committee did not deem it wise to open the bill to such enlargement. And while I can realize how gratifying it would be to members of a family resident in the United States to receive communications from their relatives resident in the enemy countries and vice versa, still I am afraid that if you open the door through the private letter, even though it be of domestic concern, it may be possible at a time of danger to communicate information of great value to the enemy. In illustration of that let me say that during the cutting-in process at the Sayville and Tuckerton wireless stations here a year ago the cutting-in station found that a certain message was being repeated in varied form for some days at a time. The message was even pathetic, stating in substance that little Emily died on such and such a day and was buried in such a part of the cemetery. On its face a message of that kind would have no ulterior significance whatsoever. Yet because the statement of the death of little Emily was repeated it gave in the end a clue through which the key to the message was discovered; and a similar experience has occurred in reference to one of the other wireless stations of the United States. Therefore how easy it might be in a domestic letter to convey some such simple, pathetic domestic message, which might have lying behind it and beneath it information of the very gravest importance.

While I sympathize most sincerely—because I myself have relatives in this very situation—with those who seek to get news from friends and relatives in enemy countries, still as a safeguard we should prohibit the taking out of the United States of any letter, even though it be a domestic letter, addressed to an enemy country. [Applause.]

Mr. SNOOK. Calling the gentleman's attention to the latter part of section 5, which provides for the issuance of licenses by the Secretary of Commerce under the direction of the President, and to which he has referred in connection with the question of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HULBERT], would it not be possible under this provision of the section if the President or the Secretary of Commerce should find that a partnership or an individual of this kind was doing a business which was not in contravention with the interests of the United States, or against the successful prosecution of the war, to license such a firm or person to carry on that business?

Mr. ESCH. I rather think that that might meet the situation and take care of the partnership business that he had reference to.

Mr. SNOOK. So wherever there was a partnership or firm pursuing a legitimate business, and the money was not reaching the enemy, they could be licensed.

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

There is one other feature of the bill that has not been adverted to, and to which I wish to call attention. That is subsection (c) on page 5, being the part of section 3 making it unlawful to transport or attempt to transport an enemy with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that the person transported or attempted to be transported is an enemy. This does not merely include transportation of an enemy from the United States to the enemy country or to an ally of the enemy, or to any other foreign country, but it is broad enough to cover transportation within the limits of the United States; for it is possible to conceive how the transportation of a person from New York to El Paso, Tex., might be of aid to the enemy, that person carrying messages and documents to some central station in Mexico, where they might be transmitted by wireless to a station in Spain or elsewhere.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand the gentleman's interpretation of that provision to be that it would prevent or prohibit the transportation in this country of any alien enemy domiciled in this country?

Mr. ESCH. It is broad enough to do that. It says—transport or attempt to transport an enemy.

Mr. STAFFORD. Ah, but the word "enemy" has been previously defined by subsections (a) and (b) of section 2.

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. And those subsections do not include an enemy domiciled in this country——

Mr. ESCH. That is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. Unless the President under subsection (c) should include other individuals.

Mr. ESCH. That is true, unless he includes them in the definition of enemy. It would not prohibit alien enemies resident in this country from being transported unless and until they were classed as enemies by proclamation of the President.

Mr. STAFFORD. So it would not prohibit the transportation of an alien enemy living in this country unless he had been designated as such under subdivision (c).

Mr. ESCH. That is true.

Mr. ELSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. I will.

Mr. ELSTON. In regard to the powers of the custodian, would it reach so far as to permit the executor or administrator to turn over to the custodian undistributed interest in personal property of an enemy heir and get thereby from the custodian his discharge from the court?

Mr. ESCH. I do not know whether it would operate as a discharge from the court, but I rather think he would have to report to the custodian.

Mr. ELSTON. That is a situation that would occur in almost any lawyer's office. The transfer of legal title to real property would have to go to the custodian, and he might have to pay taxes and retransfer it at the end of the war to the German heir. Has the committee considered all these possibilities in regard to the obligations of an executor of enemy heirs?

Mr. ESCH. I do not know as to the members of the committee giving so much study to all the features of the bill and its ramifications, but the war committee of the Cabinet, assisted by Mr. Warren, Assistant Attorney General, and Mr. Woolsey, of the State Department, and Mr. Pratt of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, all gave very full consideration to the bill, and received hundreds of communications from all parts of the United States on almost every conceivable phase of the situation.

Mr. ELSTON. Another case would be where a mortgage debt is due to an alien enemy residing outside, where the money would be paid to the custodian and the question would be whether a release of that mortgage could be made by the custodian and thereby clear the property.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, how does the time stand now?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin has consumed 1 hour and 21 minutes and the gentlemen on the other side 2 hours and 10 minutes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is not my intention to detain this large and intelligent and, I trust, enthusiastic audience of about 40 Congressmen for a great while. [Laughter.] I hardly know just what I am going to talk about, but will venture a few random shots concerning the food bill which recently passed this House and is now in the hands of its enemy, the Senate. [Laughter.] I may also make a few remarks about some other matters.

The Senate for some days has been solemnly if not prayerfully wrestling with this gigantic problem, and the last I noticed of its proceedings had arrived at the conclusion—or at least some of the distinguished and hereafter may be extinguished Members of that body had—that the Constitution is a mere scrap of unenforcable paper, not in effect during war, and not binding among friends in any event. [Laughter.]

I have always been taught that the Constitution is the supreme law of this land, and in full force and effect in war as well as in peace. I believe such was the intent of the founders of this Republic. The Constitution was ratified by the States as a covenant between them and the General Government and as the ark of the people's safety. As the waves of the sea during the mightiest storm can not beat beyond the immovable bulwark of the rock-bound shore, so legislation can not rightfully and legally pass beyond the well-marked lines of constitutional limitation without grave danger to the permanency of our institutions. [Applause.]

It appears to me that the other end of the Capitol had forgotten there is such a thing as the Federal Constitution until the question of alcoholic beverages came up in that body in the food-bill discussion, when suddenly eyeglasses were cleaned and adjusted. The Constitution was dragged from moldy shelves, cobwebs were brushed away, and then it was discovered that it is unconstitutional to prohibit the use of grain in the manufacture of alcoholic liquors. [Applause.]

In the history of the world there have been three great law-giving nations—Babylonia, Rome, and England. The beginning of law is lost in the mists of antiquity. The force of custom and the force of arms are the original and continuing forces behind all law, and I presume will be until the end of time, if time shall ever end.

From before the time of the code of Hammurabi, which antedates the Mosaic law by thousands of years, men have fought and killed and murdered to establish what they call law, which, in the main, has been power and exemptions for the strong and injustice for the weak and ignorant.

All nations have fallen because they have ignored and violated their own fundamental laws of right, written or unwritten. Greece, which borrowed the laws and shone in the reflected light of Babylonia, was first a monarchy, then an oligarchy, afterwards a democracy, and last a despotism—and then fell because of violations of its own just and organic laws.

It seems to me that we, in inverse ratio, are traveling the same road that Greece and most other nations traveled before us. We begun as a democracy, with reverence and regard for the Constitution of our country. Now, I fear we are tending toward an oligarchy and, in violation of the Constitution, autocratic powers are granted the Government and the Constitution itself is declared to be but a scrap of paper, not binding during war. [Applause.]

However, I intended to say something about the food bill. I, as most of you, voted for it as it passed the House. I had grave doubts then, and still have, as to the expediency of that bill as passed. I fear it does not strike at the root of the evil of high prices. I fear that the farmer and the small dealer will be the ones who will be injured by it, while the food speculator and manipulator will continue his nefarious practices. I fear that the price of food products while in possession of the farmer will be forced down, and when he has parted with the products of his toil prices will then go up. I hope this will not occur; and realizing the fact that it is imperative that something be done to put a halter on the vultures of food manipulation I was willing to vote for any measure that gives any promise of relief. Matters in any event can not be made worse, and I hope will be made better. What the food bill means, I do not know, and none of you know. That will be largely a matter of construction, and that construction will be determined by the officials whose duty it is to enforce the law; and what that may be is as difficult to foretell as how a jury will decide a case or whom a woman will marry. [Laughter.]

In these latter days when things go wrong in governmental matters the custom is to appoint a committee of investigation or a commission to look after and remedy the matter. We have so many commissions now that I can hardly keep track of the number. If any of them have ever accomplished anything for the betterment of the Government or for the relief of the people, I have failed so far to discover what it is. They all draw large salaries, and about all they have ever done so far as I know is to draw their salaries and their breath. [Laughter.]

Any law to be of value must be practically administered. An ounce of practice is worth more than a pound of theory any time. I believe in this Government we now have employed many persons who never made one blade of grass grow, much less two grow where one only grew before, advising farmers who have tilled the soil all their lives just how to farm. The farmers of the country, men of practical experience, who by their labor are feeding the greater part of the world, do not take as kindly as may be imagined to that sort of thing.

I believe that the persons who by common report will administer the food bill are enthusiastic and withal honest theorists without any practical experience in that line of work. I believe that the reputed controller of the food problem is lifted by his own ideas far above the earth. He is soaring above the clouds and dwelling in that mystic region peopled by the stars. Therefore we have the advocacy of wheatless and meatless days for the people of this Republic, as well as placing all the women in 90-cent uniforms. In these days of high prices I hardly know how a woman would look in a 90-cent uniform, especially when, as I am informed, about a dollar is the prevailing price of a pair of stockings of any worth at all. Women wear few enough clothes these days anyway, and 90-cent uniforms might exceed the limit. If all the women could be induced to wear 90-cent uniforms, it would bring a nice profit to the manufacturers of the cloth of which the uniforms are to be made, but I do not see how that would lessen the price of food or teach women how to cook. [Applause.]

Not long since a young man of my town enlisted in the service and was assigned to the Artillery. He is now at Fort Sam Houston, Tex., having a glorious time according to his own description of conditions there. Recently he wrote a letter home, which was published in the local paper. Among other things he says:

> They sure do feed us here. Every thing you can think of. Fresh vegetables, pie, cakes, lots of meat, biscuits; always coffee for breakfast. Then for dinner or supper we had roast, green peas, new corn on the cob, potatoes, lemonade, peach pie, and light bread, and all cooked just fine. We have sure got good cooks, and it makes no difference what we have to eat there is always plenty of it. You can help yourself three, four, or five times if you want to.

What glorious appetites those soldier boys must have to help themselves five times. No wonder the Government is calling on the common citizen for wheatless and meatless days. You gentlemen who advocate meatless and wheatless days for the people who produce the meat and wheat will observe how the soldiers at Fort Sam Houston are entertained at the expense of those you desire to go meatless and wheatless.

Mr. HULBERT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. HULBERT. Does not the gentleman think that letter would stimulate recruiting?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not know whether it will or not. It might in case of those who are hungry. There is not a hotel in Washington that will furnish as good a bill of fare of fresh uncold-storage food as the one I have just read, and yet the proposition is to make the majority of the people go meatless and wheatless and the women wear 90-cent uniforms, that the soldiers may live on pie and cake and ice cream and roast beef, and fare sumptuously every day. I think the soldiers should be well fed and clothed, but not better than the people who furnish the food and clothing. [Applause.]

But presto, veto, change. The 90-cent uniform has suddenly gone up to $2.95 at the stores. Uniform all the women in the United States in 90-cent uniforms of cheap, shoddy material, at $2.95 per uniform, and somebody will of course get rich. Who gets the profit? Not the women who buy the uniforms.

It is argued in some official quarters that we must save our wheat for the allies, because the allies can not eat corn bread. That is to say, the people of America must eat corn bread and send their wheat to the allies, because the fastidious stomachs of the allies can not stand the strain of corn meal. And then, besides, we are loaning them the money to buy our wheat, and it is selling for much lower prices in Europe than the food manipulators will permit it to be sold here, and it is expected to remedy this condition of affairs by furnishing the women with 90-cent uniforms at $2.95 per uniform.

As I stated before, it seems to have been suddenly discovered at the other end of the Capitol that the part of the bill which restrains the activities of John Barleycorn is unconstitutional. That is quite a discovery, if true, but I can not see why it is constitutional to control the prices and output of wheat, corn, and fuel, and at the same time be unconstitutional to interfere in any way with the manufacture of alcoholic beverages. And no one else can, as for that matter. If it is unconstitutional in the one case, it is in the others.

While meatless and wheatless days are being demanded we see so-called patriots trying to amend the food bill so as to permit the use of millions of bushels of grain in the manufacture of fermented liquors, and in New York an organization has been started with the avowed purpose of using no more wheat for breakfast until the war is over.

This Government claims to have the inherent right to take the body of the poor man and place him in the Army to serve his country and be shot and most likely killed, yet there are men who claim the Government has the right over the fortunes and destinies of the common citizen but does not have the right to take the property of the rich to maintain the soldier who is risking his life on the field of battle to protect the lives and property of all citizens. They also make the absurd, indefensible, and unpatriotic claim that it is unconstitutional to forbid the use of grain in making fermented liquors. If the Government has the right to demand the life and services of its citizens, it certainly has the right to demand property in defense of the Nation and its citizens. Is a bushel of corn or barley to make liquor of more value than the life of the citizen who is willing to fight in defense of his country? Evidently there are numerous persons in this country who think so, but their ideas of real patriotism are crude, to say the least of it. I believe the country should demand bread in abundance before any grain is allowed to be used in the manufacture of liquors, if at all.

To kill an evil, one must strike at the root of that evil. A tree can not be deadened by cutting the bark a portion of the way around it. The ax must hew around its whole circumference so that the life-giving sap can not ascend to give strength and growth.

To control and regulate the trust magnates and the food pirates, the ax of strenuous and uncompromising law, enforced by unyielding and unpurchasable officials, must be laid with ability and vigor to root and bark and branch of the deadly poisonous upas tree of speculation in the food products and necessities of the masses.

We have, in my opinion, now law sufficient to control, regulate, and imprison the trust magnates, food pirates, and others who are growing rich on the necessities of the people. The Sherman and Clayton antitrust laws, if properly administered, are ample to put an end to their nefarious practices. A law that is not enforced is not a law. It is worse than no law because it breeds disrespect for all law. Laws of such magnitude and far-reaching importance should have the ablest lawyers and old and experienced practitioners to meet the able attorneys always employed by the men who have grown rich speculating in the food products of this Republic.

The amount of food products used yearly in this Republic in making beer and whisky amount to over $145,000,000, and yet the people are advised that they must have wheatless and meatless days in order that this vast amount of food products may go into whisky and beer to enrich the beer and whisky manufacturers and bring woe and poverty to countless homes. They say this is patriotism. It is not. It is graft and greed. The manufacture of whisky and beer should be stopped before the people are called upon to inaugurate meatless and wheatless days. [Applause.]

Government experts have of late been advising the women of the country to can and preserve fruits and vegetables, while society ladies who never canned or preserved any fruit or vegetables in their lives and do not know when any of these things ripen or should be planted are vying with each other in giving advice to their country sisters who know all about these things. Advice is sometimes cheap and often worthless.

The Government instead of giving sophomoric dissertations to country people about how to can fruits and vegetables had best be looking after the manufacturers of the cans in which they are to be preserved. I doubt if the Government knows it, but cans are nearly or quite double the price they were a year ago.

But alack and alas, while we have fallen on evil times every patriot will stand by his country to the very end, and that is what every true American will do despite the fact that the grafter and war speculator is abroad in the land.

I voted against conscription because I thought I was right, and I know it now. In March war was declared and we have hardly begun to assemble an army. Had a volunteer army been called for at once it would now be in drilling and nearly ready to be sent to Europe, but as it is we have not yet begun to get an army together.

War is an awful thing, but it seems to be the natural state of mankind. In the beginning Cain murdered Abel and then declared he was not his brother's keeper.

A history of war and rapine is recorded by Herodotus on the very first page of profane history, and so the long story of blood and war and desolation blackens the pages of human history through all the ages, and there seems no probability that such a state of affairs will ever cease to exist.

There are nations that are called civilized nations and Christian nations. They carry the cross and the Bible in one hand, as did the olden crusaders, and guns and cannon and poisonous gases in the other, slaying without mercy all they can, and this in the name of Christianity and civilization. It seems that Christianity and civilization are measured by the capacity to slay.

When the untutored son of the forest and plain conceives that his rights are violated and goes to war and with crude weapons kills fifty or a hundred, we call him a savage, and send missionaries to save his soul. When Christian nations, using all the methods of warfare that genius and invention can produce, kill millions, then we call them highly civilized.

And so it goes. Such things lead me to believe there is no such thing as civilization. What seems so is only a fancy of the idealist, a dream of the philosopher. That which we call civilization is merely a thin veneer, and beneath the surface lie all the vicious instincts and brutal passions of the primitive savage.

Let no man deceive himself. Our country will win in this war if it takes the last man and the last dollar. [Applause.]

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, recently the lawyers in my own judicial circuit at home met in a patriotic meeting and adopted certain resolutions which seem to me to so clearly and succinctly justify our national attitude in our present war with Germany that I thought it might be somewhat useful if incorporated in the RECORD. I will ask the Clerk to read in my time those resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

PATRIOTIC RESOLUTIONS OF BAR ASSOCIATION OF THE FOURTEENTH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT ADOPTED JUNE 29, 1917.

Whereas after a long period of patience with the most exasperating aggressions of the arrogant military autocracy of Germany and her allies, our country has been forced into a defensive war to preserve and defend her rights and dignity as an independent and self-respecting people, and to prevent the subversion of democratic government throughout the world; and

Whereas many of our profession throughout our judicial circuit have enlisted in our Nation's military service or announced their intention to enlist; and

Whereas we deem it our patriotic duty to make fitting announcement of our approval of our country's acts and purposes in the premises; and of our high appreciation of the devotion and self-sacrifice of those of our profession who have enlisted or propose to enlist in the military service; and of the purpose of our members each to do his part in such service as he can render our country in its emergency: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we condemn the military aggressions of Germany and her allies and their disposition and purpose to impose upon the world by military force, with all its horror, bloodshed, misery, and destruction, her domination and ideals of autocratic military government, and her aggressions and intolerable conduct toward our own country.

That we express our high appreciation of President Wilson's earnest efforts to secure peace to the world, and of his long-continued patience and forbearance in his effort to avert war on the part of our country, even in the face of the most aggravating and unjustifiable provocation.

That we fully and unqualifiedly approve the acts and doings of our President and Congress in declaring war and making fitting preparation for the defense of our Nation and of our ideals and principles of Democratic government in this land and throughout the world in cooperation with our allies, and we unqualifiedly condemn any and all men, measures, or dissension tending to disrupt our councils or prevent absolute unity of national action in the prosecution of the war to an honorable peace, in the most effective manner, whether at home or abroad; and be it further

Resolved, That we express our great appreciation of the bravery, heroism, self-sacrifice, and patriotism of those of our profession in this judicial circuit who have entered or will enter the military service of our country and thus uphold and maintain the traditions of our profession for loyalty and patriotism; and be it further

Resolved, That we do hereby express our desire and purpose each to do our patriotic duty and part in accordance with our respective abilities in the protection and defense of our beloved country and its institutions, to the end "that government of the people, by the people, and for the people may not perish from the earth"; and be it

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be by the secretary of this meeting forwarded to President Wilson, Senators SHERMAN and LEWIS, and Representatives GRAHAM, KING, and MCKENZIE, and that these resolutions, together with the minutes of this meeting, be, by the clerk, spread at large upon the records of this court; and that the clerk transmit a copy of these regulations to each circuit clerk of this circuit; and that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded by the clerk of this court to each of the members of the bar of this circuit who have enlisted or hereafter enlists.

—

STATE OF ILLINOIS,
Rock Island County, ss:

I, George W. Gamble, clerk of the circuit court in and for the county of Rock Island, in the State of Illinois, aforesaid, and keeper of the records, files, and seal of said court, do hereby certify the above and foregoing to be a true, perfect, and complete copy of a series of resolutions passed by the Rock Island County Bar Association at a patriotic meeting in open court in the circuit court of Rock Island County, on the 29th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1917.

Witness my hand and the seal of said court affixed at Rock Island, Ill., this 29th day of June, A. D. 1917.

[SEAL.] GEO. W. GAMBLE,
Clerk of the Circuit Court in and for Rock Island County, Ill.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time on this side.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I shall support the bill under consideration and before it is concluded shall avail myself under the five-minute rule to say something in its behalf.

Certain people persistently object to giving the President power and control over the resources of the Nation during war time. For one, I am not afraid to give him all the power necessary to bring the war to an immediate and successful conclusion. It requires the resources of a nation, men and money, to successfully fight a war. It means not only a mobilization of men and munitions of war, but a complete mobilization of all the resources of a nation, whatever the resources of a nation may be. Since the beginning of the war a Saturnalia of high prices, almost ruinous prices, to the consuming public has been the rule in the United States. I hate to think that our Nation is in the hands of a lot of high-handed pirates who, taking advantage of war conditions and without rhyme or reason, continue to boost the prices of the necessities of life; but I am constrained to believe that in a large sense this is true. The raising of the prices of the necessities of life, like the "itch," seems to be catching. The idea seems to be, as the other fellow is raising the prices without regard to the necessity of the raise or increase we are entitled to do likewise. I do not pretend to say who is responsible for this continued increase in the cost of the necessities of life, but I am of the opinion that the fault does not lie entirely with the producer of the article, no matter who the producer may be, whether farmer or manufacturer; but in my judgment the fault largely lies with the middlemen, the distributors of the necessities of life. I recently had a little experience along this line. Coming through the wholesale part of Center Market, on Seventh Street, I chanced to price blackberries, and found they were being sold by the case at $3.50 per case, a fraction of a cent above 10 cents per quart.

The retail part of Center Market was selling the same blackberries at the same time at the rate of 20 cents per quart. I found corn selling at less than 1 cent per ear in the wholesale part of the market and retailing at 5 cents per ear in the retail side of the market. I found many other articles of the same way and manner. This meant that the retailer, almost under the same roof, in the Center Market, as soon as the necessities of life came to his stand was adding on from 100 to 400 per cent profit, and by the time the same necessities are distributed throughout the various groceries in the city another 100 or 200 per cent profit is added before it reaches the ultimate consumer. These prices are abnormal, they are unjust, unfair, un-American, and unpatriotic.

The middlemen and distributors of the necessities of life are to-day adding on all that traffic will bear, and that means all the money that the laboring people and the middle class have to spend for the necessities of life. In my opinion and in my judgment, based upon some investigation of the conditions here in Washington City, the abnormal high cost of living is due very largely, if not totally, to profits added on by the retailers. Go where you will, step into what store you may, and price what article you desire, and you are quickly and promptly told you can buy the article to-day for a given price but to-morrow or next week an increase is going to be added to it. If the Department of Justice would look into the matter carefully, I think it would find a wholesome field right at its own door; and if these men are found to have entered into an agreement to raise prices of the necessities of life they should be dealt with sternly and harshly. They should be brought to the bar of justice and made feel the strong arm of the law; and I am equally sure what is true in the city of Washington is true in every city of the United States. Prices of the necessities of life are higher to-day in American cities than they are in any of the cities of England or France, and this amidst plenty and prosperity in our own Nation. Something is wrong—radically wrong—and I know of nothing to correct this wrong and evil except the Department of Justice.

This evening I desire to discuss the coal situation, especially as it applies to the State of Indiana and throughout the Central West. For the past few weeks we have read much in the press about autocratic power that is being given to the President. For one I am not afraid to give the President power during this world-wide crisis. It is the only way this war will be successfully fought. Divided power means divided responsibility, and divided responsibility also spells ruin, if not disaster, in times of war. It is true we have given the President much power, but the people should remember that he is the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. No commander of an army can successfully command it when his power is divided with subordinates. We have not given the President as much power as was given President Lincoln during the Civil War, yet no harm ever came to the Government as a result of the power given to President Lincoln. Soon after the Civil War closed war powers given the President by Congress were repealed, and the Government moved forward as it had in the past. The same thing will happen again as soon as the war is over. The war powers given to the President by Congress will be repealed. The Government will resume its normal functions, and business will again go forward in the future as in the past.

The House recently passed what is known as the food-control bill containing many drastic provisions, but every one of which, in my opinion, is not only necessary but essential to a successful conclusion of this war on the part of the United States. When the Senate will get through with this bill no one knows. The Senate has added one important provision to the bill, and that is giving to the President power to fix the price of coal. I doubt the wisdom and propriety of Congress going into details in the fixing of the price of coal, but in my opinion the price of coal should be fixed and fixed at the earliest possible date. Business men are justified in making a reasonable profit upon their investments, but if we quit the war successfully and business men keep their business intact they ought to be satisfied. It is no time for men, corporations, or copartnerships to undertake to make exorbitant profits out of business while this war is in progress. The individual or corporation taking advantage of war conditions and forcing the prices of the necessities of life to the point of being prohibitory is little short of piracy. It is not my purpose to pass a eulogy on the governor of Indiana, but in the coal situation he has done a wonderful work along this line. Indiana has a splendid public-utility law, one of the most progressive in the country. It has a splendid body of men at its head. About two months ago the governor of Indiana, through the public-utility commission, made an exhaustive investigation of the price of coal in the State. He required the public accountants of the State to make a thorough investigation of the cost of producing a ton of coal. The State utility commission working in connection with the Federal Trade Commission by deputizing in Indiana the public accountants arrived at exactly what it costs to mine a ton of coal in Indiana.

Quoting from their report:

> Our investigation has left no shadow of doubt in the mind of a single one of the five members of this commission that in this critical period prices for this necessity have been advanced to a point that we can not designate other than outrageous. This is a just statement, especially in light of the fact that this is a time of war crisis, when our people of all classes will be called on to make sacrifices for the public welfare and for the world-wide cause of democracy, and when personal greed, if not voluntarily laid aside, must be met, if necessary, by sovereign powers of the State even if the exercise of those powers in the matter of necessities must go to the extreme of either temporarily or permanently sweeping aside the individual with old asserted rights.

The public accountants found from the books of the operators of coal in the State of Indiana that it cost $1.48 per ton to mine coal at the mine. This amount covers every conceivable item of cost that should be charged up by the coal operator. It covers the recent increase of wages granted by the coal operatives, interest upon investment, depreciation, insurance, in fact every item that possibly could enter into the cost of mining coal. About two months ago I had a conversation with the governor of Indiana in his office concerning the coal investigation in Indiana. He summoned the coal operators to Indianapolis with the hope of getting them to agree upon what would be a reasonable profit per ton, and the governor informed me that one of the mine operators assured him that last year his mine lost money, when in truth and in fact the books of the same mine operator showed that his mine netted him last year $360,000.

The price of coal has gone up in Indiana in the past two years from 100 to 400 per cent. Slack has been selling in the last three months from $5 to $7 per ton. This rapid and unjust increase in the price of coal without any cause due to the inordinate greed and desire of certain coal operators to make money is an outrage upon the people. Something should be done and done quickly in order to stop the everlasting increase in the cost of coal. The governor of Indiana has the power to commandeer or take over all the coal mines in the State of Indiana, but Indiana is surrounded by large bituminous coal fields in Illinois on the west, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia on the east, and Kentucky on the south.

Having no control over the shipment of rates going into interstate commerce it would do no good in the State of Indiana for him to commandeer coal mines in Indiana, because the bituminous coal mines of Illinois, Ohio, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, and Kentucky engaged in interstate commerce would then ship coal into the State cheaper than it could be mined in Indiana.

The average freight for coal mined in the State of Indiana ranges from 63 cents per ton to $1.07 per ton. The average freight haul of coal in the State is probably 78 cents or 80 cents per ton. I have received telegrams in the last few days from manufacturers in my district stating if something is not done in the way of fixing the price of coal they will be compelled to shut down their business of manufacturing.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is coal selling for in Indiana at the present time?

Mr. COX. It sells at from $2.50 to $4 per ton—soft bituminous coal on board of cars.

Mr. MADDEN. At the mines?

Mr. COX. At the mine on board cars. The coal operators in Indiana have made liberal reductions to railroad companies for coal, as compared to what they charge public utilities and private manufacturers, but even railroads in Indiana are required to pay from $1.90 to $2.10 a ton for coal on board of cars. This is the contract railroads have made with the operators in the State of Indiana in the last two or three months, yet public utilities and private manufacturers are required to pay from $3 to $4, and in many instances as high as $5, per ton for coal. I observed recently in the press that the operators of coal mines had a meeting in which they agreed to furnish coal at $8 per ton, and the same press dispatches said that the Secretary of War had declined to pay $3 per ton for coal, as agreed upon by the coal operators. Even $3 for coal is an outrageous price and an exorbitant tax on the people.

I am informed that coal operators before the war were content with a profit of 15 cents per ton. The governor of Indiana sought to get the coal operators in Indiana to agree on a profit of 25 cents per ton, but they refused to agree to it.

England and France shortly after the war began were confronted with the same condition of affairs. Those nations undertook to regulate the price of coal to the consumer, but this failed, and then those nations commandeered all their coal mines. If the price of coal is not fixed by some authority in our country having control of the interstate shipments the same condition will come here. We will have to commandeer all the coal entering into interstate commerce.

Congress can not afford to remain idle, passive, and inactive while business is suffering for lack of fuel, for lack of coal. Something drastic will have to be done; either an arbitrary price fixed for coal at the mine or else the governor will have to commandeer the coal mines entering into interstate commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, since the war broke out in Europe there have been many enemy-trading acts passed by European countries, and especially by Great Britain, some of them by orders in council and others by act of Parliament. Those passed by orders in council, such as were published, I have printed in the RECORD from time to time and afterwards included them in the diplomatic notes which I compiled, and which was printed by order of the House in last Congress as Document No. 2111. The orders in council touching trading with the enemy were printed in the second volume of the document on restraints of trade, and can be readily found by consulting the index. I need not reprint them here. I now rise simply to ask unanimous consent that I may print in the RECORD to-night the acts of Parliament, including the Colonial Parliament of Canada, on the question of enemy-trade acts. These acts were not included in the document referred to. There are four of them by the British Parliament. Those referring to Canadian legislation were put in force by the Governor General in council under the authority of the war-measures act of 1914. This will not occupy many pages of the RECORD and it will complete that particular part of this trade relation; and I thought it might be very well to have it in the RECORD to-night to readily discern what Great Britain did on enemy-trading legislation at least as a matter of comparison while we were considering this bill to-morrow. The matter I propose to insert is correct and was prepared by the Legislative Reference Division under the direction of J. David Thompson, the law librarian.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing in the RECORD certain acts of the British Parliament, and the Colonial Parliament, to which he referred. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

GREAT BRITAIN.

TRADING-WITH-THE-ENEMY ACT, 1914.

(4 and 5 Geo. V, c. 87.)

An act to make provision with respect to penalties for trading with the enemy, and other purposes connected therewith (18th Sept., 1914.)

Be it enacted, etc., as follows:

1. (1) Any person who during the present war trades or has, since the 4th day of August 1914, traded with the enemy within the meaning of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall—

(a) On conviction under the summary-jurisdiction acts be liable to imprisonment with or without hard labor for a term not exceeding 12 months, or to a fine not exceeding £500, or to both such imprisonment and fine; or

(b) On conviction on indictment be liable to penal servitude for a term not exceeding seven or less than three years or to imprisonment with or without hard labor for a term not exceeding two years or to a fine, or to both such penal servitude or imprisonment and fine.

And the court may in any case order that any goods or money, in respect of which the offense has been committed, be forfeited.

(2) For the purposes of this act a person shall be deemed to have traded with the enemy if he has entered into any transaction or done any act which was, at the time of such transaction or act, prohibited by or under any proclamation issued by His Majesty dealing with trading with the enemy for the time being in force, or which at common law or by statute constitutes an offense of trading with the enemy: Provided, That any transaction or act permitted by or under any such proclamation shall not be deemed to be trading with the enemy.

(3) Where a company has entered into a transaction or has done any act which is an offense under this section, every director, manager, secretary, or other officer of the company who is knowingly a party to the transaction or act shall also be deemed guilty of the offense.

(4) A prosecution for an offense under this section shall not be instituted except by or with the consent of the attorney general: Provided, That the person charged with such an offense may be arrested and a warrant for his arrest may be issued and executed, and such person may be remanded in custody or on bail notwithstanding that the consent of the attorney general to the institution of the prosecution for the offense has not been obtained, but no further or other proceedings shall be taken until that consent has been obtained.

(5) Where an act constitutes an offense both under this act and under any other act, or both under this act and at common law, the offender shall be liable to be prosecuted and punished under either this act or such other act, or under this act or at common law, but shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same offense.

2. (1) If a justice of the peace is satisfied, on information on oath laid on behalf of a secretary of state or the board of trade, that there is reasonable ground for suspecting that an offense under this act has been or is about to be committed by any person, firm, or company, he may issue a warrant authorizing any person appointed by a secretary of state or the board of trade and named in the warrant to inspect all books or documents belonging to or under the control of that person, firm, or company, and to require any person able to give any information with respect to the business or trade of that person, firm, or company to give that information, and if accompanied by a constable to enter and search any premises used in connection with the business or trade, and to seize any such books or documents as aforesaid: Provided, That when it appears to a secretary of state or the board of trade that the case is one of great emergency and that in the interests of the State immediate action is necessary, a secretary of state or the board of trade may, by written order, give to a person appointed by him or them the like authority as may be given by a warrant of a justice under this subsection.

(2) Where it appears to the board of trade—

(a) In the case of a firm, that one of the partners in the firm was immediately before or at any time since the commencement of the present war a subject of, or resident or carrying on business in, a State for the time being at war with His Majesty; or

(b) In the case of a company that one-third or more of the issued share capital or of the directorate of the company immediately before or at any time since the commencement of the present war was held by or on behalf of or consisted of persons who were subjects of, or resident or carrying on business in, a State for the time being at war with His Majesty; or

(c) In the case of a person, firm, or company, that the person was or is, or the firm or company were or are, acting as agent for any person, firm, or company (resident) or carrying on business in a State for the time being at war with His Majesty.

The board of trade may, if they think it expedient for the purpose of satisfying themselves that the person, firm, or company are not trading with the enemy, by written order, give to a person appointed by them, without any warrant from a justice, authority to inspect all books and documents belonging to or under the control of the person, firm, or company, and to require any person able to give information with respect to the business or trade of that person, firm, or company to give that information.

For the purposes of this subsection, any person authorized in that behalf by the board of trade may inspect the register of members of a company at any time, and any shares in a company for which share warrants to bearer have been issued shall not be reckoned as part of the issued share capital of the company.

(3) If any person having the custody of any book or document which a person is authorized to inspect under this section refuses or willfully neglects to produce it for inspection, or if any person who is able to give any information which may be required to be given under this section refuses or willfully neglects when required to give that information, that person shall on conviction under the summary jurisdiction acts be liable to imprisonment with or without hard labor for a term not exceeding six months, or to a fine not exceeding £50, or to both such imprisonment and fine.

3. Where it appears to the board of trade in reference to any firm or company—

(a) That an offense under this act has been or is likely to be committed in connection with the trade or business thereof; or

(b) That the control or management thereof has been or is likely to be so affected by the state of war as to prejudice the effective continuance of its trade or business, and that it is in the public interest that the trade or business should continue to be carried on.

The board of trade may apply to the high court for the appointment of a controller of the firm or company, and the high court shall have power to appoint such a controller, for such time and subject to such conditions, and with such powers as the court thinks fit, and the powers so conferred shall be either those of a receiver and manager or those powers subject to such modifications, restrictions, or extensions as the court thinks fit (including, if the court considers it necessary or expedient for enabling the controller to borrow money, power, after a special application to the court for that purpose, to create charges on the property of the firm or company in priority to existing charges).

The court shall have power to direct how and by whom the costs of any proceedings under this section, and the remuneration, charges, and expenses of the controller, shall be borne, and shall have power, if it thinks fit, to charge such costs, charges, and expenses on the property of the firm or company in such order of priority, in relation to any existing charges thereon, as it thinks fit.

4. (1) This act may be cited as the trading-with-the-enemy act, 1914.

(2) In this act the expression "attorney general" means the attorney or solicitor general for England, and as respects Scotland means the lord advocate, and as respects Ireland means the attorney or solicitor general for Ireland.

(3) In the application of this act to Scotland the secretary for Scotland shall be substituted for a secretary of state, and the court of session shall be substituted for the high court; the court exercising summary jurisdiction shall be the sheriff court; references to a justice of the peace shall include references to the sheriff and to a burgh magistrate; and references to a receiver and manager shall be construed as references to a judicial factor.

(4) In the application of this act to Ireland the lord lieutenant shall be substituted for a secretary of state.

(5) Anything authorized under this act to be done by the board of trade may be done by the president or a secretary or assistant secretary of the board, or any person authorized in that behalf by the president of the board.

—

TRADING-WITH-THE-ENEMY AMENDMENT ACT, 1914.

(5 Geo. V, c. 12.)

An act to amend the trading-with-the-enemy act, 1914, and for purposes connected therewith (27th Nov., 1914).

Whereas it is expedient to make further provision for preventing the payment of money to persons and bodies of persons resident or carrying on business in any country with which His Majesty is for the time being at war, which persons and bodies of persons are hereinafter referred to as "enemies," in contravention of the law relating to trading with the enemy, and for preserving, with a view to arrangements to be made at the conclusion of peace, such money and certain other property belonging to enemies; and to make other provisions for preventing trading with the enemy:

Be it enacted etc., as follows:

1. (1) The board of trade shall appoint a person to act as custodian of enemy property (hereinafter referred to as "the custodian") for England and Wales, for Scotland, and for Ireland, respectively, for the purpose of receiving, holding, preserving, and dealing with such property as may be paid to or vested in him in pursuance of this act, and if any question arises as to which custodian any money is to be paid to under this act, the question shall be determined by the board of trade.

(2) The public trustee shall be appointed to be the custodian for England and Wales, and shall, in relation to all property held by him in his capacity of custodian, have the like status, and his accounts shall be subject to the like audit, as if the same were held by him in his capacity of public trustee, and the public-trustee act, 1906, shall apply accordingly.

(3) The custodian for Scotland and Ireland, respectively, shall have such powers and duties with respect to the property aforesaid as may be prescribed by regulations made by the board of trade with the approval of the treasury.

(4) The custodian may place on deposit with any bank, or invest in any securities, approved by the treasury, any moneys paid to him under this act, or received by him from property vested in him under this act, and any interest or dividends received on account of such deposits or investments shall be dealt with in such manner as the treasury may direct: Provided, That the custodian for any part of the United Kingdom shall, if so directed by the treasury, transfer any money held by him under this act to the custodian of another part thereof.

2. (1) Any sum which, had a state of war not existed, would have been payable and paid to or for the benefit of an enemy, by way of dividends, interest, or share of profits, shall be paid by the person, firm, or company by whom it would have been payable, to the custodian to hold subject to the provisions of this act, and any order in council made thereunder, and the payment shall be accompanied by such particulars as the board of trade may prescribe, or as the custodian, if so authorized by the board of trade, may require.

Any payment required to be made under this subsection to the custodian shall be made—

(a) Within 14 days after the passing of this act if the sum, had a state of war not existed, would have been paid before the passing of this act; and

(b) In any other case within 14 days after it would have been paid.

(2) Where before the passing of this act any such sum has been paid into any account with a bank, or has been paid to any other person in trust for an enemy, the person, firm, or company by whom the payment was made shall, within 14 days after the passing of this act, by notice in writing, require the bank or person to pay the sum over to the custodian to hold as aforesaid, and shall furnish the custodian with such particulars as aforesaid. The bank or other person shall, within one week after the receipt of the notice, comply with the requirement and shall be exempt from all liability for having done so.

(3) If any person fails to make or require the making of any payment or to furnish the prescribed particulars within the time mentioned in this section, he shall, on conviction under the summary jurisdiction acts, be liable to a fine not exceeding £100 or to imprisonment, with or without hard labor, for a term not exceeding six months, or to both such fine and imprisonment, and in addition to a further fine not exceeding £50 for every day during which the default continues, and every director, manager, secretary, or officer of a company, or any other person who is knowingly a party to the default shall, on the like conviction, be liable to the like penalty.

(4) If in the case of any person, firm, or company whose books and documents are liable to inspection under subsection (2) of section 2 of the trading-with-the-enemy act, 1914 (hereinafter referred to as the principal act), any question arises as to the amount which would have been so payable and paid as aforesaid, the question shall be determined by the person who may have been or who may be appointed to inspect the books and documents of the person, firm, or company, or, on appeal, by the board of trade, and if, in the course of determining the question, it appears to the inspector or the board of trade that the person, firm, or company has not distributed as dividends, interest, or profits the whole of the amount properly available for that purpose, the inspector or board may ascertain what amount was so available, and require the whole of such amount to be so distributed, and, in the case of a company, if such dividends have not been declared, the inspector or the board may himself or themselves declare the appropriate dividends, and every such declaration shall be as effective as a declaration to the like effect duly made in accordance with the constitution of the company.

Provided that where a controller has been appointed under section 3 of the principal act this subsection shall apply as if for references to the inspector there were substituted references to the controller.

(5) For the purposes of this act the expression "dividends, interest, or share of profits" means any dividends, bonus, or interest in respect of any shares, stock, debentures, debenture stock, or other obligations of any company, any interest in respect of any loan to a firm or person carrying on business for the purposes of that business, and any profits or share of profits of such a business, and, where a person is carrying on any business on behalf of an enemy, any sum which, had a state of war not existed, would have been transmissible by a person to the enemy by way of profits from that business shall be deemed to be a sum which would have been payable and paid to that enemy.

3. (1) Any person who holds or manages for or on behalf of an enemy any property, real or personal (including any rights, whether legal or equitable, in or arising out of property, real or personal), shall, within one month after the passing of this act, or, if the property comes into his possession or under his control after the passing of this act, then within one month after the time when it comes into his possession or under his control, by notice in writing, communicate the fact to the custodian, and shall furnish the custodian with such particulars in relation thereto as the custodian may require; and if any person fails to do so he shall, on conviction under the summary jurisdiction acts, be liable to a fine not exceeding £100 or to imprisonment, with or without hard labor, for a term not exceeding six months, or to both such a fine and imprisonment, and, in addition, to a further fine not exceeding £50 for every day during which the default continues.

(2) Every company incorporated in the United Kingdom and every company which, though not incorporated in the United Kingdom, has a share transfer or share registration office in the United Kingdom shall, within one month after the passing of this act, by notice in writing communicate to the custodian full particulars of all shares, stock, debentures, and debenture stock and other obligations of the company which are held by or for the benefit of an enemy; and every partner of every firm, one or more partners of which on the commencement of the war became enemies or to which money had been lent for the purpose of the business of the firm by a person who so became an enemy, shall, within one month after the commencement of this act, by notice in writing, communicate to the custodian full particulars as to any share of profits and interest due to such enemies or enemy; and if any company or partner fails to comply with the provisions of this subsection, the company shall, on conviction under the summary jurisdiction acts, be liable to a fine not exceeding £100, and, in addition, to a further fine not exceeding £50 for every day during which the default continues; and the partner and every director, manager, secretary, or officer of the company who is knowingly a party to the default shall on the like conviction be liable to the like fine, or to imprisonment, with or without hard labor, for a term not exceeding six months, or to both such imprisonment and fine.

4. (1) The high court or a judge thereof may, on the application of any person who appears to the court to be a creditor of an enemy or entitled to recover damages against an enemy, or to be interested in any property, real or personal (including any rights, whether legal or equitable, in or arising out of property real or personal), belonging to or held or managed for or one behalf of an enemy, or on the application of the custodian or any government department, by order vest in the custodian any such real or personal property as aforesaid, if the court or the judge is satisfied with that such vesting is expedient for the purposes of this act, and may by the order confer on the custodian such powers of selling, managing, and otherwise dealing with the property as to the court or judge may seem proper.

(2) The court or judge before making any order under this section may direct that such notices, if any, whether by way of advertisement or otherwise, shall be given as the court or judge may think fit.

(3) A vesting order under this section as respects property of any description shall be of the like purport and effect as a vesting order as respects property of the same description made under the trustee act, 1893.

5. (1) The custodian shall, except so far as the board of trade or the high court or a judge thereof may otherwise direct, and subject to the provisions of the next succeeding subsection, hold any money paid to and any property vested in him under this act until the termination of the present war and shall thereafter deal with the same in such manner as His Majesty may by order in council direct.

(2) The property held by the custodian under this act shall not be liable to be attached or otherwise taken in execution, but the custodian may, if so authorized by an order of the high court or a judge by whose order any property belonging to an enemy was vested in the custodian under this act, or of any court in which judgment has been recovered against an enemy, pay out of the property paid to him in respect of that enemy the whole or any part of any debts due by that enemy and specified in the order: Provided, That before paying any such debt the custodian shall take into consideration the sufficiency of the property paid to or vested in him in respect of the enemy in question to satisfy that debt and any other claims against that enemy of which notice verified by statutory declaration may have been served upon him.

(3) The receipt of the custodian or any person duly authorized to sign receipts on his behalf for any sum paid to him under this act shall be a good discharge to the person paying the same as against the person or body of persons in respect of whom the sum was paid to the custodian.

(4) The custodian shall keep a register of all property held by him under this act, which register shall be open to public inspection at all reasonable times free of charge.

(5) In England and Ireland the lord chancellor and the lord chancellor for Ireland may, by rules, and in Scotland the court of session may, by act of sederunt, make provision for the practice and procedure to be adopted for the purposes of this and the last preceding section.

6. (1) No person shall by virtue of any assignment of any debt or other chose in action, or delivery of any coupon or other security transferable by delivery, or transfer of any other obligation, made or to be made in his favor by or on behalf of an enemy, whether for valuable consideration or otherwise, have any rights or remedies against the person liable to pay, discharge, or satisfy the debt, chose in action, security, or obligation, unless he proves that the assignment, delivery, or transfer was made by leave of the board of trade or was made before the commencement of the present war, and any person who knowingly pays, discharges, or satisfies any debt, or chose in action, to which this subsection applies, shall be deemed to be guilty of the offense of trading with the enemy within the meaning of the principal act: Provided, That this subsection shall not apply where the person to whom the assignment, delivery, or transfer was made, or some person deriving title under him proves that the transfer, delivery, or assignment or some subsequent transfer, delivery, or assignment was made before the 19th day of November, 1914, in good faith and for valuable consideration, nor shall this subsection apply to any bill of exchange or promissory note.

(2) No person shall, by virtue of any transfer of a bill of exchange or promissory note made or to be made in his favor by or on behalf of an enemy, whether for valuable consideration or otherwise, have any rights or remedies against any party to the instrument unless he proves that the transfer was made before the commencement of the present war, and any party to the instrument who knowingly discharges the instrument shall be deemed to be guilty of trading with the enemy within the meaning of the principal act: Provided, That this subsection shall not apply where the transferee, or some subsequent holder of the instrument, proves that the transfer, or some subsequent transfer, of the instrument was made before the 19th day of November, 1914, in good faith and for valuable consideration.

(3) Nothing in this section shall be construed as validating any assignment, delivery, or transfer which would be invalid apart from this section or as applying to securities within the meaning of section 8 of this act.

7. Where during the continuance of the present war any coupon or other security transferable by delivery is presented for payment to any company, municipal authority, or other body, or person, and the company, body, or person has reason to suspect that it is so presented on behalf or for the benefit of an enemy, or that since the commencement of the present war it has been held by or for the benefit of an enemy, the company, body, or person may pay the sum due in respect thereof into the high court, and the same shall, subject to rules of court, be dealt with according to the orders of the court, and such a payment shall for all purposes be a good discharge to the company, body, or person.

8. (1) No transfer made after the passing of this act by or on behalf of an enemy of any securities shall confer on the transferee any rights or remedies in respect thereof, and no company or municipal authority or other body by whom the securities were issued or are managed shall, except as hereinafter appears, take any cognizance of or otherwise act upon any notice of such a transfer.

(2) No entry shall hereafter, during the continuance of the present war, be made in any register or branch register or other book kept in the United Kingdom of any transfer of any securities therein registered, inscribed, or standing in the name of an enemy, except by leave of a court of competent jurisdiction or of the board of trade.

(3) No share warrants payable to bearer shall be issued during the continuance of the present war in respect of any shares or stock registered in the name of any enemy.

(4) If any company or any body contravenes the provisions of this section the company or body shall be liable on conviction, under the summary jurisdiction acts, to a fine not exceeding £100, and every director, manager, secretary, or other officer of the company or body who is knowingly a party to the default, shall be liable on the like conviction to a like fine or to imprisonment, with or without hard labor, for a term not exceeding six months.

(5) For the purposes of this section the expression "securities" means any annuities, stock, shares, debentures, or debenture stock issued by or on behalf of the Government or by any municipal or other authority, or by any company or by any other body which are registered or inscribed in any register, branch register, or other book keept in the United Kingdom.

9. (1) During the continuance of the present war a certificate of incorporation of a company shall not be given by the registrar of joint-stock companies until there has been filed with him either—

(a) A statutory declaration by a solicitor of the supreme court or, in Scotland, by an enrolled law agent, engaged in the formation of the company, that the company is not formed for the purpose or with the intention of acquiring the whole or any part of the undertaking of a person, firm, or company the books and documents of which are liable to inspection under subsection (2) of section 2 of the principal act; or

(b) a license from the board of trade authorizing the acquisition by the company of such an undertaking.

(2) Where such a statutory declaration has been filed it shall not be lawful for the company, during the continuance of the present war, without the license of the board of trade, to acquire the whole or any part of any such undertaking, and if it does so the company shall, without prejudice to any other liability, be liable on conviction under the summary jurisdiction acts to a fine not exceeding £100, and every director, manager, secretary, or other officer of the company who is knowingly a party to the default shall on the like conviction be liable to the like fine or to imprisonment, with or without hard labor, for a term not exceeding six months.

10. (1) Section 1 of the principal act shall apply to a person who during the present war attempts, or, directly or indirectly, offers or proposes or agrees, or has since the 4th day of August, 1914, attempted or, directly or indirectly, offered or proposed or agreed to trade with the enemy within the meaning of that act in like manner as it applies to a person who so trades or has so traded.

(2) If any person without lawful authority in anywise aids or abets any other person, whether or not such other person is in the United Kingdom, to enter into, negotiate, or complete any transaction, or do any act which, if effected or done in the United Kingdom by such other person, would constitute an offense of trading with the enemy within the meaning of the principal act, he shall be deemed to be guilty of such an offense.

(3) If any person without lawful authority deals, or attempts, or offers, proposes, or agrees, whether directly or indirectly, to deal with any money or security for money or other property which is in his hands or over which he has any claim or control for the purpose of enabling an enemy to obtain money or credit thereon or thereby he shall be deemed to be guilty of the offense of trading with the enemy within the meaning of the principal act.

11. (1) In addition to the grounds on which an application can be made to the court by the board of trade to appoint a controller under section 3 of the principal act, such an application may be made in any case in which the board think it is expedient in the public interest that a controller should be appointed owing to circumstances or considerations arising out of the present war, and that section shall be construed accordingly.

(2) Section 3 of the principal act as amended by this section shall extend so as to enable a controller to be appointed of a business carried on by a person in like manner as it applies to the appointment of a controller of a business carried on by a firm.

12. (1) Where, on the report of an inspector appointed to inspect the books and documents of a person, firm, or company under section 2 of the principal act, it appears to the board of trade that it is expedient that the business should be subject to frequent inspection or constant supervision, the board of trade may appoint that inspector or some other person to supervise the business with such powers as the board of trade may determine, and any remuneration payable and expenses incurred, whether for the original inspection or the subsequent supervision to such amount as may be fixed by the board of trade, shall be paid by the said person, firm, or company.

(2) Paragraph (c) of subsection (2) of section 2 of the principal act shall have effect and shall be deemed always to have had effect as if for the word "trading" there were substituted the word "resident."

13. Where a person has given any information to a person appointed to inspect the books and documents of a person, firm, or company under section 2 of the principal act, the information so given may be used in evidence against him in any proceedings relating to offenses of trading with the enemy within the meaning of the principal act, notwithstanding that he only gave the information on being required so to do by the inspector in pursuance of his powers under the said section.

14. (1) This act may be cited as the trading with the enemy amendment act, 1914, and shall be construed as one with the principal act.

(2) No person or body of persons shall for the purposes of this act be treated as an enemy who would not be so treated for the purpose of any proclamation issued by his majesty dealing with trading with the enemy for the time being in force, and the expression "commencement of the present war" shall mean as respects any enemy the date on which war was declared by his majesty on the country in which that enemy resides or carries on business.

(3) In the application of this act to Scotland "real property" shall mean "heritable property"; "personal property" shall mean "movable property"; "chose in action" shall mean "right of action"; "attached or otherwise taken in execution" shall mean "arrested in execution or in security or otherwise affected by diligence"; "assignment" shall mean "assignation"; "judgment has been recovered" shall mean "decree has been obtained"; a reference to a vesting order made under the trustee act, 1893, shall be construed as a reference to a warrant to complete a title granted under section 12 of the trusts (Scotland) act, 1867, and any money paid into the court of session in terms of this act shall be paid in such manner as may be prescribed by act of sederunt.

(4) Nothing in this act shall be construed as limiting the powers of his majesty by proclamation to prohibit any transaction which is not prohibited by this act or by license to permit any transaction which is so prohibited.

—

TRADING-WITH-THE-ENEMY AMENDMENT ACT, 1915.

(5 and 6 Geo. V, c. 79.)

An act to amend the trading-with-the-enemy acts, 1914 (20th July, 1915).

Be it enacted, etc., as follows:

1. (1) Section 2 of the trading-with-the-enemy amendment act, 1914 (hereinafter referred to as the principal act), which relates to the payment to the custodian of dividends, interest, and profits payable to or for the benefit of enemies, shall extend to sums which, had a state of war not existed, would have been payable and paid in the United Kingdom to enemies—

(a) In respect of interest on securities issued by or on behalf of the Government or the Government of any of his majesty's dominions or any foreign Government, or by or on behalf of any corporation or any municipal or other authority whether within or without the United Kingdom; and

(b) By way of payment off of any securities which have become repayable on maturity or by being drawn for payment or otherwise, being such securities as aforesaid or securities issued by any company; and in the case of such sums as aforesaid (other than sums in respect of the payment off of securities issued by a company) the duty of making payments to the custodian and of requiring payments to be made to him and of furnishing him with particulars shall rest with the person, firm, or company through whom the payments in the United Kingdom are made, and the said section shall apply accordingly, and as if for references therein to the date of the passing of the principal act there were substituted references to the date of the passing of this act.

(2) Where the custodian is satisfied from returns made to him under section 3 of the principal act that any such securities as aforesaid (including securities issued by a company) are held by any person on behalf of an enemy, the custodian may give notice thereof to the person, firm, or company by or through whom any dividends, interest, or bonus in respect of the securities or any sums by way of payment off of the securities are payable, and upon the receipt of such notice any dividends, interest, or bonus payable in respect of, and any sums by way of payment off of, the securities to which the notice relates shall be paid to the custodian in like manner as if the securities were held by an enemy.

(2) For the purpose of this section "securities" includes stock, shares, annuities, bonds, debentures or debenture stock or other obligations.

2. (1) Subsection (1) of section 3 of the principal act, which requires returns to be made to the custodian of property held or managed for or on behalf of enemies, shall apply to balances and deposits standing to the credit of enemies at any bank, and to debts to the amount of £50 or upwards, which are due or which, had a state of war not existed, would have been due to enemies, as if such bank or debtor were a person who held property on behalf of an enemy, and as if for references to the passing of the principal act there were substituted references to the passing of this act.

(2) The duty of making returns under the said subsection as so amended, shall extend to companies as if the expression "person" included company, and if any company fails to comply with the provisions of that subsection as so amended, every director, manager, secretary, or officer of the company who is knowingly a party to the default shall, on summary conviction, be liable to a fine not exceeding £100 or to imprisonment with or without hard labor for a term not exceeding six months or to both such a fine and imprisonment, and in addition to a further fine not exceeding £50 for every day during which the default continues.

(3) The custodian shall keep a register of all property returns whereof have been made to him under section 3 of the principal act as amended by this section, and such register may be inspected by any person who appears to the custodian to be interested as a creditor or otherwise.

3. Sections 6, 7, and 8 of the principal act shall apply as if the expression "enemy," where used in those sections, included any person or body of persons who is an enemy or treated as an enemy under any proclamations relating to trading with the enemy for the time being in force: Provided, That the said sections 6 and 8 shall apply as respects persons who were not enemies nor treated as enemies under the proclamations in force on the 19th day of November, 1914, with the substitution of references to the 19th day of July, 1915, for references to the said 19th day of November, and of references to the date of the passing of this act for references to the date of the passing of the principal act, and except in cases where a license has been duly granted exempting any particular transaction from the provisions of any of the said sections.

4. No action shall be brought or other proceedings commenced by a company the books and documents of which are liable to inspection under subsection (2) of section 2 of the trading-with-the-enemy act, 1914, unless notice in writing has previously been given by the company to the custodian of their intention.

5. This act may be cited as the trading-with-the-enemy amendment act, 1915, and shall be construed as one with the principal act; and the trading-with-the-enemy act, 1914, the trading-with-the-enemy amendment act, 1914, and this act shall be cited together as the trading-with-the-enemy acts, 1914 and 1915.

—

TRADING-WITH-THE-ENEMY AMENDMENT ACT, 1916.

(5 and 6 Geo. V, c. 105.)

An act to amend the trading with the enemy acts. (27th January, 1916).

Be it enacted, etc., as follows:

1. (1) Where it appears to the board of trade that the business carried on in the United Kingdom by any person, firm, or company is, by reason of the enemy nationality or enemy association of that person, firm, or company, or of the members of that firm or company or any of them, or otherwise, carries on wholly or mainly for the benefit of or under the control of enemy subjects, the board of trade shall, unless for any special reason it appears to them inexpedient to do so, make an order either—

(a) Prohibiting the person, firm, or company from carrying on the business, except for the purposes and subject to the conditions, if any, specified in the order; or

(b) Requiring the business to be wound up.

The board of trade may at any time revoke or vary any such order, and may, in any case where they have made an order prohibiting or limiting the carrying on of the business, at any time, if they think it expedient, substitute for that order an order requiring the business to be wound up.

(2) Where the board of trade make any such order they may at the same time or at any time subsequently appoint a controller to control and supervise the carrying out of the order and, if the case requires or it appears expedient to the board of trade, the board may, as occasion requires, confer on the controller such powers as are exercisable by a liquidator in a voluntary winding up of a company (including power in the name of the person, firm, or company, or in his own name, and by deed or otherwise, to convey or transfer any property, and power to apply to the high court or a judge thereof to determine any question arising in the carrying out of the order), or those powers subject to such modifications, restrictions, or extensions as the board think necessary or convenient for the purpose of giving full effect to the order, and the remuneration of and costs, charges, and expenses incurred by the controller, and any remuneration payable and costs, charges, and expenses incurred in connection with the supervision or inspection of the business, whether before or after the passing of this act, to such amount as may be approved by the board, shall be defrayed out of the assets of the business, and shall be charged on such assets in priority to any other charges thereon.

In England and Wales an official receiver may, if the board of trade think fit, be appointed controller.

(3) The distribution of any sums or other property resulting from the realization of any assets of the business, whether those assets are realized as the result of an order requiring the business to be wound up or as the result of an order prohibiting or limiting the carrying on of the business, shall be subject to the same rules as to preferential payments as are applicable to the distribution of the assets of a company which is being wound up, and these assets shall, so far as they are available for discharging unsecured debts, be applied in discharging such debts due to creditors who are not enemies in priority to the unsecured debts due to creditors who are enemies; and any balance, after providing for the discharge of liabilities, shall be distributed amongst the persons interested therein in such manner as the board of trade may direct:

Provided, That any sums or other property which had a state of war not existed would have been payable or transferable under this section to enemies, whether as creditors or otherwise, shall be paid or transferred to the custodian under the trading with the enemy amendment act, 1914, to be dealt with by him in like manner as money paid to him under that act.

(4) Where there are assets of the business in enemy territory, the controller shall cause an estimate to be prepared of the value of those assets and also of the liabilities of the business to creditors, whether secured or unsecured, in enemy territory, and of the claims of persons in enemy territory to participate in the distribution of any balance available for distribution, and such liabilities and claims shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to have been satisfied out of such assets so far as they are capable of bearing them, and the balance (if any) of such liabilities and claims shall alone rank for payment out of the other assets of the business. A certificate by the controller as to the amount of such assets, liabilities, claims, and balance shall be conclusive for the purpose of determining the sums available for discharging the other liabilities and for distribution amongst other persons claiming to be interested in the business:

Provided, That nothing in this provision shall affect the rights of creditors of and other persons interested in the business against the assets of the business in enemy territory.

(5) The board of trade may, on application for the purpose being made by a controller appointed under this section, after considering the application and any objection which may be made by any person who appears to them to be interested, grant him a release, and an order of the board releasing the controller shall discharge him from all liability in respect of any act done or default made by him in the exercise and performance of his powers and duties as controller, but any such order may be revoked on proof that it was obtained by fraud or by suppression or concealment of any material fact.

(6) If any person contravenes the provisions of any order made under this section he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor punishable and triable in like manner as the offense of trading with the enemy, and section 1 of the trading-with-the-enemy act, 1914, shall apply accordingly.

(7) Where an order under this section has been made as respects the business carried on by any person, firm, or company, no bankruptcy, petition, or petition for sequestration or summary sequestration against such person or firm or petition for the winding up of such company shall be presented, or resolution for the winding up of such company passed, or steps for the enforcement of the rights of any creditors of the person, firm, or company taken without the consent of the board of trade, but the board of trade may present a petition for the winding up of the company by the court, and the making of an order under this section shall be a ground on which the company may be wound up by the court.

(8) The board of trade shall from time to time prepare and lay before Parliament lists of the persons, firms, and companies as to whom orders have been made under this section, together with short particulars of such orders, and notice of the making of an order under this section prohibiting or limiting the carrying on of any business, or requiring any business to be wound up, shall be published in the London, Edinburgh, or Dublin Gazette, as the case may require.

(9) Where a person, being a subject of His Majesty or of any State allied to His Majesty, is detained in enemy territory against his will, that person, for the purposes of this section, shall not be treated as an enemy or as being in enemy territory.

(10) An order made under this section shall continue in force, notwithstanding the termination of the present war, until determined by order of the board of trade.

2. Where it appears to the board of trade that a contract entered into before or during the war with an enemy or enemy subject, or with a person, firm, or company in respect of whose business an order shall have been made under section 1 of this act, is injurious to the public interest, the board of trade may by order cancel or determine such contract either unconditionally or upon such conditions as the board may think fit, and thereupon such contract shall be deemed to be canceled or determined accordingly.

3. The power of the board of trade to appoint inspectors and supervisors under the trading-with-the-enemy acts, 1914 and 1915, shall include a power to appoint an inspector or supervisor of the business carried on by any person, firm, or company in the United Kingdom for the purpose of ascertaining whether the business is carried on for the benefit of or under the control of enemy subjects, or for the purpose of ascertaining the relations existing, or which, before the war existed, between such person, firm, or company, or of any members of that firm or company and any such subject; and the board of trade may require any inspector, supervisor, or controller appointed under the said acts or this act to furnish them with reports on any matters connected with the business.

4. (1) The board of trade, in any case where it appears to them to be expedient to do so, may by order vest in the custodian under the trading-with-the-enemy amendment act, 1914, any property, real or personal (including any rights, whether legal or equitable, in or arising out of property, real or personal), belonging to or held or managed for or on behalf of an enemy or enemy subject, or the right to transfer that property, and may by any such order, or any subsequent order, confer on the custodian such powers of selling, managing, and otherwise dealing with the property as to the board may seem proper.

(2) A vesting order under this section as respects property of any description shall be of the like purport and effect as a vesting order as respects property of the same description made by the high court under the trustee act, 1893, and shall be sufficient to vest in the custodian any property, or the right to transfer any property as provided by the order, without the necessity of any further conveyance, assurance, or document.

(3) Where in exercise of the powers conferred on him by the board of trade or by the court under this act or by virtue of the trading-with-the-enemy amendment act, 1914, the custodian proposes to sell any shares or stock forming part of the capital of any company or any securities issued by the company in respect of which a vesting order under either of the said enactments has been made, the company may, with the consent of the board of trade, purchase the shares, stock, or securities, any law or any regulation of the company to the contrary notwithstanding, and any shares, stock, or securities so purchased may from time to time be reissued by the company.

(4) The transfer on sale by the custodian of any property shall be conclusive evidence in favor of the purchaser and of the custodian that the requirements of this section have been complied with.

(5) All property vested in the custodian under this section, and the proceeds of the sale of, or money arising from, any such property shall be dealt with by him in like manner as money paid to and property vested in him under the trading-with-the-enemy amendment act, 1914, and section 5 of that act as amended by this act shall apply accordingly.

5. It shall be the duty of every enemy subject who is within the United Kingdom, if so required by the custodian, within one month after being so required, to furnish the custodian with such particulars as to—

(a) Any stocks, shares, debentures, or other securities issued by any company, government, municipal, or other authority held by him or in which he is interested; and

(b) Any other property of the value of £50 or upward belonging to him or in which he is interested—as the custodian may require, and if he fails to do so he shall, on conviction under the summary jurisdiction acts, be liable to a fine not exceeding £100, or to imprisonment with or without hard labor for a term not exceeding six months, or to both such a fine and imprisonment, and, in addition, to a further fine not exceeding £50 for every day during which the default continues.

6. If the benefit of an application made by or on behalf or for the benefit of an enemy or enemy subject for any patent is, by an order under the trading-with-the-enemy amendment act, 1914, or this act, vested in the custodian, the patent may be granted to the custodian as patentee and may, notwithstanding anything in section 12 of the patents and designs act, 1907 be sealed accordingly by the comptroller general of patents, designs, and trade-marks, and any patent so granted to the custodian shall be deemed to be property vested in him by such order as aforesaid.

7. Any restrictions imposed by any act or proclamation on dealings with enemy property shall continue to apply to property particulars whereof are or are liable to be notified to the custodian in pursuance of section 3 of the trading-with-the-enemy amendment act, 1914, as extended by any subsequent enactment, not only during the continuance of the present war, but thereafter until such time as they may be removed by order in council, and orders in council may be made removing all or any of those restrictions either simultaneously as respects all such property or at different times as respects different classes or items of property.

8. (1) Where the custodian executes a transfer of any shares, stock, or securities which he is empowered to transfer by a vesting order made under section 4 of the trading-with-the-enemy amendment act, 1914, or under this act, the company or other body in whose books the shares, stock, or securities are registered shall, upon the receipt of the transfer so executed by the custodian, and upon being required by him so to do, register the shares, stock, or securities in the name of the custodian or other transferee, notwithstanding any regulation or stipulation of the company or other body, and notwithstanding that the custodian is not in possession of the certificate, script, or other document of title relating to the shares, stock, or securities transferred, but such registration shall be without prejudice to any lien or charge in favor of the company or other body or to any other lien or charge of which the custodian has notice.

(2) If any question arises as to the existence or amount of any lien or charge the question may, on application being made for the purpose, be determined by the high court or a judge thereof.

9. Where a vesting order has been made under section 4 of the trading-with-the-enemy amendment act, 1914, or under this act as respects any property belonging to or held or managed for or on behalf of a person who appeared to the court or board making the order to be an enemy or enemy subject, the order shall not nor shall any proceedings thereunder or in consequence thereof be invalidated or affected by reason only of such person having, prior to the date of the order, died or ceased to be an enemy or enemy subject or subsequently dying or ceasing to be an enemy or enemy subject, or by reason of its being subsequently ascertained that he was not an enemy or an enemy subject, as the case may be.

10. (1) Where on an application for the registration of a company it appears to the registrar of joint-stock companies that any subscriber of the memorandum of association or any proposed director of the company is an enemy subject, he may refuse to register the company.

(2) No allotment or transfer of any share, stock, debenture, or other security issued by a company made after the passing of this act to or for the benefit of an enemy subject shall, unless made with the consent of the board of trade, confer on the allottee or transferee any rights or remedies in respect thereof, and the company by whom the security was issued shall not take any cognizance of or otherwise act upon any notice of any such transfer except by leave of a court of competent jurisdiction or of the board of trade.

If any company contravenes the provisions of this section the company shall be liable on conviction under the summary jurisdiction acts to a fine not exceeding £100, and every director, manager, secretary, or other officer of the company who is knowingly a party to the default shall be liable on conviction to a fine for a like amount or to imprisonment, with or without hard labor, for a term not exceeding six months.

(3) Where the right of nominating or appointing a director of a company is vested in any enemy or enemy subject the right shall not be exercisable except by leave of the board of trade, and any director nominated or appointed in exercise of such right shall, except as aforesaid, cease to hold office as director.

11. Where the board of trade certify that it appears to them that a company registered in the United Kingdom is carrying on business either directly or through an agent, branch, or subsidiary company outside the United Kingdom, and that in carrying on such business it has entered into or done acts which if entered into or done in the United Kingdom would constitute the offense of trading with the enemy, the board of trade may present a petition for the winding up of the company by the court, and the issue of such a certificate shall be a ground on which the company may be wound up by the court, and the certificate shall, for the purposes of the petition, be evidence of the facts therein stated.

12. In subsection (2) of section 5 of the trading-with-the-enemy amendment act, 1914, for the words "by whose order any property belonging to an enemy was vested in the custodian under this act or of any court in which judgment has been reported against an enemy" there shall be constituted the word "thereof."

13. For removing doubts it is hereby declared that the custodian under the trading-with-the-enemy acts 1914 and 1915, has and shall be deemed always to have had power to charge such fees in respect of his duties under that act and this act, whether by way of percentage or otherwise, as the treasury may fix, and such fees shall be collected and accounted for by such persons in such manner and shall be paid to such account as the treasury direct, and the incidence of the fees as between capital and income shall be determined by the custodian.

14. All things required or authorized under the trading-with-the-enemy acts, 1914 and 1915, or this act to be done by, to, or before the board of trade, may be done by, to, or before the president or a secretary or an assistant secretary of the board of trade or any person authorized in that behalf by the president of the board of trade.

15. In this act the expression "enemy subject" means a subject of a State for the time being at war with His Majesty, and includes a body corporate constituted according to the laws of such a State.

16. This act may be cited as the trading-with-the-enemy amendment act, 1916, and shall be construed as one with the trading-with-the-enemy acts, 1914 and 1915, and those acts and this act may be cited together as the trading-with-the-enemy acts, 1914 to 1916.

TRADING-WITH-THE-ENEMY (EXTENSION OF POWERS) ACT, 1915.

(5 and 6 Geo. V, ch. 98.)

An act to provide for the extension of the restrictions relating to trading with the enemy to persons to whom, though not resident or carrying on business in enemy territory, it is by reason of their enemy nationality or enemy associations expedient to extend such restrictions. (Dec. 23, 1915.)

Be it enacted, etc., as follows:

1. (1) His Majest may by proclamation prohibit all persons or bodies of persons, incorporated or unincorporated, resident, carrying on business, or being in the United Kingdom from trading with any persons or bodies of persons not resident or carrying on business in enemy territory or in territory in the occupation of the enemy (other than persons or bodies of persons, incorporated or unincorporated, residing or carrying on business solely within His Majesty's dominions) wherever by reason of the enemy nationality or enemy association of such persons or bodies of persons, incorporated or unincorporated, it appears to His Majesty expedient so to do, and if any person acts in contravention of any such proclamation he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor triable and punishable in like manner as the offense of trading with the enemy.

(2) Any list of persons and bodies of persons, incorporated or unincorporated, with whom such trading is prohibited by a proclamation under this act may be varied or added to by an order made by the lords of the council on the recommendation of a secretary of state.

(3) The provisions of the trading with the enemy acts, 1914 and 1915, and of the customs (war powers, No. 2) act, 1915, and all other enactments relating to trading with the enemy, shall, subject to such exceptions and adaptations as may be prescribed by order in council, apply in respect of such persons and bodies of persons as aforesaid as if for reference therein to trading with the enemy there were substituted references to trading with such persons and bodies of persons as aforesaid, and for references to enemies there were substituted references to such persons and bodies of persons as aforesaid, and for references to offenses under the trading with the enemy acts, 1914 and 1915, or any of those acts, there were substituted references to offenses under this act.

(4) For the purposes of this act a person shall be deemed to have traded with a person or body of persons to whom a proclamation issued under this act applies if he enters into any transaction or does any act with, to, on behalf of, or for the benefit of such a person or body of persons which if entered into or done with, to, on behalf of, or for the benefit of an enemy would be trading with the enemy.

2. This act may be cited as the trading-with-the-enemy (extension of powers) act, 1915.

TRADING-WITH-THE-ENEMY (COPYRIGHT) ACT, 1916.

(6 and 7 Geo. V, ch. 32.)

An act to make provision with respect to copyright in works first published or made in an enemy country during the present war. (Aug. 10, 1916.)

Whereas doubts have arisen with respect to the existence of copyright in works first published or made in an enemy country during the present war, the copyright wherein would, had a state of war not existed, have vested in any person as the first owner thereof by virtue of the application to an enemy country of any order in council made under the copyright act, 1911, and it is expedient to make such provision as is hereinafter contained with respect to copyright in such works:

Be it enacted, etc., as follows:

1. Copyright in all such works, whether first published or made after or before the passing of this act, shall be deemed to vest or to have vested in the public trustee in his capacity as custodian under the trading with the enemy amendment act, 1914; and the public trustee shall, subject to regulations made by the board of trade, have all such powers, rights, and remedies in relation to the work as such person as aforesaid would, had a state of war not existed, have had; and all copyrights so vested in the public trustee, and any money arising from the exercise of his rights as the owner of any such copyright, shall be dealt with by him in like manner as property vested in him under the trading with the enemy amendment act, 1914, and section 5 of that act as amended by any subsequent enactment shall apply accordingly.

Provided, That where, before the passing of this act, any person has taken any action whereby he has incurred expenditure or liability in connection with the reproduction or performance of any such work as aforesaid the public trustee shall, on application for the purpose being made within six months after the passing of this act, grant to him a license to reproduce or perform the work on such terms and conditions as, in the opinion of the public trustee, are fair and reasonable.

2. This act may be cited as the trading-with-the-enemy (copyright) act, 1916, and shall be construed as one with the trading-with-the-enemy amendment act, 1914.

TRADING-WITH-THE-ENEMY AND EXPORT-OF-PROHIBITED-GOODS ACT, 1916.

(6 and 7 Geo. V, ch. 52.)

An act to amend the law relating to trading with the enemy and the export of prohibited goods. (18th December, 1916.)

Be it enacted, etc., as follows:

1. If for the purpose of obtaining any license, authority, or approval for any transaction or matter under or in connection with any proclamation or act relating to trading with the enemy or for the purpose of obtaining a license to export any goods the exportation of which without a license is prohibited under any proclamation or order in or of council any person—

(a) makes or presents any declaration or statement or representation which is false in any material particular; or

(b) produces a guaranty certificate or undertaking which is false in any material particular, or has not been given by the person by whom it purports to have been given, or which has been in any way altered or tampered with;

he shall be liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding £500, or, alternatively, in the case of goods for export, treble the value of the goods, or to imprisonment with or without hard labor for a term not exceeding three months, or to both such fine and imprisonment, unless he proves that he had taken all reasonable steps to ascertain the truth of the statements made or contained in any document so presented or produced or to satisfy himself of the genuineness of the guaranty certificate or undertaking.

2. Where a person has been authorized upon section 2 of the trading-with-the-enemy act, 1914, to inspect the books and documents of any person, firm, or company, and any book or document is found by him to have been destroyed, mutilated, or falsified, any person having or having had control of such book or document shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and liable to the same punishment as if he had been guilty of trading with the enemy unless he proves that the destruction, mutilation, or falsification was not intended for the purpose of concealing any transaction which would constitute an offense of trading with the enemy.

3. For removing doubts, it is hereby declared—

(a) That in section 2 of the customs (exportation restriction) act, 1915 (which relates to penalties in respect of the exportation of goods in contravention of any proclamation or order in or of council under section 8 of the customs and inland revenue act, 1879, or the exportation of arms act, 1900, as amended by any subsequent enactments), the reference to goods exported includes goods brought to any quay or other place to be shipped for exportation in the United Kingdom; and

(b) That in section 186 of the customs consolidation act, 1876 (which relates to illegal dealings in goods subject to prohibitions and restrictions), the references to prohibited or restricted goods and to any prohibitions and restrictions includes (except where the context otherwise requires) references to goods the exportation of which is prohibited or restricted and to prohibitions and restrictions on the export of goods.

4. This act may be cited as the trading-with-the-enemy and export-of-prohibited-goods act, 1916.

CANADA.

Consolidated orders respecting trading with the enemy, enacted and put in force by the Governor General in council May 2, 1916, under the authority of the war-measures act, 1914.

[P. C. 1023.]

1. (1) For the purposes of these orders and regulations, the following expressions shall be construed so that—

(a) "Person" shall extend to and include persons and bodies of persons, incorporated and unincorporated, such as firms, clubs, companies, and municipal authorities, and, as well, trustees, executors, and administrators.

(b) "Enemy" shall extend to and include a person (as defined in this order) who resides or carries on business within territory of a State or sovereign for the time being at war with His Majesty, or who resides or carries on business within territory occupied by a State or sovereign for the time being at war with His Majesty, and, as well, any person wherever resident or carrying on business, who is an enemy or treated as an enemy and with whom dealing is for the time being prohibited by statute, proclamation, the following orders and regulations, or the common law; but said expression does not include a subject of His Majesty or of any State or sovereign allied to His Majesty who is detained in enemy territory against his will, nor shall such last-mentioned person be treated as being in enemy territory.

(c) "Enemy subject" extends to and includes a person (as defined in this order), wherever resident, who is a subject of a State or sovereign for the time being at war with His Majesty. (Br., 1916, s. 15.)

(b) "Securities" shall extend to and include stock, shares, annuities, bonds, debentures, or debenture stock or other obligations issued by or on behalf of any Government, municipal or other authority, or any corporation or company, whether within or without Canada. (Br. Cap. 79/15, s. 1 (3); Br. Cap. 12/14, s. 8; Br. Cap. 79/15, s. 8, interp. "Enemy.")

(e) "Dividends, interest, or share or profits" shall extend to and include any dividends, bonus, or interest in respect of any shares, stock, debentures, debenture stock, or other obligations of any company, any interest in respect of any loan to a firm or person carrying on business for the purposes of that business, and any profits or share of profits of such a business, and, where a person is carrying on any business on behalf of an enemy, any sum which, had a state of war not existed, would have been transmissible by a person to the enemy by way of profits from that business, shall be deemed to be a sum which would have been payable and paid to that enemy. (Br. Cap. 12/14, s. 2 (3); Br. Cap. 97/15, s. 1 (3).)

(f) "Commencement of the present war" shall mean, as respects any enemy, the date on which war was declared by His Majesty on the country in which that enemy resides or carries on business. (Br. Cap. 12/14, s. 14 (2).)

2. Any person who during the present war trades or attempts to trade, or directly or indirectly offers or proposes or agrees to trade, or has since the 4th day of August, 1914, traded, attempted, or directly or indirectly offered or proposed or agreed to trade, with the enemy, within the meaning of these orders and regulations, shall be guilty of an offense. (P. C. 2724, Oct. 30, 1914, part sec. 1, Br. Cap. 87/14. Amendment sec. 10 (1), Br. Cap. 12/14.)

3. Without restricting the generality of the terms of the immediately preceding order, it is declared that the following set forth matters constitute trading with the enemy within the meaning of these orders and regulations:

(1) Entering into any transaction or doing any act which was at the time of such transaction or act prohibited by or under any proclamation issued by His Majesty, for the time being in force, dealing with or trading with the enemy, or which at common law or by statute or under any orders or regulations constitutes an offense of trading with the enemy. (P. C. 2724, Oct. 30, 1914. Part sec. 1, Br. Cap. 87/14.)

(2) Entering into any transaction or doing any act with, to, or on behalf of or for the benefit of, any person (other than a person resident or carrying on business solely within His Majesty's Dominions) after the issue of any proclamation by his royal highness the Governor General of Canada, declaring that such person, although not resident or carrying on business in enemy territory or in territory in occupation of the enemy, was, by reason of his enemy nationality or enemy associations, a person with whom trading was prohibited, and which transaction or act, if entered into or done with, to, or on behalf of or for the benefit of an enemy would be trading with the enemy. (Br. Cap. 98/15.)

(3) Dealing or attempting or offering, proposing, or agreeing, whether directly or indirectly, to deal with any money or security for money or other property which is in the hands of the person so dealing, attempting, or offering, proposing, or agreeing, or over which he has any claim or control, for the purpose of enabling an enemy to obtain money or credit thereon or thereby. (Sec. 10 (3), Br. Cap. 12/14.)

(4) Aiding or abetting any other person, whether or not such person is in Canada, to enter into, negotiate, or complete any transaction or do any act which, if effected or done in Canada by such other person, would constitute an offense of trading with the enemy. (Sec. 10 (2), Br. Cap. 12/14.)

(5) Knowingly paying, discharging, or satisfying any debt or chose in action to which subsection (1) of order 4 hereof applies.

(6) The knowingly discharging by any party to the instrument of any bill of exchange or promissory note to which subsection (2) of order 4 hereof applies.

Provided, That any transaction or act permitted by or under any proclamation or otherwise by competent authority shall not be deemed to be trading with the enemy. (Br. 87/14, sec. 1 (2); Can. P. C., 2724.)

4. (1) No person shall by virtue of any assignment of any debt or other chose in action, or delivery of any coupon or other security transferable by delivery or transfer of any other obligation, made or to be made in his favor by or on behalf of an enemy, whether for valuable consideration or otherwise, have any rights or remedies against the person liable to pay, discharge, or satisfy the debt, chose in action, security, or obligation, unless he proves that the assignment, delivery, or transfer was made by leave of the secretary of state or was made before the commencement of the present war; and any person who knowingly pays, discharges, or satisfies any debt or chose in action to which this subsection applies shall be deemed guilty of the offense of trading with the enemy: Provided, That this subsection shall not apply where a license has been duly granted exempting the particular transaction from the provisions of this order or where the person to whom the assignment, delivery or transfer was made, or some person deriving title under him, proves that the transfer, delivery, or assignment or some subsequent transfer, delivery, or assignment was made in good faith and for valuable consideration before the publication in the Canada Gazette of these orders and regulations, nor shall this subsection apply to any bill of exchange or promissory note. (Br. Cap. 12/14, sec. 6; Br. Cap. 79/15, sec. 3, and interp. "Enemy.")

(2) No person shall by virtue of any transfer of a bill of exchange or promissory note made or to be made in his favor by or on behalf of an enemy, whether for valuable consideration or otherwise, have any rights or remedies against any party to the instrument unless he proves that the transfer was made before the commencement of the present war, and any party to the instrument who knowingly discharges the instrument shall be deemed to be guilty of the offense of trading with the enemy: Provided, That this subsection shall not apply where a license has been duly granted exempting the particular transaction from the provisions of this subsection, or where the transferee or some subsequent holder of the instrument proves that the transfer or some subsequent transfer of the instrument was made in good faith and for valuable consideration before the publication in the Canada Gazette of these orders and regulations. (Br. Cap. 12/14, sec. 6; Br. Cap. 79/15, sec. 2.)

(3) Nothing in this order shall be construed as validating any assignment, delivery, or transfer which would be invalid apart from this order or as applying to securities within the meaning of order 6 of these orders and regulations.

5. Where during the continuance of the present war any coupon or other security transferable by delivery is presented for payment to any company, municipal authority, or other body or person, and the company, body, or person has reason to suspect that it is so presented on behalf or for the benefit of an enemy, or that since the commencement of the present war it has been held by or for the benefit of an enemy, the company, body, or person may pay the sum due in respect thereof into any superior court of record in the Province where the same is payable, and the same shall, subject to rules of court, be dealt with according to the orders of the court, and such a payment shall for all purposes be a good discharge to the company, body, or person. (Br. Cap. 12/14, sec. 7; Br. Cap. 79/15, sec. 3, interp. "Enemy.")

6. (1) No transfer made after the publication of these orders and regulations in the Canada Gazette (unless upon license duly granted exempting the particular transaction from the provisions of this subsection) by or on behalf of an enemy of any securities shall confer on the transferred any rights or remedies in respect thereof, and no company or municipal authority or other body by whom the securities were issued or are managed shall, except as hereinafter appears, take any cognizance of or otherwise act upon any notice of such a transfer. (Br. Cap. 12/14, s. 8; Br. Cap. 79/15, s. 3; Interp. "Enemy.")

(2) No entry shall hereafter, during the continuance of the present war, be made in any register or branch register or other book kept within Canada of any transfer of any securities therein registered, inscribed, or standing in the name of an enemy, except by leave of a court of competent jurisdiction or of the secretary of state. (Br. Cap. 12/14, s. 8; Br. Cap. 79/15, s. 3; Interp. "Enemy.")

(3) No share warrants payable to bearer shall be issued during the continuance of the present war in respect of any shares or stock registered in the name of any enemy. (Br. Cap. 12/14, s. 8; Br. Cap. 79/15, s. 3; Interp. "Enemy.")

(4) Any violation of any provision of this order shall be an offense against these orders and regulations.

7. If a stipendiary magistrate is satisfied, on information on oath laid on behalf of the secretary of state, that there is reasonable ground for suspecting that an offense under any of orders 2 to 6, inclusive, of these orders and regulations has been or is about to be committed by any person who is within the territorial jurisdiction of said stipendiary magistrate, he may issue a warrant authorizing any person appointed by the secretary of state and named in the warrant to inspect all books or documents belonging to or under the control of that person, and to require any person able to give any information with respect to the business or trade of the suspected person, to give that information, and if accompanied by a police officer to enter and search any premises used in connection with the business or trade, and to seize any such books or documents as aforesaid: Provided, That if it appears to the secretary of state that the case is one of great emergency and that in the interests of the State immediate action is necessary, the secretary of state may, by written order, give to a person appointed by him the like authority as may be given by a warrant of a stipendiary magistrate under this section. (Br. Cap. 87/14, s. 2; 1.)

8. (1) Where it appears to the secretary of state—

(a) That one of the partners in a firm was immediately before or at any time since the commencement of the present war a subject of, or resident or carrying on business in, a State for the time being at war with His Majesty; or

(b) That one-third or more of the issued-share capital or the directorate of a company immediately before or at any time since the commencement of the present war was held by or on behalf of or consisted of persons who were subjects of, or residents or carrying on business in, a State for the time being at war with His Majesty; or

(c) That a person, firm, or company was or is acting as agent for any person, firm, or company trading or carrying on business in a State for the time being at war with His Majesty;

The secretary of state may, if he thinks it expedient for the purpose of satisfying himself that the person, firm, or company is not trading with the enemy, by written order given to a person appointed by him, without any warrant from a stipendiary magistrate, authority to inspect all books and documents belonging to or under the control of the person, firm, or company, and to require any person able to give information with respect to the business or trade of that person, firm, or company, to give that information. (Br. Cap. 87/14, s. 2; 2.)

(2) No action shall be brought or other proceedings commenced by a company, the books and documents of which are liable to inspection under this order, unless notice in writing has previously been given by the company to the custodian of their intention. (Br. Cap. 79/15, s. 4.)

9. Any person who, having the custody of any book or document which a person is authorized to inspect under orders 7 or 8 hereof, refuses or willfully neglects to produce it for inspection, and any person who being able to give any information which may be required to be given under said orders 7 or 8 refuses or willfully neglects when required to give that information, shall be guilty of an offense against these orders and regulations.

10. For the purposes of order 8 hereof any person authorized in that behalf by the secretary of state may inspect the register of members of a company at any time, and any shares in a company for which share warrants to bearer have been issued shall not be reckoned as part of the issued share capital of the company. (Br. Cap. 87/14, s. 2; 2.)

11. Where a person has given any information to a person appointed to inspect the books and documents of a person, firm, or company, under orders 7 or 8 hereof, the information so given may be used in evidence against him in any proceedings relating to offenses of trading with the enemy within the meaning of these orders and regulations, notwithstanding that he only gave the information on being required so to do by the inspector, in pursuance of his powers under the said orders. (Br. Cap. 12–14, sec. 13.)

12. Where, on the report of an inspector appointed to inspect the books and documents of a person, firm, or company, under orders 7 or 8 hereof, it appears to the secretary of state that it is expedient that the business should be subject to frequent inspection or constant supervision, the secretary of state may appoint that inspector or some other person to supervise the business, with such powers as the secretary of state may determine, and any remuneration payable and expenses incurred, whether for the original inspection or the subsequent supervision, to such amount as may be fixed by the secretary of state, shall be paid by the said person, firm, or company. (Br. Cap. 12–14, sec. 12 (1).)

13. (1) Where it appears to the secretary of state in reference to any person, firm, or company—

(a) That an offense against any of these orders and regulations has been or is likely to be committed in connection with his or its trade or business; or

(b) That the control or management of said trade or business has been or is likely to be so affected by the state of war as to prejudice the effective continuance thereof and that it is in the public interest that the said trade or business should continue to be carried on; or

(c) That it is expedient in the public interest owing to circumstances or considerations arising out of the present war that a controller or manager of said trade or business should be appointed.

The secretary of state may apply to the same court as would, within the Province wherein said person, firm, or company carries on said trade or business, have jurisdiction to appoint a receiver under the companies-winding-up act of Canada for the appointment of a controller of the firm or company, and said court shall have power to appoint such a controller for such time and subject to such conditions and with such powers as the court thinks fit; and the powers so conferred shall be either those of a receiver and manager or those powers subject to such modifications, restrictions, or extensions as the court thinks fit (including, if the court considers it necessary or expedient for enabling the controller to borrow money, power, after a special application to the court for that purpose, to create charges on the property of the firm or company in priority to existing charges).

(2) The court shall have power to direct how and by whom the costs of any proceedings under this order, and the remuneration, charges, and expenses of the controller, shall be borne, and shall have power, if it thinks fit, to charge such costs, charges, and expenses on the property of the firm or company in such order of priority, in relation to any existing charges thereon, as it thinks fit. (Br. Cap. 87–14, sec. 3, and Br. Cap. 12–14, sec. 11 (1) and 11 (2).)

14. Where the secretary of state certifies that it appears to him that a company registered within Canada is carrying on business either directly or through an agent, branch, or subsidiary company outside Canada, and that in carrying on such business it has entered into or done acts which, if entered into or done within Canada, would constitute the offense of trading with the enemy, the secretary of state may present a petition for the winding up of the company by the court under the companies-winding-up act of Canada, and the issue of such a certificate shall be a ground on which the company may be wound up by the court, and the certificate shall, for the purposes of the petition, be evidence of the facts therein stated. (Br., 1916, sec. 11.)

15. No company shall during the continuance of the present war, without the license of the secretary of state previously obtained, acquire or attempt to acquire the whole or any part of the undertaking of a person, firm, or company the books and documents of which are liable to inspection under order 7 or 8 hereof. (Br. 12–14, sec. 9 (1).)

16. Any company which in violation of order 15 hereof acquires or attempts to acquire the whole or any part of the undertaking of a person, firm, or company the books and documents of which are liable to inspection under order 7 or 8 hereof shall, without prejudice to any other liability, be guilty of an offense against these orders and regulations.

17. (1) Where it appears to the secretary of state that the business carried on within Canada by any person, firm, or company is, by reason of the enemy nationality or enemy association of that person, firm, or company, or of the members of that firm or company or any of them, or otherwise carried on wholly or mainly for the benefit of or under the control of enemy subjects, the secretary of state shall, unless for any special reason it appears to him inexpedient to do so, make an order either—

(a) Prohibiting the person, firm, or company from carrying on the business, except for the purposes and subject to the conditions, if any, specified in the order; or

(b) Requiring the business to be wound up.

(2) The secretary of state may at any time revoke or vary any such order, and may in any case where he has made an order prohibiting or limiting the carrying on of the business, at any time, if he thinks it expedient, substitute for that order an order requiring the business to be wound up. (Br. 1916, sec. 1 (1).)

(3) Where the secretary of state makes any such order he may at the same time or at any time subsequently appoint a controller to control and supervise the carrying out of the order, and, if the case requires, to conduct the winding up of the business; and in any case where it appears expedient to the secretary of state he may, as occasion requires, confer on the controller such powers as are exercisable by a liquidator in a voluntary winding up of a company (including power in the name of the person, firm, or company, or in his own name, and by deed or otherwise to convey or transfer any property and power to apply to the court having jurisdiction in winding-up proceedings under the companies winding up act of Canada, or a judge thereof, to determine any question arising in the carrying out of the order, or those powers subject to such modifications, restrictions, or extensions as the secretary of state thinks necessary or convenient for the purpose of giving full effect to the order, and the remuneration of and costs, charges and expenses incurred by the controller, and any remuneration payable and costs, charges and expenses incurred in connection with the supervision or inspection of the business, to such amount as may be approved by the secretary of state, shall be defrayed out of the assets of the business and shall be charged on such assets in priority to any other charges thereof. (Br. 1916, sec. 1 (2).)

(4) The distribution of any sums or other property resulting from the realization of any assets of the business, whether these assets are realized as the result of an order requiring the business to be wound up or as the result of an order prohibiting or limiting the carrying on of the business, shall be subject to the same rules as to preferential payments as are applicable to the distribution of the assets of a company which is being wound up under the companies winding-up act of Canada, and those assets shall, so far as they are available for discharging unsecured debts, be applied in discharging such debts due to creditors who are not enemies in priority to the unsecured debts due to creditors who are enemies; and any balance, after providing for the discharge of liabilities, shall be distributed amongst the persons interested therein in such manner as the secretary of state may direct: Provided, That any sums or other property which, had a state of war not existed, would have been payable or transferable under this subsection to enemies, whether as creditors or otherwise, shall be paid or transferred to the custodian, to be dealt with by him in like manner as money paid to him under these orders and regulations. (Br. 1916, sec. 1 (3).)

(5) Where there are assets of the business in enemy territory, the controller shall cause an estimate to be prepared of the value of those assets, and also of the liabilities of the business to creditors, whether secured or unsecured, in enemy territory, and of the claims of persons in enemy territory to participate in the distribution of any balance available for distribution, and such liabilities and claims shall, for the purposes of this order, be deemed to have been satisfied out of such assets so far as they are capable of bearing them, and the balance (if any) of such liabilities and claims shall alone rank for payment out of the other assets of the business. A certificate by the controller as to the amount of such assets, liabilities, claims, and balance shall be conclusive for the purposes of determining the sums available for discharging the other liabilities and for distribution amongst other persons claiming to be interested in the business: Provided, That nothing in this provision shall affect the rights of creditors of and other persons interested in the business against the assets of the business in enemy territory. (Br. 1916, sec. 4.)

(6) The secretary of state may, on application for the purpose being made by a controller appointed under this order, after considering the application and any objection which may be made by any person who appears to him to be interested, grant him a release, and an order of the secretary of state releasing the controller shall discharge him from all liability in respect of any act done or default made by him in the exercise and performance of his powers and duties as controller, but any such order may be revoked on proof that it was obtained by fraud or by suppression or concealment of any material fact. (Br. 1916, sec. 1 (5).)

(7) Where an order under subsection (1) of this order has been made as respects the business carried on by any person, firm, or company, no steps shall be taken for the enforcement of the rights of any creditors of the person, firm, or company, nor shall any petition for the winding up of such company be presented, nor any resolution for the winding up of such company be passed, without the consent of the secretary of state, but the secretary of state may present a petition for the winding up of the company by the court, and the making of an order under this order shall be on a ground on which the company may be wound up by the court. (Br. 1916, sec. 1 (17).)

(8) The secretary of state shall from time to time prepare and publish in the Canada Gazette lists of the persons as to whom orders have been made under this order, together with short particulars of such orders, and notice of the making of an order under this section prohibiting or limiting the carrying on of any business, or requiring any business to be wound up, shall likewise be published in the Canada Gazette. (Br. 1916, sec. 1 (8).)

(9) An order made under this order shall continue in force notwithstanding the termination of the present war until determined by order of the secretary of state. (Br. 1916, sec. 1 (10).)

18. If any person contravenes the provisions of any order made under subsection (1) of order 17 hereof, he shall be guilty of an offense punishable and triable in like manner as the offense of trading with the enemy and such of these orders and regulations as relate to the trial and punishment of that offense shall apply accordingly. (Br. 1916, sec. 1 (6).)

19. Where it appears to the secretary of state that contracts entered into, before, or during the war with an enemy or enemy subject or with a person, firm, or company in respect of whose business an order shall have been made under order 17 hereof is injurious to the public interest, the secretary of state may by order cancel or determine such contract either unconditionally or upon such conditions as he may think fit, and thereupon such contract shall be deemed to be canceled or determined accordingly. (Br. 1916, sec. 2.)

20. The power of the secretary of state to appoint inspectors and supervisors under orders 7, 8, and 12 hereof include a power to appoint an inspector or supervisor of the business carried on by any person, firm, or company within Canada for the purpose of ascertaining whether the business is carried on for the benefit of or under the control of enemy subjects, or for the purpose of ascertaining the relations existing, or which before the war existed, between such person, firm, or company, or any member of that firm or company, and any such subject; and the secretary of state may require any inspector, supervisor, or controller appointed as aforesaid to furnish him with reports on any matters in connection with the business. (Br. 1916, sec. 3.)

21. (1) Where on an application for the registration of a company it appears to any registrar of companies that any subscriber of the memorandum of association or any proposed director of the company is an enemy subject he may refuse to register the company. (Br. 1916, sec. 10 (1).)

(2) No allotment or transfer of any share, stock, debenture, or other security issued by a company made after the publication in the Canada Gazette of these orders and regulations to or for the benefit of an enemy subject shall, unless made with the consent of the secretary of state, confer on the allottee or transferee any rights or remedies in respect thereof, and the company by whom the security was issued shall not take any cognizance of or otherwise act upon any notice of any such transfer except by leave of a court of competent jurisdiction or of the secretary of state; and any company which contravenes any provision of this subsection shall be guilty of an offense against these orders and regulations. (Br. 1916, sec. 10 (2).)

22. Where the right of nominating or appointing a director of a company is vested in any enemy or enemy subject, the right shall not be exercisable except by leave of the secretary of state, and any director nominated or appointed in exercise of such right shall, except as aforesaid, cease to hold office as director.

23. (1) The minister of finance and receiver general is hereby appointed to receive, hold, preserve, and deal with such property as may be paid to or vested in him in pursuance of these orders and regulations, and he is herein referred to as "the custodian." (Br. Cap. 13-14, sec. 1 (1).)

(2) All moneys payable to the custodian in pursuance of these orders and regulations shall be paid to the credit of the custodian through such officers, banks, or persons and in such manner as the custodian from time to time directs and appoints.

(3) The custodian may place on deposit with any bank or invest in any securities approved by the treasury board any moneys paid to him or received by him from property vested in him pursuant to these orders and regulations, and any interest or dividends received on account of such deposits or investments shall be dealt with in such manner as the treasury board may direct. (Br. 12/14, s. (4).)

24. (1) Any sum which, had a state of war not existed, would have been payable and paid to or for the benefit of an enemy by way of dividends, interest, or share of profits shall be paid by the person, firm, or company by whom it would have been payable to the custodian, to hold subject to the provisions of these and any future orders and regulations, and the payment shall be accompanied by such particulars as the secretary of state may prescribe or the custodian require. Any payment required to be made under this subsection to the custodian shall be made—

(a) Within 14 days after the publication of these orders and regulations in the Canada Gazette if the sum, had a state of war not existed, would have been paid before said publication; and

(b) In any other case within 14 days after it would have been paid. (Br. Cap. 12/14, s. 2 (1).)

And this section shall extend to sums which, had a state of war not existed, would have been payable and paid within Canada to enemies—

(a) In respect of interest on securities.

(b) By way of payment off of any securities which have become repayable on maturity or by being drawn for payment or otherwise. (Br. Cap. 79/15, s. 1 and Sec. Interp. "securities.")

(2) Where before the publication of these orders and regulations in the Canada Gazette any such sum has been paid into any account with a bank or has been paid to any other person in trust for an enemy, the person, firm, or company by whom the payment was made shall, within 14 days after the publication of these orders and regulations as aforesaid, by notice in writing, require the bank or person to pay the sum over to the custodian to hold as aforesaid and shall furnish the custodian with such particulars as aforesaid. The bank or other person shall, within one week after the receipt of the notice, comply with the requirement and shall be exempt from all liability for having done so. (Br. Cap. 12/14, s. 2 (2).)

Provided that in the case of such sums as, had a state of war not existed, would have been payable and paid within Canada to enemies (other than sums in respect of the payment off of securities issued by a company) the duty of making payments to the custodian and of requiring payments to be made to him and of furnishing him with particulars shall rest with the person, firm, or company through whom the payments within Canada are made. (Br. Cap. 79/15, s. 1.)

(3) Any such person who refuses or fails to make or require the making, as the case may be, of any payment or to furnish the prescribed particulars within the time mentioned in this order shall be guilty of an offense against these orders and regulations.

25. If in the case of any person, firm, or company whose books and documents are liable to inspection under order 8 hereof any question arises as to the amount which would have been so payable and paid as provided in the last preceding order, the question shall be determined by the person who may have been or who may be appointed to inspect the books and documents of the person, firm, or company, or, on appeal, by the secretary of state, and if in the course of determining the question it appears to the inspector or the secretary of state that the person firm, or company has not distributed as dividends, interest, or profits the whole of the amount properly available for that purpose the inspector or secretary of state may ascertain what amount was so available and require the whole of such amount to be so distributed, and, in the case of a company, if such dividends have not been declared, the inspector or the secretary of state may declare the appropriate dividends, and every such declaration shall be as effective as a declaration to the like effect duly made in accordance with the constitution of the company: Provided, That where a controller has been appointed under order 18 hereof this section of this order shall apply as if for reference to the inspector there were substituted references to the controller. (Br. Cap. 12/14, s. 2 (4).)

26. (1) Any person who holds or manages for or on behalf of an enemy any property, real or personal (including any rights, whether legal or equitable, in or arising out of property, real or personal), shall, within one month after the publication in the Canada Gazette of these orders and regulations, or if the property comes into his possession or under his control after the said publication, then within one month after the time when it comes into his possession or under his control, by notice in writing communicate the fact to the custodian, and shall furnish the custodian with such particulars in relation thereto as the custodian may require. (Br. Cap., 12–14, sec. 3.)

(2) The preceding subsection shall extend and apply to balances and deposits standing to the credit of enemies at any bank and to debts to the amount of $100 or upward which are due or which, had a state of war not existed, would have been due to enemies, as if such bank or debtor were a person who held property on behalf of an enemy. (Br. Cap., 79-15, sec. 2 (1).)

(3) Every company incorporated by or under the authority of the Parliament of Canada or by or under the authority of the legislature of any of the Provinces of the Dominion of Canada, and every company which, though not incorporated by or under the authority of said Parliament or any of said legislatures, has a share transfer or share registration office in Canada, shall, within one month after the publication in the Canada Gazette of these orders and regulations, by notice in writing, communicate to the custodian full particulars of shares, stock, debentures, and debenture stock and other obligations of the company which are held by or for the benefit of an enemy; and every partner of every firm, one or more partners of which on the commencement of the war became enemies or to which money had been lent for the purpose of the business of the firm by a person who so became an enemy, shall, within one month after publication aforesaid of these orders and regulations, by notice in writing, communicate to the custodian full particulars as to any share of profits and interest due to such enemies or enemy. (Br. Cap., 79–15, sec. 2 (2).)

(4) Any such person, bank, or company, if he or it refuses or fails to furnish the information and particulars within the time mentioned in this order, shall be guilty of an offense against these orders and regulations.

27. (1) Where the custodian is satisfied from returns made to him under order 26 hereof that any securities are held by any person on behalf of an enemy, the custodian may give notice thereof to the person, firm, or company by or through whom any dividends, interest, or bonus in respect of the securities or any sums by way of payment off of the securities are payable, and upon receipt of such notice any dividends, interest, or bonus payable in respect of, and any sums by way of payment off of the securities to which the notice relates shall be paid to the custodian in like manner as if the securities were held by an enemy. (Br. Cap., 79–15, sec. 1. (2).)

28. (1) Any superior court of record within Canada or any judge thereof, may, on the application of any person who appears to the court or judge to be a creditor of an enemy or entitled to recover damages against an enemy, or to be interested in any property, real or personal (including any rights, whether legal or equitable, in or arising out of property, real or personal) belonging to or held or managed for or on behalf of an enemy, or on the application of the custodian or any department of the Government of Canada, by order vest in the custodian any such real or personal property as aforesaid if the court or the judge is satisfied that such vesting is expedient for the purpose of these orders and regulations, and may by the order confer on the custodian such powers of selling, managing, and otherwise dealing with property as to the court or judge may seem proper. (Br. Cap., 12–14, sec. 4.)

(2) The court or judge, before making any order under this section, may direct that such notices (if any), whether by way of advertisement or otherwise, shall be given as the court or judge may think fit. (Br. Cap., 12-4, sec. 4 (2).)

29. (1) It shall be the duty of every enemy subject who is within Canada, if so required by the custodian, within one month after being so required, to furnish the custodian with such particulars as to—

(a) Any stocks, shares, debentures, or other securities issued by any company, government, municipal, or other authority held by him or in which he is interested; and

(b) Any other property of the value of $200 or upward belonging to him, or in which he is interested, as the custodian may require. (Br., 1916, sec. 5.)

(2) Any such person who refuses or fails to furnish such particulars within the time mentioned, if required, shall be guilty of an offense against these orders and regulations.

30. If the benefit of an application made by or on behalf or for the benefit of an enemy or enemy subject for any patent is, by an order under these orders and regulations vested in the custodian, the patent may be granted to the custodian as patentee and may, notwithstanding anything in any statute to the contrary, be sealed accordingly, and any patent so granted to the custodian shall be deemed to be properly vested in him by such order as aforesaid. (Br. 1916, sec. 6.)

31. (1) Where in exercise of the powers conferred on him by the court under these orders and regulations, the custodian proposes to sell any shares or stock forming part of the capital of any company or any securities issued by the company in respect of which a vesting order has been made, the company may, with the consent of the court, purchase the shares, stock, or securities, any law or any regulation of the company to the contrary notwithstanding, and any shares, stock, or securities so purchased may from time to time be reissued by the company. (Br. 1916, sec. 4 (3).)

(2) The transfer on sale by the custodian of any property shall be conclusive evidence in favor of the purchaser and of the custodian that the requirements of these orders have been complied with. (Br. 1916, sec. 4 (4).)

32. (1) Where the custodian executes a transfer of any shares, stock, or securities which he is empowered to transfer by a vesting order made under these orders and regulations, the company or other body in which books the shares, stock, or securities are registered shall, upon the receipt of the transfer so executed by the custodian, and upon being required by him so to do, register the shares, stock, or securities in the name of the custodian or other transferee, nothwithstanding any regulation or stipulation of the company or other body, and notwithstanding that the custodian is not in possession of the certificate, scrip, or other document of title relating to the shares, stock, or securities transferred, but such registration shall be without prejudice to any lien or charge in favor of the company or other body or to any other lien or charge of which the custodian has notice.

(2) If any question arises as to the existence or amount of any lien or charge the question may, on application being made for the purpose, be determined by any superior court of record or a judgment thereof. (Br. 1916, sec. 8.)

33. Where a vesting order has been made under these orders and regulations as respects any property belonging to or held or managed for or on behalf of a person who appeared to the court making the order to be an enemy or enemy subject, the order shall not nor shall any preceedings thereunder or in consequence thereof be invalidated or affected by reason only of such person having prior to the date of the order, died or ceased to be an enemy or enemy subject or subsequently dying or ceasing to be an enemy or enemy subject, or by reason of its being subsequently ascertained that he was not an enemy or an enemy subject as the case may be. (Br. 1916, sec. 9.)

34. Any restrictions imposed by statute or proclamation on dealings with enemy property shall continue to apply to property particulars whereof are or are liable to be notified to the custodian in pursuance of these orders and regulations, not only during the continuance of the present war, but thereafter until such time as they may be removed by order in council, either simultaneously as respects all such property or at different times as respects different classes or items of property. (Br. 1916, sec. 7.)

35. (1) The custodian shall, in addition to his other duties as defined by these orders and regulations, keep a record of:

(a) Debts, including bank balances, due to persons resident or being within Canada from persons residing or being in enemy countries.

(b) Other property in enemy countries, including securities, belonging to persons residing or being in Canada.

(2) Any person desiring to record such claims or property may obtain the necessary forms for that purpose from the custodian, but the action of the custodian will be confined to entering upon the record claims of which particulars are supplied to him, and it shall in no way commit the Government of Canada either to responsibility for the correctness of the claim entered or to taking any action on the conclusion of hostilities or otherwise for the recovery of the debtor property in question.

(3) The custodian shall record claims against enemy governments in respect of public securities of these governments held by the claimants, but not any other claims against enemy governments, as distinct from claims against enemy subjects.

36. (1) The custodian shall, subject to all other provisions of these orders and regulations, hold any money paid to and any property vested in him under authority of any of these orders and regulations until the termination of the present war and shall thereafter deal with the same as the governor general in council may by order in council direct. (Br. Cap. 12/14, sec. 5 (1); Br. 1916, sec. 4 (5).)

(2) The property held by the custodian under these orders and regulations shall not be liable to be attached or otherwise taken in executions, but the custodian may, upon an order of a superior court of record or a judge thereof, or of any court in which judgment has been recovered against an enemy, pay out of the property paid to him in respect of that enemy the whole or any part of any debts due by that enemy and specified in the order. (Br. Cap. 12/14, sec. 5 (2), and Br. 1916, sec. 12.)

Provided that before paying any such debt the custodian shall take into consideration the sufficiency of the property paid to or vested in him in respect of the enemy in question to satisfy that debt and any other claims against the enemy of which notice verified by statutory declaration may have been served upon him. (Br. Cap. 12/14, sec. 5 (2).)

(3) The receipt of the custodian or any person duly authorized to sign receipts on his behalf for any sum paid to him under these orders and regulations shall be a good discharge to the person paying the same as against the person in respect of whom the sum was paid to the custodian. (Br. Cap. 12/14, sec. 5 (3).)

(4) The custodian shall keep a register of all property whereof returns have been made to him, or which is held by him, under these orders and regulations, and such register may be inspected by any person who appears to the custodian to be interested as creditor or otherwise at all reasonable times free of charge. (Br. Cap. 12/14, sec. 5 (4); Br. Cap. 79/15, sec. 2 (3).)

37. The custodian shall have power to charge such fees in respect of his duties under these orders and regulations, whether by way of percentage or otherwise, as the treasury board may fix, and such fees shall be collected and accounted for by such persons in such manner and shall be paid to such account as the treasury board direct, and the incidence of the fees as between capital and income shall be determined by the custodian. (Br. 1916, sec. 13.)

38. Anything authorized under these orders and regulations to be done by, to, or before the secretary of state may be done by, to, or before any person authorized by him in that behalf, and all the functions of the custodian thereunder may be performed as well by the deputy receiver general and deputy minister of finance; and for the effective operation of all the provisions of these orders and regulations the various assistant receivers general throughout Canada shall perform, in addition to their ordinary duties, such services connected with the operating and enforcing of these orders and regulations as by the custodian may be required of them from time to time. (Br. Cap. 87/14, sec. 4 (5), and Br. 1916, sec. 14.)

39. (1) Nothing in these orders and regulations shall be construed as limiting the power of His Majesty by proclamation to prohibit any transaction which is not prohibited by these orders and regulations, or by license (granted directly or in pursuance of power delegated) to permit any transaction which is so prohibited. (Br. Cap. 12/14, sec. 14 (4).)

(2) No person shall, for the purposes of these orders and regulations, be treated as an enemy who would not be so treated for the purpose of any proclamation issued by His Majesty or the Governor General of Canada dealing with trading with the enemy for the time being in force. (Br. Cap. 12/14, sec. 14 (2).)

40. The judges of the court to which any jurisdiction is by these orders committed may make provision by rules for the practice and procedure to be adopted for the purpose of the exercise of such jurisdiction. (Br. Cap. 12/14, sec. 5.)

41. No prosecution for an offense under orders 2, 3, 4, 17, or 18 of the orders and regulations shall be instituted, except by or with the consent of the attorney general of Canada; provided that the person charged with any such an offense may be arrested and a warrant for his arrest may be issued and executed; and such person may be remanded in custody or on bail, notwithstanding that the consent of the attorney general of Canada to the institution of the prosecution for the offense has not been obtained, but no further or other proceedings shall be taken until that consent has been obtained. (Br. Cap. 87/14, sec. 1 (4) and Can. P. C. 2724/1914.)

42. Where an act or default constitutes an offense both under these orders and regulations and under any statute, or both under these orders and regulations and at common law, the offender shall be liable to be prosecuted and punished under either these orders and regulations, or such statute, or at common law; but he shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same offense. (Br. Cap. 87/14, sec. 1 (5) and Can. P. C. 2724/1914.)

43. Subject to the provisions of order 41 hereof, any offense declared and any penalty or forfeiture imposed or authorzied by these orders and regulations may in the absence of any provision for a different procedure be prosecuted, recovered, or enforced by summary proceedings and conviction under the provisions of Part XV of the Criminal Code. (Can. P. C. 2724/1914.)

44. Any person guilty of the offense of—

(a) Trading, attempting or directly or indirectly offering or proposing or agreeing to trade with the enemy in violation of orders 2, 3, or 4 hereof, or

(b) Contravening the provisions of any order made under order 17 hereof, shall be liable—

(a) On summary conviction to imprisonment with or without hard labor for a term not exceeding 12 months, or to a fine not exceeding $2,000, or to both such imprisonment and such fine, or

(b) On conviction on indictment to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years or to a fine not exceeding $5,000, or to both such imprisonment and fine.

And the court may in any case order that any goods or money in respect of which the offense has been committed shall be forfeited. (Br. Cap. 87/14, s. 1 (3), Can. P. C. 2724/1914.)

45. Any person guilty of an offense mentioned in—

(a) Order 6, order 16, or order 21 hereof shall be liable to a fine not exceeding $500.

(b) Order 9 hereof shall be liable to imprisonment with or without hard labor for a term not exceeding six months or to a fine not exceeding $250, or to both such imprisonment and such fine.

(c) Order 24, order 26, order 27, or order 29 shall be liable to a fine not exceeding $500 or to imprisonment with or without hard labor for a term not exceding six months, or to both such fine and such imprisonment, and, in addition, to a further fine not exceeding $250 for every day during which the default continues.

(a) Br. Cap. 12/14, s. 8, Br. 79/15, s. 3, Br. 12/14, s. 9 (1), Br. 1916, sec. 10 (2).

(b) Br. Cap. 87/14, s. 2 (3), Br. Cap. 12/14, s. 12 (3).

(c) Br. Cap. 12/14, s. 2 (3) and 3, Br. Cap. 79/15, s. 2 (2), Br. Cap. 79/12, s. 2 (2), Br. 1916, s. 5.

46. Where a company, incorporated or unincorporated, or other body of persons, has been guilty of an offense or default under these orders and regulations, and the penalty or punishment provided as respects said offense or default is or includes a fine and whether or not imprisonment, additionally or alternatively, the company or other body shall be liable to the fine only (with any additional fine or fines provided by any of these orders and reguiations with respect to continuing defaults, and every director, manager, secretary, or other officer of such company or body of persons and every partner or member of such unincorporated company or body of persons, who is knowingly a party to the offense or default, shall also be deemed guilty of the offense or default and liable on conviction to the like fine or fines as the company or other body of persons or to imprisonment with or without hard labor for a term not exceeding six months, or to both such fine or fines and such imprisonment.

Br. Cap. 87/14, s. 1 (3), Can. P. C. 2724/1914. Br. Cap. 12/14, s. (8), Br. Cap. 79/15, s. (3).

47. These orders and regulations may be cited as the "Consolidated orders respecting trading with the enemy, 1916."

48. The order in council of October 30, 1914 (No. 2724), is hereby, as from the date hereof, revoked, and from and after the date hereof, these present orders and regulations are substituted therefor.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I received by special-delivery letter this morning a copy of the Memphis Commercial Appeal, containing a very important statement made by a wholesale grocery concern there known as the Saunders-Blackburn Grocery Co. I imagine other Members have received copies of the same article, so I shall not comment upon it at length. It is a concrete example of what conscienceless manufacturers and dealers are doing the country over. It is a shame, during this time of war, when all citizens should be sensitive to the call of patriotism, that some—and, I fear, many—large concerns, and some small ones, too, are playing the part of pirates. The pay of the great majority of the people is no longer sufficient to meet their cost of living. The situation is most serious and is becoming desperate. Prices can not be permitted to go on mounting skyward. Our responsibility is great. It is up to us to stop the looting and exploiting of the people. The food-control bill, enlarged to cover the necessaries of life, should be quickly passed. And we should remain in session to see how it works, and supplement it with other legislation if necessary.

I desire to have permission to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD the statement of Messrs. Saunders and Blackburn.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Squarely up to official Washington and to the people at home we have put it.

Night lettergrams as per copy found below were sent to Washington last night:

President WOODROW WILSON, Attorney General THOMAS W. GREGORY, Hon. HERBERT C. HOOVER, Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, Hon. WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH, Hon. WILLIAM C. ADAMSON, Hon. D. V. STEPHENS, and others:

We are wholesale grocers, dealing in a general line of food products, selling direct to the retail trade. Prior to April 1 we had in our stock a quantity of Octagon soap. Before we had sold out this particular lot of Octagon soap Colgate & Co., of New York City, who are the manufacturers and distributors of this particular brand of soap, advised us of an advance in price, naming us a revised jobbing cost price and a revised retail selling price, which retail selling price they requested that we adhere to strictly, even on the stock that we had in our warehouse and which was bought before the advance in price. We quote from their letter, which quotation is as follows:

"It is understood that the retail prices are to apply to jobbers' present stock as well as to future purchases. We believe it is to the best interests of all concerned to adhere to the above selling prices, and we will consider those disregarding them undesirable customers."

We direct your attention in particular to the two words found in the first sentence, which we designate as "present stock," which clearly indicated the desire of Colgate & Co. that we take for ourselves an extra profit on what stock of soap we had on hand at that time by advancing the price on same in conformity with their notification of such advance. Had we done this we would have received more than a legitimate profit on that particular lot of soap; also had we advanced the price on that particular lot of soap the retailer, having had to pay such an advance, would necessarily have been compelled to have added to his retail price that he might have maintained his regular margin of profit. We refused to advance our price on Octagon soap until we had disposed of the stock we had on hand. We were notified by the personal representative, Mr. Roy Freeman, of Colgate & Co., that we would henceforth be considered "undesirable customers" for the reason that we had failed to put into effect immediately an advance in our reselling price on Octagon soap. We were further notified by Mr. Roy Freeman, of Colgate & Co., that he had no option whatever in the matter and was acting under orders from headquarters in notifying us that we would not receive any further shipments of soap from Colgate & Co.

Two words in the last sentence of the quotation that has been referred to as being part of Colgate & Co.'s letter, in which they notified us of the advanced price, we call special attention to, and those words are "undesirable customers." The preceding portion of that sentence explains on what grounds wholesale grocers will be considered by Colgate & Co. as undesirable customers.

We disregarded the notice of Mr. Roy Freeman, acting for Colgate & Co., that we would not receive any more Octagon soap, and we submitted on the last day of March to Colgate & Co. an order for another carload of Octagon soap and washing powder. We received no definite word directly from Colgate & Co. until we had sent them a telegram under date of April 20, this reading as follows:

"When are you going to ship our car of soap? Answer."

Seven days later, and which was under date of April 27, we received in answer to our telegram of April 20, a telegram signed by Colgate & Co., reading as follows:

"Answering your wire, have been forced to consider your account undesirable."

We have not yet received the car of Octagon soap that we ordered from Colgate & Co.

The purpose of this telegram is to present for your consideration some vital trade facts in your avowed endeavor to restrain speculation and exorbitant profits that you may be advised of the high-handed methods that are in practice by the various manufacturers of the country.

Much talk has been made about controlling the price of wheat; much talk has been made about controlling the price of cotton; much talk has been made about controlling other products, but nowhere have we seen any talk about controlling the manufacturer. Will it be fair that the man who raises cotton; that the man who produces other everyday essentials of food be told by positive law what he shall do and what he shall not do, and allow the manufacturers of the country who deal in soap, necessary for cleanliness, even if it can not be eaten, and the manufacturers of other items just as necessary, we ask again, will it be fair to allow these manufacturers to tell us as wholesale grocers or others who may be in the same line of business what price we and they shall obtain in the resale price of their products?

If we haven't got a law now that will make it possible for a wholesale grocer or a retail merchant to so conduct his business as will afford the consuming public the lowest possible price that can be effected by up-to-date methods and close scrutiny of all details, won't it be possible, in the consideration of the food bill that is now before Congress, that there be incorporated in that bill such provision as will make it impossible for a manufacturer to be so high-handed in his methods as will allow him to control the wholesale grocer's resale price and the retailer's price down to the consumer? Is the manufacturer to be the mighty lord of our country, while everybody else in every walk of life makes sacrifices and gives up part of his heretofore personal freedom? Patriotism, we believe, should dwell in the manufacturer's office as well as in the most humble place of the wholesale grocer and the retail merchant, and certainly, if a wholesale grocer pays a manufacturer the price that he asks for his goods, such a wholesale grocer most assuredly should have the protection of the law in naming his own price, even if the law does not now give him the right to have such protection in his rights of free merchandising as will make it a crime for a manufacturer to dictate to a wholesale grocer or to a retail merchant what profit he shall charge to him who may buy from him.

The writer of this telegram can furnish data upon data showing the injustice; showing the domineering spirit that prevails in manufacturing circles as it concerns those who buy from the said manufacturer; the writer can show that the firm of which he is president is conducting practically the largest wholesale grocery business in Memphis; he can show that this is being done at an overhead expense account of approximately 4 per cent on our sales less than similar institutions.

Is it patriotism that we keep this extra 4 per cent or isn't it a higher order of patriotism that we be allowed under the law, by its protection, to pass this saving of 4 per cent on through the retailer's hands down to the consumer?

We have been forced ever since we have been in business by the browbeating of various manufacturers to exact of the retailer a higher percentage of profit than was necessary for us to show satisfactory earning power, but what could we do except to submit to the domination of the manufacturer when he stood with a stick drawn at our heads, with the warning that if we didn't do like he said to do we could not buy any more goods from him? What would it have booted us had we acted stubborn and sold goods at a margin of profit which we could have afforded to have sold them. Had we not been able to have received any further goods we would have been out of business and the manufacturer would still be in with the shouting applause of those wholesale grocers who have a top-heavy expense account.

The writer of this telegram will appear before any committee in Washington at his own expense and elucidate the facts that have been broadly touched upon in the foregoing. In truth, he will be glad to render such a service to the consumers of the country.

Should it be desired that the writer appear before any committee and give any further information, a telegram indicating such desire will receive personal response of the writer at Washington at the appointed time.

SAUNDERS-BLACKBURN GROCERY CO.,
By CLARENCE SAUNDERS, President.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 4960 and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. KREIDER was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of illness.

SUBSTITUTE REPRINT OF H. R. 4960.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the committee substitute for the bill H. R. 4960 may be printed as an amendment for that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the committee substitute for the bill H. R. 4960 be printed in bill form as an amendment to that bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman's request was to reprint the bill——

Mr. MONTAGUE. As an amendment.

Mr. MANN. With the committee amendment printed as a substitute amendment, so it would be all together.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the bill referred to be reprinted with the committee amendment as a substitute amendment, all together. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed joint resolutions and bills of the following titles:

On June 21, 1917:

H. J. Res. 105. Joint resolution to correct an error in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1918; and

H. R. 3673. An act to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, as amended by the acts of August 4, 1914, August 15, 1914, March 3, 1915, and September 7, 1916.

On July 9, 1917:

H. R. 3548. An act providing for the modification of the designs of the current quarter dollar; and

S. J. Res. 67. Joint resolution to fix the status and rights of officers of the Public Health Service when serving with the Coast Guard, the Army, or the Navy.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 33. Joint resolution to relieve the owners of mining claims who have been mustered into the military or naval service of the United States as officers or enlisted men from performing assessment work during the term of such service.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SHOUSE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask for an indefinite leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. AYRES, on account of serious illness in his family.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks indefinite leave of absence for his colleague, Mr. AYRES, on account of illness in his family. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m. the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, July 10, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. EVANS: A bill (H. R. 5332) authorizing the State of Montana to select other lands in lieu of lands in section 16, township 2 north, range 30 east, within the limits of the Huntley irrigation project and the ceded portion of Crow Indian Reservation in said State; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. MILLER of Minnesota: A bill (H. R. 5333) to supplement existing legislation relative to the United States Court for China and to increase the serviceability thereof; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. MOON: A bill (H. R. 5334) providing for the issuance of a special Red Cross stamp and fixing a rate for the transmission of first-class mail matter by the American Red Cross, its chapters, and the auxiliaries thereof; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 5335) to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River near Warfield, Ky., and Kermit, W. Va., authorized by an act approved January 28, 1916; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CARAWAY: A bill (H. R. 5336) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across Little River at or near the foot of the gar hole, about one-half mile south of the Jonesboro, Lake City & Eastern Railway bridge across Little River, Ark.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ADAMSON: A bill (H. R. 5337) to prevent cheating and swindling in interstate and foreign commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5338) extending the benefits of care and treatment by the Public Health Service to seamen on vessels used in the service of the United States; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5339) to prohibit the slaughter, sale, purchase, shipment, and transportation through interstate commerce of calves and cows under certain ages and conditions; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5340) to regulate the importation of viruses, serums, toxins, and analogous products, to regulate interstate traffic in said articles, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5341) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5342) to authorize common carriers in interstate commerce to contract with newspapers for publication of schedules and other information, and issue receipts good for payment of transportation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5343) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent cruelty to animals while in transit by railroad or other means of transportation from one State or Territory or the District of Columbia into or through another State or Territory or the District of Columbia and repealing sections 4386, 4387, 4388, 4389, and 4390 of the United States Revised Statutes," approved June 29, 1906; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5344) to provide Federal aid for public roads; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5345) to regulate the personnel of the Coast Guard; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5346) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5347) to provide divisions of mental hygiene and rural sanitation in the United States Public Health Service; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5348) to regulate the interstate use of automobiles and all self-propelled vehicles which use the public highways in interstate commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5349) to amend an act entitled "An act to change the name of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service to the Public Health Service, to increase the pay of officers of said service, and for other purposes," approved August 14, 1912; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BLANTON: A bill (H. R. 5350) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to expend funds for drainage purposes; to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

By Mr. HADLEY: A bill (H. R. 5351) providing for the disposal of certain lands in block 32, in the city of Port Angeles, State of Washington; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. DYER: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 118) creating a joint committee from the membership of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary and the House Committee on the Judiciary to investigate the causes that led to the murdering, the lynching, the burning, and the drowning of innocent citizens of the United States at East St. Louis, Ill., on July 2, 1917; whether the Constitution and laws of the United States were violated; and what legislation, if any, is needed to prevent like outrages in the State of Illinois and other States and Territories of the United States; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 119) to provide for an official county war record of all men in the service of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CLAYPOOL: A bill (H. R. 5352) granting a pension to Theresa Emma Bright; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FAIRFIELD: A bill (H. R. 5353) granting an increase of pension to Mason Malott; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GOOD: A bill (H. R. 5354) granting an increase of pension to Catharine D. Houver; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KEY of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 5355) granting an increase of pension to David E. Rench; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5356) granting an increase of pension to Richard M. J. Monroe; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McKENZIE: A bill (H. R. 5357) granting an increase of pension to John Hatch; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 5358) for the relief of James Strachan; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. OSBORNE: A bill (H. R. 5359) granting a pension to Miriam R. McCauley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5360) granting a pension to Anna M. Moore; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5361) granting a certificate of merit or distinguished-service medal to John Faraday James; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RAMSEYER: A bill (H. R. 5362) granting an increase of pension to Robert M. Rice; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5363) granting a pension to Sabra J. Swisher; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROBBINS: A bill (H. R. 5364) granting an increase of pension to Dr. Joseph W. McKee; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SELLS: A bill (H. R. 4365) granting a pension to Lizzie Broyles; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHOUSE: A bill (H. R. 5366) granting a pension to Ellen J. Barnard; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Idaho: A bill (H. R. 5367) for the relief of Fred Larsen; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Memorial of the Second Baptist Church of St. Charles, Mo., favoring prohibition as a war measure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of Kansas State Council of Defense, relative to fixing the price of wheat; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also (by request), memorial of Virginia Branch of National Woman's Party, favoring suffrage for women; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ANTHONY: Petition of business men of Holton, Kans., favoring passage of House bill 4737; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. BROWNING: Petition of Camden County Medical Society, favoring amendments to the Army and Navy laws to increase the pay of all members of the Medical Reserve Corps 50 per cent during their active service; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BURROUGHS: Memorial of Bay Grange, of Sanbornton, N. H., favoring passage of food-control bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, memorial of Wicwas Grange, of Meredith, and Mount Belknap Grange, of Gilford, N. H., favoring passage of food-control bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, memorial of Merrimack Valley Circuit Epworth League, of Salem, N. H., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Tri-State Conference of Social Workers, of Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont, favoring national prohibition as a war measure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CAREW: Memorial of Indiana State Council of Defense, relative to fixing the price of coal; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of 1,476 wholesale liquor dealers of the State of New York, against any prohibition measure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CARY: Telegrams from Henry Balzer and other citizens; also from president of Wisconsin Association of Wholesale Liquor Dealers, all of Milwaukee, Wis., protesting against passage of Cummins amendment; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of Mark J. Forecke, Michael W. Nowak, Walter English, William J. Nachtsheim, Louis Tons, and A. C. Juul, all of Milwaukee, Wis., protesting against any prohibition legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Charles E. Kubicek and George L. Tifft, of Milwaukee, Wis., urging the immediate passage of the daylight-saving bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. DALE of New York: Petition of United Singers of Brooklyn, N. Y., against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DOOLING: Petition of American Newspaper Publishers' Association, against war tax upon newspaper business; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ESCH: Petitions of the Permanent Temperance Committee of the General Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church and the National Legislative Conference, favoring prohibition as a war measure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Mrs. B. W. Colby and others, of Loyal, Wis., favoring prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of National Woman's Party, Virginia branch, favoring passage of woman-suffrage amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: Petition of citizens of the Borough of Brooklyn, State of New York, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FOCHT: Petition from citizens of Greencastle, Huntingdon, and Lewistown, Pa., favoring prohibition as a war measure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of the Protestant Churches, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and the antisaloon forces, of Sandwich; Rev. Walter Spence, pastor of the First Congregational Church of Peru; N. T. Morley, of Yorkville; and the Swedish Temperance Union, of Rockford, all in the State of Illinois, for national prohibition of the liquor traffic as a war measure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Forest City National Bank, of Rockford; First National Bank of De Kalb; Farmers' State Bank, of Somonauk; Exchange Bank, of Genoa; and the First National Bank of Ottawa, all in the State of Illinois, protesting against any proposed stamp tax on bank checks and drafts; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HERSEY: Memorial of Miss Marion C. Dunnells and 213 other students of Bates College, Lewiston, Me., favoring prohibition during the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KALANIANAOLE: Petition of the Child's Welfare Association, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Hawaii, the Women's Section of the Navy League, the Outdoor Circle of Honolulu, the Women's Society of the Central Union Church, the Association of Punahou Mothers, the Honolulu Branch of the Association of Collegiate Alumnæ, the Methodist Missionary Society, and the Women's Department of the Christian Church, all of Hawaii, urging that there be created about all military camps effective zones within which the sale of liquor and the presence of prostitutes shall be prohibited; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island: Resolution of Rhode Island Branch of Association of Collegiate Alumnæ, urging creation about all military camps of effective zone within which the sale of liquor and the presence of prostitutes shall be prohibited; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Dodge & Camfield Co., of Providence, R. I., protesting against Cummins amendment to food bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of Hanley, Hoye & Co., of Providence, R. I., protesting against the prohibition of withdrawal of whisky from bond; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of Home Bleach & Dye Works of Pawtucket, R. I., favoring passage of Moon bill for revision of postal rates; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. KETTNER: Resolution of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association of Santa Ana, Cal., urging passage of the Madden reclassification bill, House bill 1654; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, resolution adopted by Reformed Presbyterian Congregation of Hemet, Cal., for total prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, telegram from Canners' League of California, San Francisco, Cal., to prevent prohibiting distillation of fruits, peelings, and cannery waste; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolution signed by Rev. G. E. Twomley, pastor Methodist Episcopal Church, Yucaipa, Cal., favoring prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, letter of R. H. Collins, chairman, and I. J. Hoban, secretary, expressing the views of the citizens of Needles, Cal., relative to the freedom of the Irish race; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, resolution of national Federation of Postal Employees, Union No. 197, San Diego, Cal., urging passage of Lever bill, House bill 4961; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolution of Fish and Game Commission of California, urging enactment of laws preventing discharging of waste into streams, etc., which prevents production of marine food life; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, resolution of Southern California Associated Dailies, comprising 50 leading daily newspapers opposing any form of newspaper advertising taxes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolution of Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Riverside, Cal., for protection of the military camps; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LEA of California: Petition of citizens of Arcata, Cal., and vicinity, favoring prohibition immediately; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of citizens of Healdsburg, Cal., against the Sunday law in the District of Columbia, House bill 128; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. LINTHICUM: Petition of McCormick & Co., Baltimore, Md., favoring passage of House bill 4280, amending income-tax law; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Baltimore Branch Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Methodist Episcopal Church, favoring prohibition as a war measure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of sundry organizations of Baltimore, Md., against prohibition of any kind; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Md., favoring passage of House bill 5118, relative to right of osteopathic physicians to serve their country; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of John Littig, president National Marine Bank; T. Courtney Jenkins; Merchants-Mechanics First National Bank; and Poe & Davies, all of Baltimore, Md., protesting against the Cummins amendment to the food-control bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. MAGEE: Petition of Mr. Erwin Freeman and other citizens of the village of Cincinnatus, Cortland County, N. Y., in favor of national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Mr. H. F. Lee, Syracuse, N. Y., and many other citizens, favoring full national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MEEKER: Petition of 31 citizens of St. Louis, Mo., protesting against the enactment into law of national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MOON: Papers to accompany House bill 5334, in relation to Red Cross stamp postage; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. RAINEY: Memorial of Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Jerseyville, Ill., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. RAMSEYER: Petition of citizens of Webster, Iowa, and vicinity, favoring prohibition as a war measure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ROBBINS: Petition of Renfrew (Pa.) Review of the Women's Benefit Association of the Maccabees, favoring suffrage for women; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SANDERS of New York: Petition of the Nineteenth Ward Woodrow Wilson Democratic Club, opposing Nation-wide prohibition of wine and beer; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the united congregations of the First Baptist, Lake Avenue Baptist, and Methodist Episcopal Churches, of Hilton, N. Y., unanimously favoring national prohibition of all liquors, not excepting beer and wine; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Juliet L. Matteson and eight other residents of the town of Sheldon, N. Y., favoring national prohibition during the period of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the First Baptist Church of Rochester, N. Y., with a membership of over 900, at its midweek meeting, favoring the prevention of the use of grains and cereals in the manufacture of liquors for beverages and the prohibition of the sale of liquors; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of SS. Peter and Paul's Branch, No. 82, C. M. B. A., of Rochester, N. Y., with a membership of 350, urging the passage of the Lever food-conservation bill, and favoring the appointment of a food dictator; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of the ladies of the Protestant Churches of Byron, N. Y., protesting against the exclusion of beer and wine from the food-control bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of Local Union 72, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, of Rochester, N. Y., urging the immediate passage of the Lever food-administration bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of the Central Trades and Labor Council of Rochester, N. Y., urging the passage of the Lever bill but protesting against the Barkley amendment; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of the Progress Club of Art in Buttons (Inc.), of Rochester, N. Y., consisting of about 800 employees, urging the passage of the Lever food-control bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. TEMPLETON: Memorial of Zion United Evangelical Church at Hazleton, Pa., favoring prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. VARE: Memorial of Pennsylvania Retail Coal Merchants, indorsing action of the committee on coal production of the Council of National Defense in reducing the price of bituminous coal; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, memorial of Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, against the inclusion of prohibition in food-control bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 10, 1917.

(Legislative day of Monday, July 9, 1917.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

CONSERVATION OF FOOD AND FUEL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4961) to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not recall the amendment that was up for consideration at the time the recess was taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On pages 19 and 20.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Stone
Beckham	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Sutherland
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Page	Swanson
Chamberlain	Kellogg	Penrose	Tillman
Culberson	Kendrick	Poindexter	Townsend
Curtis	Kenyon	Pomerene	Trammell
Dillingham	King	Ransdell	Vardaman
Fernald	Knox	Reed	Wadsworth
Fletcher	La Follette	Robinson	Walsh
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Shafroth	Warren
Hale	McCumber	Sheppard	Watson
Harding	McLean	Smith, Ga.	Weeks
Husting	McNary	Smith, S. C.	Williams
James	Nelson	Smoot
Johnson, Cal.	New	Sterling

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. ROBINSON. The junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] is unavoidably absent. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of sickness.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. POMERENE. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] on public business.

Mr. HUSTING. I desire to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] are detained from the Senate on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent to submit a report from the Committee on Commerce. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4285) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, to report it favorably with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 81) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be received and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to give notice that as soon as the pending measure is disposed of I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask unanimous consent to submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the river and harbor bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 646) for the relief of Mrs. Nancy E. Mullins, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. No. 33) to relieve the owners of mining claims who have been mustered into the military or naval service of the United States as officers or enlisted men from performing assessment work during the term of such service.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PAGE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Irasburg, Vt., praying for national prohibition during the period of the war, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented petitions of the Methodist Episcopal Missionary Society of Crowell and the Women's Missionary Society of the Methodist Church of Sour Lake, in the State of Texas, praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of the congregation of the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, of Houghton, Mich., and a petition of sundry citizens of Ann Harbor, Mich., praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the Presbytery of San Joaquin, Synod of California, praying for national prohibition, for the prohibition of interstate transmission of race-gambling bets, and for the Federal censorship of motion pictures, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry employees in the Lighthouse Service, praying for an increase in the salaries of lighthouse keepers, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. FERNALD:

A bill (S. 2628) granting an increase of pension to Isaac B. Childs (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 2629) granting an increase of pension to Francis Dwelley (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 2630) granting an increase of pension to Amariah K. Wheeler (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. THOMPSON:

A bill (S. 2631) granting a pension to Eva Maurer (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

WAR REVENUE.

Mr. LEWIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 4280) to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO PENDING BILL.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 4961) to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. NORRIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 4961) to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. McKELLAR submitted four amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 4961) to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 646. An act for the relief of Mrs. Nancy E. Mullins was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CONSERVATION OF FOOD AND FUEL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4961) to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am as anxious as anyone can possibly be to have this bill disposed of at the earliest possible moment. I have been in hopes that some agreement could be reached on one or two points, and some modifications made that would enable us to pass the bill in the course of the day. For that reason I regret that cloture has been proposed. I realize very fully, having had similar experiences, the stress under which a Senator in charge of a bill like this is placed, and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has certainly shown the greatest possible good nature and patience in the management of the bill. But I think, under the circumstances, it would have been better to have allowed us to go a little further without cloture in order to see if we could not come to an agreement on some of the contested points which would have enabled us to pass the bill, as I have already said, without delay.

The bill has been up for some time, but the first week was devoted to discussing another bill. Two whole days were given to one section—that involving the question of prohibition. The bill has been much changed in character, and we have a large number of proposed amendments. The committee amendments are not concluded, and there is a score or more of other amendments of great importance which are pending.

I am told there is an amendment in regard to coal pending, which I heard the Senator from Iowa say would take a day or two of itself. Under these circumstances suddenly to limit and shut down debate seems to me to be unwise, and would very possibly jeopardize the passage of the bill.

This bill is of very great importance. If passed in proper form it will be, in my opinion, a help to the country and the administration in conducting the war, but if it is not put in a proper form it assumes a much larger importance, for it is then capable of being ruinous to the country in its application.

I have nothing to say about the action taken on the prohibition question. That is of importance; it involves a very serious loss of revenue as well as a large expenditure of money which will have to be met in other ways; but the Senate has decided that question, and I have nothing more to say about it.

That which troubles me in this bill is the fact that it is an attempt to set aside and disregard economic laws—the natural laws which always exist and which always control in a large measure the distribution and the sale of all products. These laws are inexorable and merciless, and attempts to override them mean disaster. This bill undertakes to give a power to the President and his agents not simply to regulate the distribution of or to control the food supply but to fix prices absolutely to control the entire business of the country.

I have no reflection to make upon anybody who will be concerned in that work. I have a very great admiration for the work Mr. Hoover did in Belgium. No one could admire it more than I do. But the problem to be met in Belgium, serious as it was, is nothing compared to undertaking to run the whole business of the United States. That is beyond the power of any one man or any small group of men.

The purposes are excellent, the intentions are good. As I understand it, the prime purpose is to assist our allies by seeing that we sustain them in all possible supplies at the cheapest price.

Mr. President, that is a very important thing for success in this war, but it is not the only thing. The matter of food, the matter of supplies, is very important. So are ships very important; so are airplanes enormously important; and the Army and Navy are most important of all. And behind them all is the necessity for money, and the money must come from a prosperous and a united country. It must come from industries in the highest state of productivity. It is not enough to say that we shall send supplies to the allies at the lowest possible rate. We must look beyond that proposition and see what else is involved.

Mr. President, consider the effects already produced by the mere threat of this bill. It has been stated here on the floor. I have myself asked Senators who represent not only the wheat States but the great distributing centers of wheat, and I get but one reply to my question, that for the moment the market for wheat is dead. Nobody dares to buy. For the moment, at least, by the mere threat of this bill the whole machinery of sale and distribution involved in that great article of food is disarranged.

Consider some of the propositions that are made. Sugar necessarily is controlled in the regulation of food. It is a very important article of food. I am told that propositions have already been made to fix the price on sugar which would make it impossible for our beet-sugar factories which have already made their contracts with the farmers for beets to produce sugar at a reasonable profit. It is not helping the allies nor helping us forcibly to make a price on sugar which will tend to curtail production and reduce the large profits which have already been made and are in progress now on sugar making from which we should draw great revenue.

We must look beyond the immediate object of getting sugar cheaply into the hands of the allies. It is necessary to see first what all the consequences are. It would be a fatal mistake to force down the price of sugar and thereby diminish the supply. It is better to have sugar in reasonable plenty at a profitable price than to have no sugar at all at any price.

It is further proposed, I understand, to compel Cuba to make a low price on sugar. About a third, or perhaps more, of the sugar we consume we must import. We are not self-sustaining with our own sugar production, although it is increasing largely.

That imported sugar fixes the price. It is proposed, I have heard, to compel Cuba, by withholding from her foodstuffs—which would involve a complete disregard of treaties, and wholly apart from treaties, what a thing that would be to do to a country under our protection, our ally in the war, who followed us into the war—to compel her to make a price lower than a fair market price for sugar. The men who are thinking only of low prices and only of feeding the allies at low prices appear to forget where excessive action in that direction would lead. All the consequences in so grave a problem must be considered, not merely the immediate purpose.

This bill has come before us and has been agitated before the country as a food-control bill. Cotton and its products have been put into it. You can connect them, as I did the other day in referring to them, with the raising of cereals and the making of munitions, but cotton is not a food product. The mere threat of putting the cotton crop into the control of one man to fix the price, if I am not misinformed, caused within 48 hours a decline of $13 a bale in the price of cotton. I do not know but that it has declined further than that since.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The price has gone back to where it was before.

Mr. LODGE. Well, I am glad to hear that it has recovered; but that was the first effect of it.

Mr. President, it seems to me very dangerous to make an arrangement, perhaps with foreign countries, that we are to sell cotton at a low price to them. The larger part—much the larger part, I think—of our cotton crop goes abroad.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Two-thirds of it.

Mr. LODGE. It is a revenue raiser of enormous importance to this country. If we wish to do to others as we would be done by, let me again call attention to the fact that the imports from England to this country are larger than they have ever been. They reached $308,000,000 last year. I do not understand that we have asked or that England has given any reduction of prices to us because we are her ally in this war. I think she is eminently wise not to do so; I entirely approve of her attitude. I think it would be a mistake for her to do otherwise, and I think it would be an equal mistake for us to do otherwise.

So far as possible we ought to leave the course of trade and the natural economic laws unmeddled with. There have been attempts throughout history to upset and to go contrary to economic laws by legislation and by administrative and executive acts, but they have uniformly failed. The economic laws are stronger than anything men can do to disturb them and are very revengeful when disobeyed.

Now, again, there is copper. That is not precisely a food product, but it is included in this bill; and I am told that it is said by those who are to be responsible for the exercise of these vast powers that copper is to be sold to countries with which we are allied against Germany at the same price as to our own Government. I think it was a great economic mistake to induce or compel the copper producers of this country to sell at a very low price to our own Government. I think it would be more profitable in the end to the Government to allow business to take, so far as possible, its natural course. I have no doubt the copper producers would be ready and willing to sell at a lower price to our own Government than to anybody else, but to force them to an abnormally low price will result, probably, in two ways: The price to the domestic consumer and other private consumers will rise; they will have to pay a great deal more, and that will enhance the cost of every great product in this country into which copper enters. We may save something on buying copper at an abnormally cheap price—a price abnormally lower than the market price—but, in my judgment, by such a course we shall lose a great deal more.

The same is true of all these things. Force prices down by arbitrary acts, and you will reduce the profits; you will close the weak mines which are now giving a surplus which is so necessary, so vital to the production of that metal which is used as much as any other in the war.

If the mines make profits, we are going to take a large share of them in taxation. The Senate perhaps does not realize what we are planning to do in that way. In our excess profits tax in the bill which has been prepared by the Finance Committee where the profits reach 200 per cent excess over the prewar profits we propose to take 50 per cent; where it is 150 per cent, to take 45 per cent; where it is an advance of 100 per cent, to take 40 per cent. That is to be done under the revenue bill.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has a bill on a different system from ours—a coherent system but a different theory. I do not agree with the theory, but there is no doubt that it is a coherent and intelligent system of raising revenue, if you prefer that to the other.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me to interrupt him for just a moment?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Does the Senator think it is incumbent on the President of the United States to take absolute charge of all of the things named in the bill and to take charge of the mines and to operate them as provided in the bill?

Mr. LODGE. I am coming to that, Mr. President——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Or does not the bill simply propose to authorize the President to do these things when the public interest so requires?

Mr. LODGE. I am coming to that, Mr. President, in a moment. I have not forgotten that point.

The bill of the Senator from Wisconsin proposes to take the great bulk of the revenue from excess profits while he leaves our income-tax arrangement of the committee bill substantially unchanged. He also takes the committee provisions about liquor, and those, I think, he will have to revise. If we are going on as we are now, we shall all have to revise them; but the Senator's theory is to raise taxes chiefly from excess profits. I think that is the best course; that is the view of the committee; it is a question of degree; but if you are not going to have any excess profits you will not have any revenue, and you will throw the burden of taxation more and more on the great body of the people. Those taxes which we are trying to keep very moderate, and which the Senator from Wisconsin has tried to get rid of entirely, will be forced upon us if you reduce abnormally and unnaturally the profits of business. If you are going to have no regard for that, you also will see your income taxes dwindle, because the income taxes come largely from the dividends which shareholders receive. Your liberty loan and your other loans that are to follow must be the borrowings from surplus income and from surplus profits. From those also you must get the money which is necessary to extend your industries and keep them in high productivity. Money lies at the back of it all, and whatever system we adopt of raising taxes, incomes and excess profits are the principal sources. Before we enter on measures which will have a tendency to reduce them and perhaps in many cases to wipe them out altogether, we ought to go very slowly and very carefully.

I have heard threats or promises freely spoken of as to what the people who are to be intrusted with these powers mean to do. That is what they are talking about. I do not know what they will do; no man can tell; but they are talking about doing the things I have spoken of in regard to sugar, in regard to cotton, and in regard to copper; and I say that it is extremely dangerous.

We hear a continual cry raised against the food speculator and the people who make corners. We have passed the most drastic legislation in regard to that already. Everybody desires to reach those people. Men who undertake to make corners and to raise prices artificially in time of war, to my mind, are criminals and ought to be punished with the utmost severity; but that is only a small part of the trouble. We can have all the legislation which anyone can demand on that point, but there is a vast body of people who raise prices who are in no food trust, who are not making corners, and whom you can reach only by the operation of economy. Human nature is pretty generally distributed, and human nature is pretty much alike when it comes to economic questions or others. The average man, when he is selling anything, wants to get as much as he can for it. Every grocer, every butcher, every farmer, every producer longs to get as much for the article he sells as he can. If there is a chance to advance prices and to make a little larger profit, they each individually try to do so, and no amount of law will reach them. We can deal with the speculator, with the man who makes corners, and with the man who tries to take advantage of the troubles of the war; we can reach them; but, beyond that, is the natural rise of prices owing to withdrawal of a great body of producers from active work who at the same time are turned into consumers and destroyers of property and products of all kinds.

I believe, Mr. President, that the great body of our business men are thoroughly patriotic and anxious to do everything they can for this country. I have entire confidence in them, but I do not think that high patriotism is confined to them. I think that is the desire of the Senate and of all men who have right feelings about their country, and that is the overwhelming mass of the American people. We need the business men; we need to encourage and not to discourage them unduly, and no business can prosper if there is hanging over it all the time the hand of the Government, which may descend at any moment and fix the maximum price.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the example of France and to tell the Senate what happened there. France was better prepared in her army than any of the allies who entered the war against Germany, but she was no better prepared than the others in the organization of industry in what may be called the civil organization which must stand behind the army in case of a great war. She found herself suddenly precipitated into this enormous struggle. She had a ministry which took upon themselves the powers which we are now asked to grant without consideration to the agents of the President. Each minister in his own department exercised autocratic powers. It seemed the only way to meet the dangers which then confronted the country. We talk about these powers being left in the hands of the President. It is impossible for the President to exercise them. They are distributed to agents, and those agents distribute them to subordinates, and the lower you go, the more obnoxious is the exercise of these unrestrained powers. "Conceit in weakest bodies strongest works," and when some local man is suddenly invested with power to control his neighbor's business or take his neighbor's property his head is very apt to be turned. That is what happened in France. Then the chambers came together. I do not think they were any better fitted for executive functions than any other parliamentary body. I know Congress is not fitted for executive functions, and the French were not, but they appointed some committees and investigated the situation, and when there was laid bare the situation which had been created by the exercise of these autocratic powers, without regard to constitutions or economic law, by members of the ministry, with the best intentions in the world, they found an enormous waste of money, they found powers exercised in such a way as to do great harm. Then France turned and called in the private industries of the country. The Government, with all its vast powers, was making 40,000 shells a day. They called upon the private industries, and in a short time they were making 200,000 shells a day. They rallied behind the Government the private industries which had been stopped by the exercise of powers too great for any one man to use, and which ran contrary to all economic laws. There is the lesson of France. That is the way she rallied her social and economic organization behind her armies.

Success is not to be found in indiscriminate and unlimited powers, and we ought to take great care before we give powers which if misdirected will dislocate the whole course of business, will lower the productivity of our industries, and cut off our great revenue-yielding taxes at the source.

We ought to be very careful before we do any such thing as that.

The Senator from Oregon says it is all discretionary. Mr. President, it was all discretionary in France. There is nothing so dangerous as to intrust unlimited, unrestricted powers to men on the theory that they will not use them. To use them as a threat if the victims are not doing what they want, where does that lead? You say to a great business concern, "We are not satisfied with the prices at which you are selling copper or steel, or whatever you please, to the allies. You must sell it at a lower price." They say, "We can not do it and we will not do it." "Very well; we will take your plant." What is the result? Of all incompetent managers of a business plant, governments are the most incompetent. There would be not only vastly increased costs, but, what is far worse, there would be endless delays.

Is it to be supposed for a moment that men suddenly drawn from anywhere, with no previous experience, can run these great businesses as well as men who have given their lives to them? The result would be that you would upset business and you would not get the supplies to the allies. They would not get the copper they need and the sugar they need and all these other things.

It is all very well to talk about threatening, but when your threat simply consists in saying, "The Government will take over a factory and run it," the Government can take over the factory, but it can not run it. Instead of having 200,000 shells a day you will have 40,000.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr CHAMBERLAIN. It might be true, as the Senator has suggested, that the Government could not take these plants and operate them at a profit to sell and dispose of the output as business men do; but is it not true that at the arsenals at Springfield, Mass., and at Rock Island, Ill., where the Government manufactures for itself, the output has been placed in the hands of the Government at a cheaper rate than by private hands?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, that is a delightful example of just what I mean by Government management. We have two arsenals, one at Rock Island and the other at Springfield, Mass. They make the Springfield new model. They are the only people who do. Nobody else makes it. They have no competition whatever. They are capable of turning out on an eight-hour shift 500 rifles a day at Springfield and 250 at Rock Island.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Further in that same——

Mr. LODGE. Let me finish what I am going to say about it. I desire to show the beauties of Government management. Two years ago they were turning out at Springfield 147 rifles a day. Rock Island was shut down. At the previous session of Congress the House put in a provision of $5,000,000 to run both those arsenals on full time, and, I think, even to run them on additional shifts. There was a contest here about it, but the House provision was passed. We came to the declaration of war and, I believe, we were still making 147 rifles a day. That is Government management.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Now may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. LODGE. It is very well to talk about making cheap rifles. They do not make rifles of any kind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think the testimony of the ordnance officers will show that the guns, and so forth, are manufactured cheaper by the Government than by private firms. But I call the Senator's attention to this further fact: If the Government itself were manufacturing powder for sale and put it on the market, I question if it could do it or would do it as cheaply as an individual; but is it not true that the testimony which was taken before the Military and Navy Committees of the Senate has shown that the Government can manufacture powder cheaper than it is being sold to the Government, and they have compelled the private manufacturers of powder to reduce the cost more than a third?

Mr. LODGE. That is true. That is not the point I am making. I will say just here the cheapness of Government manufacture when we are at war is a secondary consideration. It is not much matter whether we can make a Springfield new model at the Springfield Arsenal a dollar or two cheaper than some private firm can make it. The question is that at the Springfield Arsenal and at Rock Island we have not been getting any rifles at all. It is better to pay a little too much for a rifle than to leave our soldiers unarmed; and at this moment, if I am not misinformed, we are turning to private enterprise to supply us with Enfields, an inferior rifle, but which can be obtained rapidly and in large quantities from private sources.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I simply wish to ask the Senator a question as to the subject of fixing prices. Does the Senator believe that in dealing with the corporations that are turning out much-needed things all through the country, instead of fixing the price there might be an agreement as to the per cent which they should receive of profit?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, you can under the power of this bill prevent all the industries from making any profit. If you think it is a bad thing for them to make profits you can stop it. You are going to do it very largely by this bill, in my judgment. Where are you going to get the taxes from?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. That is not the point.

Mr. LODGE. I think that is the point. The Senator may think the Government can be run without money, but so far we have provided for $5,000,000,000 in loans. We have a tax bill here that carries from $1,600,000,000 to $1,800,000,000. That money must come from somewhere. You can not take it out of the air. And we must have $600,000,000 more in order to obtain aeroplanes. We must have $600,000,000 more to make up for what was done about prohibition. You will not get it if you are going to kill business in the country.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I agree fully with what the Senator says on that point, but I do not agree with him as to his conclusion as to profits. In regard to all the great basic products of our country that are so vitally necessary for the preservation of our armies and our defense, if any firms in that line of business are patriotic, and they are good citizens, they should be perfectly willing to agree as to a specified profit that they might make, not fixing the price but an agreement as to a reasonable per cent, say, 10 or even 20 per cent. The point I want to make is that all those concerns, if they want to do the right thing by the Government at this critical time, should be willing to try to reach an agreement along the line of prices.

Mr. LODGE. That is exactly what they are trying to do. I am not advocating extortionate prices to the Government. On the contrary, I think to our own Government they should make prices at a very reasonable profit. But it is proposed to make us sell at the same price, near cost or but slightly above it, to all the allies, and the next step will be to make us sell in the same way to all the domestic consumers, because if you do not do that, by forcing them to sell to the Government and to the allies at abnormally low prices you will raise the price of the product to every private consumer and increase the cost of every article into which copper or steel enters. You can not raise taxes unless you have something to tax. I wish to preserve business, and to make it as productive as possible, and then take all you please from their net profits. Take all that is necessary. They can go on and they can extend. They will believe that in the time to come when the war pressure is off they can make perhaps better profits. But if you destroy them they will not make any profits at all.

I do not think much is gained by haggling about what we buy. The result of making small savings on what the Government buys is that we are not getting the things we need, and delay is the most expensive luxury possible. There is great delay in haggling, which is more ruinous than anything else at this time. But I am certain that the business of the country in supplying the Government as a rule will be content with any reasonable profit which the Government will name. They have shown that in many instances already.

But the main point that I feel so strongly is putting these gigantic powers into the hands of men of whom we know very little, to distribute them among hundreds of agents of whom we know nothing, to give to these agents the power under the licensing clause to put out of business any concern, partnership, individual, or corporation which is engaged in foreign or interstate commerce. They are living under a threat of extinction at any moment. Some agent somewhere comes in and makes an adverse report on a corporation or a partnership or an individual. The principal agent takes it up here and the thing is done; the man is put out of business. I say that is a power which should not be intrusted to any human being.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. REED. If it will not interrupt the Senator——

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. REED. Why is not what the Senator has just said absolutely applicable to the farmer, and in a somewhat aggravated form, perhaps, because at least as to many articles an ordinary manufacturer can produce he can produce his article and get it upon the market in a short time, whereas the farmer invariably requires 12 months, sometimes three or four years, to bring a farm product to a marketable condition?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, of course it applies to the farmer. I was taking my illustration from industries naturally because I come from an almost entirely industrial State. It is just the same with wheat. Now, see where that has led us. Undertaking to fix the price of the farmer's products, the obvious injustice of fixing a price on his products for sale, led us to add the articles which he had to buy, and gradually you find this power of price fixing extending over every industry in the country. We have then to go on and protect the farmer by a minimum, and if you protect the farmer by a minimum you must protect the man who works in the copper mine or the coal mine by a minimum, and it spreads and spreads indefinitely in every direction carrying with it business and production paralysis.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it not just as dangerous to leave to one man the power of fixing the minimum?

Mr. LODGE. I agree with the Senator entirely. I think it is.

Mr. GRONNA. I am very much interested in what the Senator says; I am always interested in hearing him; and I should be very much pleased to have the Senator go into the history of England and show what the corn laws of England did for agriculture. I think it was in 1846 when that law was passed, and, if I am not mistaken, it ruined the industry of agriculture in England.

Mr. LODGE. It did; and the fixing of prices that was effected by import duties led to the complete overthrow of protection for the farmer.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, is the Senator opposed to the provision in the bill which gives the power to fix a minimum price?

Mr. LODGE. If we are going to fix the price of wheat to the farmer, whatever you put as a minimum——

Mr. NORRIS. That is not the question. I thought the Senator's argument was rather in opposition to that power.

Mr. LODGE. I am against the power of fixing prices on either maximum or minimum.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator would strike out of the bill the power, then, that is given to the President to fix the minimum price for anything.

Mr. LODGE. I would; but where almost all the provisions of the bill relate to prices if I can not strike out all I would strike out as many as I can.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Within the last day or two the President has issued a proclamation which will have the effect of controlling the exports of this country. Necessarily to produce the exports we would increase the production of a great many of our commodities so that there must be a supply greater than this country will consume. The price necessarily, it seems to me, will be controlled to a great extent by the price which obtains for the exported portion. If the President has the power under existing law to control the exports of the country, how can we prevent his controlling through that process the domestic prices, and perhaps may it not be better, inasmuch as we have given to the President the power to control exports, that we should go further now and practically put the complete control of all prices in the hands of the President? In other words, having gone as far as we have gone can we safely stop where we are?

I wish to say that the Senator has been making a very clear statement to my mind of the conditions which are confronting us, and I realize the problem which he is trying to solve, and I think it is worthy of the very earnest, serious, unselfish consideration of every Senator. I know of nothing more important than the very thing the Senator is now discussing; and yet I am troubled as to what course we should pursue. Having gone to the extent which we have, shall we stop or what shall we do to supplement and minimize, if necessary, the effect of what is being done regarding the control of exports?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I of course have considered the question of the control of exports. I was thoroughly in favor of giving the President that power. The control of exports indirectly may mean the control of prices; but it is far more than that. The President represents the country necessarily and absolutely in all our foreign relations. Now, it is an essential feature of this war to prevent the sending to Germany of supplies, of foods, and of metals. That is a question of the first importance, and the President, if he thinks that exports are finding their way in large quantities through neutral countries, as they undoubtedly have done, must be in a position where he can stop it. I think those powers are just, and they seem to me to meet all the necessities of the case as affecting exports.

He can also, through that power, control what has been a very unfortunate incident at recent times—the allies coming into our markets and bidding against each other. He can compel purchases for the allies to be made through one agent; but that agent, buying for all the allies, will buy at the market price. All that is removed is what you may call the competition of fear from the other allies. Now, I think that ought distinctly to be done; but that would still leave the general course of the markets untouched.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Just at that point, if there is to be one purchasing agency for the Federal Government and our allies of the surplus commodities, does not that necessarily fix the price of the commodities to the domestic consumers?

Mr. LODGE. Undoubtedly it is an economic law that the price of the world market where there is a surplus and export will fix the price of the home market. There is no doubt, in my judgment, about the soundness of the law which the Senator has stated. But we are not fixing the price which the one agent shall give. We are only preventing an abnormal competition between the agents of all the powers. There is no reason why that one agent should be given wheat at an abnormally low price.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If there is only one purchaser for the surplus product, how do you prevent that one purchaser from fixing the price? And is not that the condition in which the country finds itself to-day—the control of exports, with the combination of the purchasing agents of this country and the allies forming only one purchaser?

Does that not now give to the Government the power to fix a price by saying what it shall pay for its supplies, as well as the allies? And being the only purchaser, how can you work it out other than that that will absolutely fix the price in an indirect way? And if that fixes the price in an indirect way, would we do any harm, or perhaps would we not do good, if we went further and gave the President the power to do absolutely what he will do indirectly, through powers already conferred?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, under these abnormal conditions, which are artificial to a large extent, I do not think the economic law of the world's price as fixing the domestic price can be taken as absolute. Because there is only one agent buying for the belligerent Governments of the allies, it does not follow that we are bound to sell at any price he shall name. As a matter of fact, as we have seen by the way they have bid against each other, they must have the wheat. It is in our hands to name the price, really, if it is left to one agent. He must have that wheat. It is not like normal times. What we desire, of course, is a reasonable adjustment, and I think the necessity will be met in that way. Although I see, of course, the power the President now has and which he must have to regulate exports, I think it is going a great deal beyond that to give to a presidential agent—for that is what it comes down to—the power to name the price on everything for the domestic as well as the foreign market and to name the minimum price of everything.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Does not the Senator believe that an embargo without any restrictions can only add to the burden of the actual producer in prices?

Mr. LODGE. I do not think I understand the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The point raised by the Senator from New Mexico, in asking if an embargo would cure all evils. Now, it occurs to me that an embargo on the output of foods would not remedy the very thing that we are all trying to remedy. It would not affect the profits of the middlemen, but would reflect directly upon the producers of any article.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am not talking about middlemen. Those men we can reach by other laws. I am discussing with the Senator from New Mexico the very difficult and important point of the control of exports, which must be controlled to the degree which the President is now controlling them for many other reasons besides the economic ones. But because he has that control, which indirectly might be used to make the price, I do not think it therefore follows that we ought to confer the power to make all prices, maximums and minimums, upon some one agent or group of agents who are not even selected and appointed and confirmed by the Senate, who have not the responsibility which attaches to offices as usually created.

I think we are running a terrible risk. When I heard in conversation again and again what some of these agents propose to do, it seemed to me that it could mean nothing but the absolute dislocation of business and of agriculture from one end of this country to the other, and that we should tread again the path that France trod when she had to get out of the dreadful conditions created by the autocratic powers assumed, from necessity no doubt, by the ministry at the outset of the war, and that we should have to go back to normal conditions, and, so far as possible—of course, it is limited, but so far as possible in a time of war—give the economic laws free play.

Mr. President, I have spoken longer than I intended to; but there are provisions in this bill which if carried through, and if we confer these powers on agents unknown to us, it seems to me, are in the highest degree dangerous. It will not advance this war, it will not help the allies, to have a business panic in the United States.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. I think I share the apprehensions of the Senator from Massachusetts when it comes to governmental control of these matters in normal times; but, of course, we all appreciate that conditions are now abnormal. May I ask the Senator whether he is opposed to any legislation and all legislation regulating the price of foodstuffs, and particularly wheat and flour?

Mr. LODGE. No, Mr. President; but I wish to confine our legislation and our grant of powers as far as possible to matters immediately connected with the war and the operations of our Army and Navy. I do not want to give these blank checks to men about whom I know nothing. I know these are most abnormal times; but that does not prevent an abuse of power, and human beings do not change their nature materially in war times. When they get power in their hands it is a tremendous temptation. I wish to go no further than is absolutely necessary. I think this bill goes a great deal too far. I do not think it is necessary for food control to give Mr. Hoover or anybody else the right to fix the price of cotton.

You are involving yourself in grave questions when you allow Mr. Hoover to fix the price of cotton in conjunction with Great Britain or France. I do not think he ought to have the power to fix the price of copper or steel or wool, or any of those things enumerated there; and I think if we are going to fix prices on wheat and establish minimums, because the farmer is in just as much danger, we had better do some price fixing ourselves, here and in the House of Representatives, where the farmers are represented, and not have it done by a man who is thinking neither of the shareholder nor of the business man nor of the farmer, but simply how he can buy most cheaply for the allies.

Mr. President, it will not do the allies much good to buy cheaply for them if you cut down the whole source of supplies. It will not do the allies much good to have low prices fixed for them if you find yourself without the ability to lend them money. What is the first aid we have had to give them? Money. My one point is, do not let us do anything which can injure the prosperity of the country. Let us encourage it in every possible way. You will not encourage it if you give to a lot of nameless agents the power to interfere in any business, and say whether they shall have a license or whether they shall do business at all. They will be walking in terror by day and night, and they will not do business.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator that we want to continue the prosperity of this country; but knowing that the Senator has thought very deeply upon this subject, as he always does when he discusses questions that present themselves to the Senate, I should like to know from him how far he is willing to go, and what methods he would adopt to control the prices of food.

Mr. LODGE. I will give the Senator a practical point. I am utterly opposed to the licensing clause.

Mr. POMERENE. What method would the Senator adopt?

Mr. LODGE. I do not think licenses are needed. I do not think there is any occasion for it. If we must regulate food and fuel, let us do it. That is all that this bill was intended for when it started.

Mr. POMERENE. Now, I should like to have the Senator's views as to how he would do that.

Mr. LODGE. We have got to give some unusual power——

Mr. POMERENE. I think so.

Mr. LODGE. But I should reserve a few powers in the hands of Congress; and if there is to be a minimum-price fixing, I should like to see it done here by the men who represent the farmers on this floor, who represent great farming constituencies, who know something about it.

Who are the agents who will have charge of this work? It is not one; it is a hundred agents spread all over the country. What do they know about those questions? We want the other side. The situation would be different if we could have a commission with representation of Congress, of the farmers, and of the manufacturers upon it. Let it be formed as the Immigration Commission was formed—partly by Congress and partly by the President.

Let a body be created of men like that, who know something about more than one side of the matter, and confer the powers on the President to be administered through those men. That would be making it safe. But here you throw no safeguards whatever around the vast powers you bestow. You give a blanket authority to men whose names you do not even know. You know one; but he will have hundreds of agents whom you will know nothing about, who will be selected simply at his pleasure.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me, all of them will be selected without our consent or approval, too.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, of course, without our consent or approval.

Now, I earnestly desire to finish this bill. I wish to see as good a bill as possible passed. I wish to see all the powers given that are necessary to meet the food situation; but I do not want to make that an excuse for piling up any number of powers which were not asked for in this bill when it appeared, even, and which it is not necessary to give. That is the reason why I deplore the fact that we should not have more time to consider this bill and see whether we can not reach some reasonable conclusion. If the bill is forced through now, it may go through in such a mutilated form as to be of little value. It may fail, or it may carry powers which, if wrongfully exercised, will bring this country to the verge of financial ruin within three months.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina rose.

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I did not care to interrupt the Senator. I have made some investigations with reference to the production of cotton in this country covering a period of years, and the price of food. In my own time I am going to take occasion to incorporate these figures in the RECORD, along the lines the Senator has suggested, about the possibility of our doing just exactly the contrary of what we desire in our efforts to increase production, unless we do it wisely. The very point that we are all stressing here is to encourage the greatest possible volume of production of the things that are absolutely essential to the proper conduct of this war; and at a later time I shall submit some figures here upon that point.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have finished what I have to say. I merely desired to make a protest against hurrying a bill like this. The character of the measure we pass is more important than the speed with which we pass it. Two or three days are very little here if it will save us from fatal mistakes; but two or three months or six months or a year of business depression, of lack of confidence, of failure of taxes, may result in the failure of the war.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, like every other Senator here, I am greatly desirous of our putting into operation some law that will encourage to the fullest extent the production of those things we need. We have heard a good deal here about the speculator. I shall not discuss that matter, but I want to submit to the Senate some figures that possibly we have lost sight of. In our desire to punish the man who would corner foodstuffs and jeopardize our efforts in this war I am afraid we are likely to cripple the very ones whom we want to encourage in production. It is one thing to legislate for a general rule; that is our function and office; but whenever we begin to try to legislate on exceptions we are likely to destroy the good in the general rule.

I call the attention of the Senate to these figures:

All of us were startled at the price to which wheat went recently. In 1915, the producing year—not the consuming year of that crop, but the producing year—we produced, according to figures furnished me by the Agricultural Department, 1,025,801,000 bushels of wheat, the most enormous crop ever known in the history of this country. The average price to the producer in May of 1916, according to figures furnished by the Agricultural Department, was $1.02 a bushel. We had produced in round numbers 1,026,000,000 bushels of wheat. In 1916 we had exported up until the outbreak of the war an average——

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from South Carolina means in 1915, I think.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; in 1915.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to get the Senator, if he will be kind enough to do so, to give the price of wheat on the farm during the fall month of, say, November and in December.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I shall be very glad to give those figures. I will read the figures for the instruction of the Senate.

In January, 1916, the price of wheat was $1.02; in February, $1.13; in March, $1.02; in April the average was 98 cents; in May, $1.02; in June, $1; in July, 93 cents; in August, $1.07; in September, $1.31; in October, $1.36; in November, $1.58; in December, $1.60.

Then, in January, 1917, following, for the same crop, the price was $1.50 per bushel; in February, 1917, it was $1.54—still following the same crop—in March the price was $1.64; and then on up.

Mr. President, one other feature enters into this matter that we ought to take into consideration in framing a bill of this kind. The average exports from the United States abroad up until the outbreak of the war was 13½ per cent of our total production; in 1915 it was 37 per cent of our total production. In spite of the enormous crop, we exported 37 per cent of the wheat produced in this country. In 1916 we produced only 640,000,000 bushels of wheat—just a little more than half of what we had produced in 1915; in other words, we produced 640,000,000 bushels as against 1,026,000,000 bushels. The per cent of the crop exported that year was 23 per cent—practically double the volume exported in the years previous to the war. We made, in round numbers, a half crop, and exported twice as much as we had been exporting, and the price doubled. So much for wheat. That shows that as the volume was great, the price declined, and as the amount was scarce the price rose.

In 1916 we produced 281,000,000 bushels of potatoes—just a half crop. Potatoes rose in price this last spring to about $4 a bushel. We exported an average, up until the outbreak of the war, in potatoes of about six-tenths per cent of our production. In 1916 we exported 1.43 per cent, but we made a half crop of potatoes in 1916.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator, as I understood him, stated that we exported six-tenths of 1 per cent of our potato crop. Is not that an error?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Those are the figures which were given me by the Agricultural Department. Of course I have no personal knowledge of the matter.

I want to emphasize the fact that we made a half crop of potatoes in 1916, and the price rose to $4 a bushel. Wheat was scarce; consequently, there was a greater demand for a substitute, and as potatoes were likewise scarce, they rose in consequence of the scarcity. So the high price of potatoes now, right in the emergency which we were deploring in the spring of this year, encouraged production. Every nook and corner available for potatoes has been planted in that crop, and the result is to-day that the producers are not getting enough for them to pay for the cost of production, gathering, and marketing.

In 1914 we made 16,000,000 bales of cotton, and the price dropped to where it did not nearly pay for the cost of production. We were led to believe that, on account of the demoralization of the usual channels of trade, the excessive freight rates incident to the dangers incurred in transporting that crop abroad, the demoralization in our great market, which is England, would cause a diminution in consumption approximating 5,000,000 bales. The price of cotton that year averaged about 7.1 cents per pound for a 16,000,000-bale crop.

In 1915—the year in which the enormously large crop of 1914 was marketed, in which it was to be consumed—we made two-thirds of a crop, 11,060,000 bales; in round numbers, 5,000,000 bales less than we made in 1914. The surplus coming over from 1914 into 1915 plus the 1915 crop sold on the market at an average of about 9.7 cents per pound.

In 1916—last year—we made practically the same crop that we made in 1915, around 11,000,000 bales of cotton. We were 5,000,000 bales short in 1915; we consumed the surplus of 1914 and entered 1916 with the surplus practically wiped out. In 1916 we still were short 5,000,000 bales of cotton. The average price was just double the price which obtained in ante bellum years.

To the astonishment of the cotton world, producer and consumer alike, in 1915, instead of there being a shortage in consumption of cotton, both domestic and foreign, there was an increase to such an extent that 14,800,000 bales of American cotton were consumed in the cotton year of August 1, 1914, to August 1, 1915. The demand of the world increased by leaps and bounds, because cotton was used in enormous quantities in producing explosives and used in enormous quantities in providing clothing for the soldier, tents, and all the textiles necessary and incident to a state of war.

Now, there is not a man on this floor who dares say there has been any corner in the cotton market. Cotton has risen simply because the demand has outstripped the supply.

So great was the fear throughout the entire cotton-producing regions of the South that the enormously high prices would induce the southern cotton grower to plant too largely of cotton that there was a propaganda throughout the South last spring that he should reduce his cotton acreage and plant foodstuffs. He responded, and, in spite of the fact that cotton was bringing from 25 to 27 cents a pound and guaranteeing him something like from $100 to $125 an acre, the southern planter has reduced his cotton acreage and put it in foodstuffs. The statistics of the Agricultural Department will verify that statement. To the patriotic appeal made to the notoriously poor southern cotton farmer, in the face of an inviting profit on his land, he responded and cut his cotton acreage anywhere from 10 to 15 per cent and put it in foodstuffs. The rise in the price of cotton, as I said a moment ago, has been due to the natural operation of the law of supply and demand.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But, Mr. President, if the Senator from South Carolina will permit me, there was something that happened in 1914 which suspended the inexorable law of supply and demand. That caused the price of cotton to go down. The law of supply and demand is now operating unhindered, and that has caused the price to rise. Cotton went down because of the war, which came on and suspended the operations of that law.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It cut off the opportunity to ship the cotton to places where there would have been a demand and left it here, where we had more than the immediate market required.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should say, in justice to all parties, that it was natural that the demoralization caused by the oncoming of war on such a large scale should affect the market; but one of the prime causes for the disastrous conditions around about November or December, I believe, when the price went down to the point where we had no market at all, and could not sell the cotton at all, and the price that was quoted was simply nominal and nobody bought it, was that the exchanges of this country, which represent the great concentrating points to which buyer and seller gravitate, and where they transact their business, were closed, and the only cotton markets left were those mills that cared to buy and risk the chance of selling their finished goods. However, after a while, that was remedied and the exchanges opened again, but the price still remained low.

To reiterate and recapitulate, what I have attempted to show here is that the crop of wheat in 1915 was 1,026,000,000 bushels and the price during the greater period of that time to the farmer was less than a dollar a bushel. In 1916 we made something like a half crop of wheat, and, with the exports increasing and the supply diminishing, the consequence was a doubling in price. In 1916 we had a failure in the potato crop. At the same time wheat and other staple foodstuffs—and the Irish potato, commonly so called, is in a great many communities as staple an article of food as wheat—were scarce, and the result was that potatoes went to enormous prices. The same was true of cotton. So the point that I want to impress upon the Senate is this: The only hope of encouraging production is to make production profitable. We can not eliminate from humanity the desire to make gain; we can not eliminate from ourselves or from any man the desire to realize laudable ambitions. I thank God that we can not eliminate from America the desire to maintain her democracy and that she will go to any lengths to maintain it. The same motives that actuate us en masse actuate us individually. I have no patience whatever with the man who becomes so besotted in his greed for gain that money is to him his patriotism, his conscience, and his God; but I do honor the man who attempts to convert the energies of his body and brain into capital and to use that capital for the onward progress of civilization.

Buckle, in his History of Civilization, uses one expression that is an epitome of the elements involved in human progress. He says that there are but three elements in the civilizing process—wealth, leisure, and learning. The accumulation of wealth is a divine instinct, because it enables us to express ourselves. The accumulation of wealth is necessary for the purpose of liberating our hands from toil, in order that we may have time to study the problems that vex humanity and to solve them.

I am just as much opposed to the man who would speculate now, to the disaster of this Government and our people, as any man in this Chamber; but because of the action of Providence that cut down the wheat crop, and the action of another law of Providence as immutable in its operation as the law of gravitation—the law of supply and demand—I am afraid that because bread was high, because God did not give us a great wheat crop, we are likely not to charge the shortage to the proper place, and, in attempting to legislate, to bring about disaster where we hope to do good.

I want to read in this connection an expression said to be 150 years old. It covers the very point I am making:

> To announce to the people that the dearness of food from which they suffer is the effect of artificial maneuvers and not due to the derangement of the seasons; to tell them that they endure dearness in the midst of abundance, is to authorize all calumnies, past, present, and future, to which they too readily surrender themselves. * * * It is, at the same time, to render the Government responsible for the inevitable scarcities that may exist or may again occur; it lays on the ministry the obligation to furnish abundance, whatever may happen, and they should be very sure of their ability before they undertake such an engagement. The people well know that the Government is not the master of the seasons, and they should be taught that they have no right to violate the property of the agricultural workers or the dealers in corn. We stand firm, even before the people, when we say to them: "What you ask is an injustice." Those who do not accept this reason will accept none and will always calumniate the Government, whatever efforts are made to please them.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator who is the author of that?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That was written by a great French administrator, Turgot, 150 years ago.

Mr. President, I am in favor of this legislation, properly expressed. The great liberty incident to democracy, like every great good, has its corresponding potentiality for evil. A mountain a thousand feet high means a valley a thousand feet low; and the great good that we enjoy in personal liberty, the sovereignty of self, may, in times of stress, and with a distorted view of facts, become as potential for evil as it is for good. In the cool, quiet deliberations of those chosen to represent the people in this Chamber, it becomes manifestly our duty—aye, it is a responsibility that has never come to any Senate before in the history of America—so to see the facts, so to observe and regard the facts as, so far as in us lies, to turn the present emergency to our benefit, and to perpetuate the blessings that we have.

I do not think this bill, as it now stands, without some modifications, is likely to reach the end that we desire.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I always listen with great interest to the Senator from South Carolina, especially when he is speaking upon a subject of this character. I have been impressed with the utter disintegration of the Senate on this question within the last 24 hours. It seems, to use a cant phrase, to have gone into the air. Now, I want to ask the Senator from South Carolina and the chairman of the committee if they do not think that these differences which the Senator has referred to could be ironed out and composed more readily in the committee than on the floor of the Senate? It does not seem to me that we are coming to any conclusion in the Senate. We are further from agreeing upon this bill this afternoon than we were two weeks ago; and I for one am very desirous of seeing the matter brought to an end.

The Senator from South Carolina is an honored member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I want to ask him if he does not think progress would be made by recommitting this bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and seeing if something can not be agreed upon which is likely to bring about the early passage of the bill? I sincerely desire its early passage in some form. I think the Senate wants to get rid of it, and I know the American people want the question settled. It is disorganizing trade, it is discouraging business; and something ought to be done, if possible, to bring the Senate to an agreement upon the measure.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I am scarcely in a position to advise. The bill is here before us. I am thoroughly convinced, after eight years of service in the United States Senate, that most Senators know practically nothing at all about farming. It is from the farmers of the country that we are to draw the sinews of war that are to determine this conflict; and the manner in which we treat them is going to determine, in my opinion, whether the result of this war shall be with us or against us.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator from Mississippi asks if any member of the committee believe that if this bill were recommitted to the committee these differences might be ironed out. If the Senator will permit me to express my opinion about it, I should say no. When this bill was in the Senate the first time it covered foods, feeds, and fuels, and the articles necessary for their production. When it was being discussed in the Senate a great many Senators objected to that general expression and insisted that the bill ought to be particularized and the particular articles stated which were necessary for the production of these necessaries.

It went down to the committee, and the committee, being influenced largely by the expressed wishes of Senators who had discussed the subject, particularized, and when it came back into the Senate again it was further particularized by the addition of cotton and some other commodities.

Now, if the bill goes back to the committee, those same differences will be there again. The committee is almost evenly divided. On the question of prohibition, the handling of distilled liquors and vinous and malt liquors, the same differences existed in the Senate and existed in the committee. So if the bill goes back to the committee, in my opinion these differences will be not only multiplied but strengthened, and we will have just the same trouble in the Senate that we are having now. In the last analysis I believe the bill will have to be determined here in the Senate and not in committee.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I rather agree with the Senator. I take it, Mr. President, that all of the Senators are anxious to do something to pass some law that will guarantee us the greatest possible abundance of produce and not jeopardize the earning capacity of our people. It is true that the committee did take out the general clause and specify. I think it would be well for us to discuss here those things that could be put under direct governmental control and get a consensus of opinion. I see that the newspapers and others, when cotton was included, said that the southern people objected. I doubt not that that is true, but there is a reason why from every standpoint cotton should not be hampered at all in the open market and should be subject only to the law of supply and demand.

Why? Two bales out of every three bales of American cotton are sold in Europe and in the Americas contiguous to us. In an ordinary crop something like nine or ten million bales are shipped abroad in the raw state, with no other manufacturing expense except the ordinary ginning that takes the lint from the seed and the compression necessary to make carload space possible.

Every time cotton goes up 1 cent a pound there is brought into this country in gold $50,000,000. Cotton has advanced something like 10 cents a pound, which spells an increase in the importation of European gold and South American gold in exchange for your raw cotton from the very field of the farmer approximating $1,000,000,000. It is jeopardizing no interest at home. It is pouring into the coffers of this country one of the essential sinews of war, without which disaster will follow.

It is not very greatly to the credit of America that in spite of her monopoly of the production of the raw material of cotton two-thirds of the raw material is converted into the finished product abroad and sold in disastrous competition with the production of our mills in every country in the world.

It is the one and only product that has held the balance of trade in favor of America for 43 years. Had it not been for the exportation of raw cotton this country would have been on the debtor side of its international relations for 43 years.

Now, in this time of our travail, when money and produce are needed not only to sustain us but to enable us to sustain our allies, the price of cotton has gone to where? The amount of money poured into this country, in spite of the short crop, is practically the same as that in the full years, so that the balance of trade is still on the side of America in multiplied form because of the great exportation of other articles along with this article. It is not a food crop in any sense, compared with the actual food crops. Bread and meat a man must have every day of his life. He can patch his old suit and wear it two years. He can not eat his dinner and have that same food to-morrow.

Cotton was put into this bill because other articles have been put in. I know that if cotton is put under the control of any man or set of men who are not familiar with the conditions of its production, and the market is hampered, the price of cotton will drop as it dropped the other day with the threat of putting it in the bill, not only with disaster to the producer, who has been scorned here because of his seeming sensitiveness to any interference, but to the disaster of American finances.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, does the Senator think there was any reason for cotton dropping on account of that interference? Was not that merely the work of the exchange, the trick of exchange gamblers, without any just or adequate cause? I am afraid that is one of the evils of the exchange. The law of supply and demand cut very little figure in the transaction.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will allow me, I think this is what happened: If I am buying potatoes to store them in cold storage because I have a constituency to supply, and this place that I am buying and storing in is capable of accumulating a vast amount of potatoes, and there is legislation pending which makes it a felony for me to be caught with more potatoes than are justifiable in my business, and some other man is to determine what is justifiable, I will quit buying potatoes. If I am on the cotton market and buying and selling cotton, and I have contracts out for six or eight months ahead, and there is a threat that the market within the next two or three months is to be taken into the hands of somebody else in such a way as to jeopardize the fulfillment of my contracts, I will dump them overboard now, regardless of consequences. I will get out of the way.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in that connection, may I interrupt the Senator and ask his judgment as to whether the effect he speaks of was not brought about also by the fact that the spinner, who has been in the habit of buying his supplies whenever he thought it was advisable to buy, would probably figure that if the Government was going to take hold of cotton and fix the price of it he might be able to get his supplies a little cheaper later on, and therefore he decided not to buy now? I think that had something to do with it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, all of us recognize that the interrelation of all of our commerce is so intimate and delicate that you can not put your hand on one commercial article in America without affecting every other commercial article.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That argument holds good against the entire bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. My idea was this: That in this bill, as I said a moment ago, we ought to select those things that we think are of absolute importance and are absolutely necessary, and so shape our legislation that we will be guaranteed an abundance of those. I will put this question to the Senator: Would not he rather have a guaranty of a profit year in and year out than to take his chances on seasons and the fluctuations of the market?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Certainly I would; and I want the Senator to understand that I am not advocating putting cotton in this bill. I voted against it, and shall do so hereafter, if the occasion shall arise. I am afraid that the whole measure is going to prove disappointing; but the point is, we have got to come to some understanding about it. There must be some confluence, some running together of the opinions of Senators in order to reach a conclusion. We have got to agree upon some sort of a bill, and that was the purpose of my question to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. My idea is that we should take the foodstuffs, one or all of them, and guarantee the producers of this country a profit, so as to put beyond a peradventure any question of scarcity, if the seasons are propitious.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will pardon a further interruption, I have noticed, as the Senator has doubtless noticed, that Senators from wheat-growing States who formerly apparently were very ardently for this bill have now taken fright lest the bill will interfere with the price of the products of the farms of their constituents, and the case seems to me almost hopeless in regard to coming together upon any definite plan to accomplish the purpose of the proposed measure.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I believe that a definite plan can be worked out by eliminating from this bill every extraneous matter and simply concentrating ourselves on the production of food, and making the conditions of that production so inviting to the producer that we will guarantee that we will have it, and stop there.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not sure but that the Senator is right in that statement. I do not mention this in a spirit of faultfinding, but the Senator will remember that when the bill was in that form this objection was made, and I confess it appealed to me: "If you are going to regulate the price of the things the farmer produces, then you must regulate the price of the things the farmer has to buy." The Senator will remember that that was one of the serious objections made to the bill. If the man who produces foodstuffs is to be regulated, then you must see that he is protected in the things he has to buy.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. My theory is this, that rather than go into all these ramifications, taking steel and copper and iron and cotton and every conceivable kind of commerce and putting it in a bill, we shall guarantee the price of foodstuffs to keep pari passu with these, having no regard to them, so that if the man who produces steel is going to charge 300 per cent he must eat 300 per cent bread by the action of the Government; in other words, to see that the price of foodstuffs in this country is going to give a profit to the man who produces them.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. OWEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I yield first to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. That would not take in the man who is working on a salary. The steel man might be able to save 300 per cent, but the man working for $100 a month with a family to support would not be able to do that.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It is a very vexing problem about the salaried man. It is the easiest matter in the world to solve that problem temporarily by increasing the salaries.

Mr. NORRIS. That does not reach the root of the evil.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. We all know it is very easy to put salaries up and almost impossible to put them down. It is not a very easy matter, for the conditions under which the salary is to be earned go up or down at the caprice of the market. Now the salaried man, just like exceptional unfortunate people you will find everywhere, is at this time the victim of circumstances over which we can not have any control. We are legislating now for the great body of consumers and producers, and we have got to so regulate the matter as to do the greatest possible good and the least possible evil and in fixing the prices to the producer that will guarantee the maximum profit.

My view of it is that it is the duty of the Government in this emergency to exhaust every means within its power to encourage the production of staple breadstuffs in America and not leave the producers thereof at the mercy of a fickle market, as the potato growers of 1917 find themselves now. The result of the disaster that has overtaken the potato grower will reflect itself next year in the growing of potatoes again. No man is going to plant a maximum amount of wheat at the solicitation of the Government unless he is guaranteed that there shall be a market to meet and absorb the vast increase of that which he has produced. If we will get together and decide here in the Senate and the House what is a reasonable price for a billion and a half or two billion bushels of wheat and guarantee that price no matter what the crop may do you will have the wheat.

Mr. OWEN and Mr. REED addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. If I clearly apprehend the argument being made by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, it is that we had better not go beyond the fixing of prices on food products for the reason that it involves so many other questions which are full of perplexity and difficulty. I remind the Senator that we are in this Congress appropriating and providing for the expenditure of many thousands of millions of dollars. If these expenditures are to be poured out on a profit of 300, 400, 500, and 600 per cent they will not last long.

I remind the Senator that steel plate, now in great demand, has risen in price 600 per cent. It has had a disastrous effect upon my own State. We are there producing oil on a large scale. One man during the last 10 days, named Cosden, stopped twenty-odd drilling outfits because he could not get steel at a reasonable price to justify him in going on with that expenditure. It costs twice as much now to drill for oil as it did before the war started. We can not go on in this country and carry the war to a successful issue unless the hand of the Government itself is put upon the unrestrained greed of individuals.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am a little astounded to hear the Senator even indirectly advocate putting that article in here when we have a Council of National Defense, and if I am advised rightly the representatives of steel producers are members of that body. Am I correct in that?

Mr. OWEN. I believe the Senator is correct.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It does seem to me that the very patriotic gentlemen on that board ought to be in a position to know conditions and take care of them in the interests of America.

Mr. OWEN. Does the Senator appeal to the doctrine that guided David Copperfield's wife in buying meat from the butcher on the principle that the butcher knew what the meat was worth?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Wheat seems to be going on that principle at this time.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to suggest to the Senator that the chairman of the United States Steel Corporation, Mr. Gary, is chairman of the cooperative committee of the advisory council on steel products, and that the president of the United States Steel Corporation, Mr. Farrell, is the vice chairman, and they ought to be able to remedy the matter.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It seems to me so, if you want to protect their interest and not that of the public. Besides that, I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that if these prices have soared beyond any justification or reason found in the law of supply and demand, you have the Sherman antitrust law, you have the Clayton supplementary act, and you have a commission known as the Trade Commission. There are three branches. First, there is the Council of National Defense to safeguard and take care of the interests of America along these trade lines of artificial production. I am not advised as to who compose, in the Council of National Defense, the body that represents the farmers, or those who look to natural production.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to say the advisory committee of the Council of National Defense are acting of course only in an advisory way, or properly should act only in an advisory way, and that the Council of National Defense itself consists of the Secretaries representing the people of the United States and representing the administration, while they may receive advice from these sources which are supposed to be peculiarly expert, and about which now there are some elements of doubt because of the large interest which they have adverse to the Government and which we ought to look frankly in the face. The Federal Trade Commission can, in fact, exercise an independent inquiry into the recommendations of value made by the advisory commission, but when you have the advice concluded and the fact ascertained the Government of the United States ought to have the right to definitely act with authority and power.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I was under the impression that under the Sherman antitrust law wherever it was found that there were combinations of men and capital and prices were unduly enhanced in restraint of trade the Government could intervene.

But be that as it may, I believe that articles not per se food articles should be eliminated from this bill, and the original House draft, in my opinion, is better, though imperfectly drawn. The purpose and aim of it was to take care of those things which do not come under the operation of artificial laws and combinations, but to pertain to the farmer. Restrict the bill not even to all the farm products, but to those staple products that have a world market and are essential to the sustenance of life to the allies and the American people, just restricting it to foodstuffs alone and to the staple foodstuffs, and, if necessary, to fix the price here in Congress, or, if that be not advisable, put it into the hands of those in whom we have confidence to fix a price that will encourage production without disastrously high prices as the minimum, but will encourage production to meet the end we are aiming at.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, more than once during the discussion of this measure it has been asserted that the power to fix prices as provided in this bill should be restricted to foodstuffs, but to do so would be to discriminate against the farmer. Now, I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina if he does not think or believe that the question of limiting this measure to food products solely might be made entirely practicable without working any hardship on the farmer or producer by a simple provision in the bill that no price fixed on the products of the farm should operate to reduce the price to the farmer, and that no price fixed should, in other words, work a hardship on the producer.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think that the producers of this country are perfectly willing to bear their share of any sacrifice necessary to bring the war to a successful conclusion. Now, I want to be definitely understood on that point.

Mr. KENDRICK. I do not believe the Senator has exactly the idea I had in mind.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; I caught the Senator's idea.

Mr. KENDRICK. It was my thought that it would be in the interest not only of the people of this Nation but of the allies for us to see to it that the producers were not discriminated against, that they were rather encouraged in production.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think so. The point I desire to make is this: We have a very apt illustration in the case of the potato crop right now. That is a disaster to the potato producer. We want to avoid that. Such a thing might occur in the production of wheat. Suppose we were to produce 2,000,000,000 bushels of wheat, the farmer having within 60 days from the time the gathering begins to take it to the market, and with a supply which it would take 12 months to consume, the very weight to-morrow will glut the market and break the price and be disastrous to every farmer who had to sell his entire output.

Now we come right to the crux of the matter. What are you going to do to guarantee the proper storage, the proper price, and the proper distribution when he has made that crop? If we will address ourselves to that specific, definite thing we will accomplish the purpose for which we are so ardently striving here.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. If the price of wheat had been extremely low, does the Senator believe the bill would have been pending in this body?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I prefer not to give an expression of opinion on that line for this reason——

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator answer the question or not?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will answer it in another way, if you will allow me to finish the sentence, right in connection with that. It does not make any difference whether this measure originated outside of the Senate or originated in the Senate, I believe it is our duty not to take chances on foodstuffs in the light of the experience of Europe.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not think the Senator understood me.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; I think I understood you.

Mr. GRONNA. If the price of wheat had been low, is it reasonable to suppose that any bill would have been here fixing a higher price?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not suppose it would, but just let me call the Senator's attention to this fact: He knows that when the price of a thing is very low on account of overproduction the tendency the next year is to reduce production in order to avoid the expense of a large production, and you get the higher profit from the less amount. We know that in Europe on account of conditions there they can not hope to make anything like enough to support the armies that are fighting for the allies. We know that with 1,026,000,000 bushels, carrying a surplus of something like 300,000,000 bushels over the normal production, was absorbed and the price went up in spite of that. So I say if this bill had not originated in any of the departments it would have been the duty of the Senate or of Congress to have taken some steps to guarantee, as far as human legislation could guarantee it, an adequate, abundant supply of foodstuffs.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. OWEN. The means by which the crop might be safeguarded, I understand, have been adopted by the citizens of North Dakota providing for State warehouses and State elevators for the safeguarding of the crop that is raised there. I would like to know from the Senator from North Dakota if that is correct?

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator is correct, but he must know that the provisions of this bill would very seriously interfere with that.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will allow me to answer the proposition put interrogatively by the Senator from North Dakota, the warehouse is only an incident, a necessary concomitant to the proper preparation for a large crop. The price guaranteed against a loss will stimulate the production. Then I agree with the Senator that there must be some places where it can be kept.

Mr. OWEN. You have got to store it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. To store it and then have it distributed by the proper means. I believe that the purpose of the bill was along right lines. I think it is as Paul said about the Jews, that they had a zeal of God but not according to knowledge. They did not understand the minute details or the reaction that might come from some, in my opinion, unfortunate provisions in the bill. But the general purpose of the bill is right, to encourage production. That should be the general purpose.

I want to say, Mr. President, that we have an illustration right now under another law of avoiding the very thing that we have been apparently most afraid of, and that is speculation. Under the power of embargo given to the President he can shut the door to all exporters and he can indirectly regulate the market for every bushel of wheat or foodstuffs in this country so far as keeping the price of it from going up is concerned. I believe in that embargo, but for other than financial reasons. I believe that we ought to see to it that the food we produce is either consumed by ourselves or our friends, and not to take chances of portions of it leaking through some other channel and getting to those who are our enemies.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield further to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not disagree with the Senator's statement. There is no Senator in this body who is more conversant with the conditions of production than the Senator from South Carolina. But if we take away the market from the producer of grain, is it not reasonable to believe that the Government owes something to the producer?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is the argument I have been making all the morning, that if we are going to encourage him to produce enough for us and the allies let us encourage him along the proper lines, which is to guarantee against loss and financial ruin for himself and those dependent upon him. I believe if we are going to close his market in normal times for patriotic and right reasons and still leave an enormous crop we should create temporarily an artificial market for him that will guarantee him at least the level of prices and profits that he had for 10 or 15 years, or it may be more.

Mr. GRONNA. With the uncertainty, with no price fixed by any legislative body, merely leaving it to some one regardless of how wise and how able that one man may be that the great industry of agriculture, in which more than $10,000,000,000 is produced in a single year, does the Senator believe we would encourage production by leaving it absolutely uncertain, without fixing any minimum price but simply leaving it to some agency or some individual? I ask the Senator does he really believe that that would encourage production?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think we should have before planting time a definite price fixed for a specific crop, not to leave it, as the Senator says, in the air. Giving some man the power to fix the price without his naming the price before planting time would be absolutely disastrous and demoralizing. I would not take the chance to plant any crop in the world if after I had planted I stood in danger of some man having not my interest at heart but at his own sweet will having a right to fix the price. But the amount planted under the provisions of this bill is going to be determined by the minimum price on the condition guaranteed for the growing and selling of that product. If the price of wheat before the seeding time in this year, 1917, is not fixed and guaranteed and does not appeal to the farmer when so fixed and guaranteed, we will not have the amount that we hope to have, but if before seeding time there is a price fixed that is inviting to him and that price is guaranteed until the last bushel of that crop is sold by the farmer, you may look for a maximum production of wheat.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will allow me further to interrupt him——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. Would not that necessarily mean that the cost of production to the producer will have to be taken into consideration if the Government is to regulate the price of the farmers' product? We might as well talk plainly. What the Government wants is the farmer's wheat and the farmer's grain. I think the Government cares very little for anything else. Now, then, we know, those of us who are conversant with agriculture, the increased cost of production. We know that there is not a single article or implement the farmer uses that has not advanced all the way from 25 to 100 per cent, and on certain articles, such as twine, as the Senator knows, the price has advanced 300 per cent to the farmer. Does not that necessarily mean that the cost of production must be taken into consideration, and not only the food value of these articles should be taken into consideration?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. In reply to that, all I have to say is that it goes without saying if you are going to guarantee the farmer a profit it means a profit over and above the cost of the article to him, and when we have concentrated on the foodstuffs and fixed the price, then we have necessarily discounted the price of all the articles that he must buy. I believe that we can accomplish it in this bill by the proper amendments and modifications.

I do not take very much stock in this great cry about the speculators having a corner on these things and putting up the prices.

Mr. GRONNA. I did not wish to go into that.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think that some of the local retailers have taken advantage of high prices and have charged ruinous and extortionate prices to the consumers, but, as I showed in the outset of my speech, the wheat crop was just a little above half, the potato crop was a little above half, the cotton crop a little above half. So the increased demand and the abnormal decrease in supply resulted in the high prices. We can, for the purpose of this bill, disregard what we call the speculative influence and address ourselves to the encouragement of the tremendous surplus which must be produced in order to supply the shortage of foodstuffs in Europe as well as to supply ourselves.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from South Carolina has now given a concrete problem. He has called attention to the rise in the price of wheat, which is true. He has also called attention to the fact that in 1916 there was produced of all kinds of wheat only a half crop. Naturally, the price of wheat rose; but the average price of wheat during the year was only about $1.60, according to the statement of the Agricultural Department. Now, I want to ask the Senator does he believe that the price of $1.60 is an abnormally and an unreasonably high price compared with the price of other food products?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I am not in a position to name any price for wheat, because I am not familiar with its production, its handling, and its sale; but I do believe that there are Senators enough in this body who are sufficiently conversant with the subject to approximate the price. I am sure there are an abundance of men in the United States to arrive at a proper solution of that.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will permit me, I will state to him and to the Senate that at $2 a bushel there are 4,000 more calories per dollar in wheat than in any other food product to-day at present prices.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Well, Mr. President, so far as that is concerned, I am merely speaking now of a principle. That principle is the necessity upon us to provide ourselves with ample food and to provide our allies also by proper legislation. I believe everything ought to be eliminated from this bill except the provisions and sections that will promote and safeguard the production of an adequate supply of food——

Mr. GRONNA. Yes, Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. And to guarantee a sufficiency, as far as may be, to our own people and also to our allies, and we should address ourselves to this end. I do not think that we can arrive at that by going out into every ramification and trying to readjust the delicate, far-reaching, and infinite departments of trade and their manifold diversifications and bring them all down like the surface of water so that when one declines the other declines, and vice versa. The commerce of the world has been built up through thousands and thousands of years, and each department is so interrelated that a disastrous touch on one reflects itself through them all; but I believe that if we will take that which is produced by the soil—the natural production of the soil—and will with wisdom fix the price, control the market, and guarantee that price, we shall come to a solution of this problem.

So far as the fuel element is concerned, to that I can not address myself, because I know nothing about its production; but, as a farmer, I do know that if there is a staple crop to be made, and a guaranteed price, eliminating the element of risk, leaving me to understand that, whether the seasons are good or whether they are bad, I shall be guaranteed a profit, and everything moving along the line of least resistance, I shall move along that line, and so will every other farmer of this country. We had rather take a small guaranteed profit than run the risk of a big one or none at all.

Mr. GRONNA. I agree with the Senator; but should we not also in a crisis like this pay some attention to the real food value of a certain article, say, for instance, wheat?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That may be; but that enters into the cost of production. I am not speaking about it from a technical or from a comparative value, or the different constituent elements of its food properties; I am not talking about that. I am talking about getting a volume of foodstuff that will put us beyond the danger of hunger amongst ourselves or our allies. I believe that by the elimination of certain features of this bill and the modification of others, in other words, concentrating on foodstuffs, not to hold a club over anybody, not to be threatening anybody, but to encourage everybody patriotically and profitably, too, to produce that which we want, we can put this bill right here in such shape that it could be passed and meet the requirements of the American people without doing harm to anybody. I do not, however, believe you can do it by threatening here in a supposed case, and over there in another, and allowing some one to draw a sharp distinction between whether you are hoarding or whether you are providing normally for conditions which might arise. I think those things will take care of themselves as they occur.

Now, as I said before, with the power given to embargo the shipment and exportation of our foodstuffs or other American products, with the power to encourage production, we can control the situation logically, normally, or abnormally just now, but logically, without any disaster whatever to the general commercial interests of this country, aye, for their benefit, and disrupt nothing. However, to have threats here and there, to give tremendous power to punish here and there, without clearly defining the evil so that it can be apprehended at once and punished accordingly, you are likely to do more harm than you are to do good. The thing to do is to put all encouragement in this bill you can, to eliminate all the discouragement that you can.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator another question before he takes his seat. If I understand the Senator correctly, he would fix a price; that is, he believes that the legislative body of this country should fix a price, a minimum, which would be satisfactory to the farmer; or does the Senator mean that it should be left to some agency or to some individual?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I admit here and now unequivocally that either we should fix it or so fix it in the law that whoever does fix it shall fix it representing a profit.

Mr. GRONNA. Well, does the Senator believe that there is a human being who is able to adjust the price on a commodity of this kind—on wheat, grain?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Why not on cotton?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator from Nebraska suggests why not cotton. If the Senator had done me the honor to hear what I had to say about cotton, I think he would very readily acquiesce in eliminating cotton from this bill, as well as a great many other articles which have been put into it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I did listen to the Senator, and, as I recall, he classified cotton with wheat and corn in showing that the advanced price was due to a reduced supply.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I did; but that had nothing to do with the relation as to other natural foodstuffs. I say I was simply using that as an illustration that the law of supply and demand, rather than speculation, had controlled their price.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If that is the case, why not treat them both alike?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Simply because we are here to encourage food production and not to interfere with other things that are not pertinent and germane to food production.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator from South Carolina think including these articles in the matter of regulation is going to encourage their production? I understand he desires cotton taken out because he thinks that to include cotton would discourage the cotton growers. If it would discourage the cotton growers to include cotton, why will it not discourage the wheat growers to include wheat?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Simply because I believe as to everything included under this bill you have got to fix the minimum price. What we are after is to encourage bread production. I desire the minimum of interference with natural laws. We want bread. We can do without cotton; we can do without steel temporarily; you can wear your last year's suit of clothing; but you can not eat yesterday's dinner.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Suppose out in the West, where these foodstuffs are grown, the producers of the foodstuffs regard their selection in a bill like this as a discrimination against them——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Wait a moment. If other articles are not also included—the articles which they must buy—does the Senator think that the producers of grain in the West will be encouraged to produce when they find that they are discriminated against?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have labored for the time that I have been on the floor to state clearly and emphatically that I think a price should be fixed to the grain producers, the food producers, that will guarantee them a profit under the conditions. That has nothing to do with what they buy, for when you go to fix the price to them, plus a profit, you have to take into account everything that they have to buy.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The fixing of the price was to guarantee the producer a profit and also limit the profit. What limit is there in the profit of the cotton grower? What limit is there on the profit of the steel maker? What limit is there on the profit of the agricultural implement maker? What limit is there on the profit of anything that the farmer must buy?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Have I said a word about limiting it, except that he shall not suffer loss?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; but the Senator knows——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have said nothing about any maximum.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But the Senator knows that the principal purpose or one of the purposes of the bill is to limit the price so as to reduce the cost of food. The farmer can see that as well as the Senator can.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is not my purpose, and I do not think it would be the purpose of any man who has this measure at heart. The question for us to settle first and foremost is a supply to take care of our necessities.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is exactly what I am telling the Senator. I am telling the Senator that the farmers will not be induced to increase the supply if they are picked out and singled out alone of all the producers in the country to have their profits limited.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Let me give an illustration to the Senator and see where his argument stands. Potatoes now can not find a market. Why? Because they were $4 a bushel in the spring and now they are not paying the cost of production.

Mr. OWEN. Because they are perishable, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Suppose they were not. Let us take this view of it. Suppose the plan that I have been advocating had been in effect, and, regardless of the amount of potatoes produced, we should say, "They shall not go below the cost of production plus a profit." We would then have the Government committed to properly storing and taking care of them, and we would encourage the farmer to plant more potatoes next year; but if we leave him without a price that will guarantee him a profit, then when the law of supply and demand operates, as it has done in this case, the potatoes will become a drug on the market, because the public can not consume them as fast as they are rushed to market; the farmer is discouraged; and next year he will not plant so large an acreage; so with wheat. What we want to do is to provide a minimum below which he will know that the price will not go and thereby jeopardize him; and then let the law of supply and demand apply.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator no doubt can speak for the cotton raisers of the South——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am speaking now momentarily for the wheat raiser.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But I want to tell the Senator that he can not speak for the food producers of the West. The Senator can not convince them, and no one else can convince them, that they are not being discriminated against when their product is taken into the control of the Government, while the things they buy are not taken into the control of the Government.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I want to reply to the Senator from Nebraska by saying that if cotton were as essential to the prosecution of the war as is wheat, and we were called upon to plant the face of the earth in cotton, I would be on this floor advocating that the Government should take such action as would safeguard us against the disaster of 1914, when we produced 16,000,000 bales of cotton, and the price dropped to where we had no market for it. I would say, "If you want us to produce 16,000,000 bales of cotton, guarantee us against loss." I have answered the Senator's argument now. If we want 2,000,000,000 bushels of wheat, let us say to the western farmer, "You will suffer no loss."

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from South Carolina what system would he adopt a year or six months prior to the raising of a crop to determine what the minimum price should be?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Well, I have in my mind vaguely taking the 10 or 12 year average price plus a profit. That might be somewhat pari passu with the abnormal conditions in which we now find ourselves.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that that would not work at all in the agricultural sections. The Senator himself gave a short time ago the figures as to production and price of the 1915 crop. He also gave the figures as to the production and price of the 1916 crop. They show that in 1916 the price was more than doubled in comparison with 1915; but the farmers in my State made money in 1915, with a cheap crop, while they lost very much money on the 1916 crop, with the price double what it was in 1915. Now, how would the Senator arrive beforehand at some system that would determine what the minimum price should be?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think the Senator suggested a plan right there. The farmers received $3 a bushel on a half crop and $1.50 a bushel on a full crop. Now, we want more than a full crop, and if there was no cry of hardship growing out of the crop on which the farmer made a profit at $1.04, if he made more money than he did with the crop selling at $3, let us adjust matters so that if he makes a billion bushels he shall get $1.04. Then, the farmer will have made a profit, according to the Senator's own statement.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let us see. Then, let us take Kansas, which raised a splendid crop in 1916 and got splendid prices, and the Dakotas and Minnesota, which did not raise a quarter of a crop, although theirs was a different character of wheat. Will you not have to have a different rule in order to do justice to all sections? Under the plan the Senator suggests, if justice is done to one will it not do less than justice or more than justice, as the case may be, to the other?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am surprised at the Senator asking any such question, for the simple reason that everyone of them sells in the same market and inequalities of production are the work of God and not of man, and we can not legislate to interfere with that. Here is a man who is living right at a railroad station, who does not have to hire a team to put his crop on the train, while I am 2 miles away. I say the man who is at the railroad is fortunate, and the fellow outside is not; but that is a question that you and I can not control. We can not all be at the same place at the same time and receive the same treatment. So we try to generalize so as to assure such equality to all as the circumstances will permit.

Mr. McCUMBER. Therefore the Senator has demonstrated the absolute impossibility of the adoption of any rule beforehand to fix a minimum price that would be just to the consumer and also just to the producer. The general law of supply and demand will take care of that far more equitably than it would be possible for any food controller to do.

Now, there is a little rule which I think the Senator could adopt. If we say to the farmers of the great Northwest who raise the spring wheat, the hard wheat, which always under normal conditions brings a better price than other wheat, "We will simply guarantee to you, if you will put in all the acreage that you can, that you shall be allowed the cost of production with the usual rate of wages, and, whether the services are performed by you, by your sons, your wives, or your daughters, that there shall be taken into consideration the value of your services, the value of the services of your families and of any hired help in arriving at the cost of production, including the value of the investment, and assure you a reasonable return upon that investment," every acre would be put under cultivation and the greatest possible crop would be raised.

The trouble to-day is—and I want to bring this home to the Senator—that the farmers of this country have never been put on a parity, so far as their labor wages are concerned, with city labor. If, for instance, the lowest-class city labor, which to-day is receiving about 50 cents an hour, can by that hour's work purchase 10 5-cent loaves of bread, then the labor on the part of the farmer who produced the wheat to make that bread should be paid for at 50 cents an hour. Then we would equalize the condition between the ultimate consumer of the poorest class and the producer, whose wages have always been the poorest in the United States. That, in my opinion, is the only way we can reach an equitable solution of the problem.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am going to yield the floor in just one second when I reply to the Senator from North Dakota. What the Senator suggests, of course, is rather a Utopian idea at present; I mean it is rather a speculative one. We are face to face with an unusual condition in the midst of our old methods of producing and marketing. We want now, without introducing any new or extraneous principles in the settlement of prices, to arrive at what we believe will induce production, safeguard the producer, feed the American people and the allies; and in conclusion I say that we can do so whenever we fix the price that will mean, no matter what the crop may be, a reasonable profit to the producer.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. LEWIS addressed the Chair.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator from Nebraska addressed the Chair first, Mr. President.

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. I merely desire to tender an amendment and ask to have it sent to such committee as is appropriate. Lest I may mislead Senators unintentionally, Mr. President, may I say that my amendment is an amendment to the revenue bill, having for its object to tax all vacant and unimproved land, so as to stimulate production as well as to get revenue? If I am violating any understanding which limits the submission of amendments to the present food bill, I do not wish to do so, without the Senate knowing that I am doing it, if there is any Senator to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of New Mexico in the chair). The amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois will be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to offer an amendment and ask that the Secretary read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, line 21, after the word "act," it is proposed to insert "except section 12."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator what that means, if he will explain it?

Mr. SMOOT. Let the amendment be again stated.

Mr. NORRIS. The amendment I have offered is in pursuance with the rules, as I understand them. I am not offering it to take it up now, as the committee amendments have not been disposed of as yet; but, as I remember the rule, if the cloture should be adopted, it will be necessary before any amendment may be considered to have it read to the Senate before the adoption of the cloture. So I have offered this amendment. It simply excepts from the provisions of this bill, which repeal the entire act when the war is ended, section 12, which relates to the manufacture of whisky; in other words, the effect of it, if adopted, will be to make that a permanent law instead of a temporary law.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, in that connection, may I be heard on the question of the unanimous-consent agreement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri has been recognized.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator from North Dakota want to take the floor to make an address?

Mr. McCUMBER. I merely wish to refer to the unanimous-consent agreement and to some of these amendments that are being offered to section 12, and I desire, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. NORRIS. I have not offered any amendment to section 12.

Mr. McCUMBER. But the amendment of the Senator refers to section 12, and I want to say just at this time, because I understand that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] probably stampeded somewhat by the constitutional arguments that were made yesterday, now proposes to modify his own amendment to section 12. Now, let me call attention to the unanimous-consent agreement, which provided—

> And that the section as finally amended in Committee of the Whole shall not be reserved for a separate vote or amendment when the bill reaches the Senate.

If that means anything, Mr. President, it means that the vote by which we amended and adopted section 12 was a final disposition of that matter, and we can not consider, without a gross violation of the unanimous-consent agreement, an amendment of any character, whether it be attached to section 13 or section 14, so long as it modifies section 12, which we adopted under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. NORRIS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the Senator any reference to the amendment that I presented a moment ago?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have special reference to any amendment that may be offered affecting the application, either by way of limitation or extension, of the provisions of section 12 as they were finally adopted by the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no desire or disposition to violate the unanimous-consent agreement, and, of course, if objection is made on that ground when my amendment comes up, if it ever does, the question will be passed on then. I will say to the Senator that, in my judgment, it does not even indirectly have any relation to the unanimous-consent agreement; it has nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does it modify, extend, or limit the provisions of section 12?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think that is a question that will have to be settled in the future.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; we can not settle it now.

Mr. REED. It will perhaps come up to-morrow. I do not want to take either of the Senators from the floor, but I think we have perhaps reached a point in connection with that matter where we can wait until to-morrow to discuss it.

Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that to-morrow, within one hour after the Senate convenes, we will be compelled to vote upon the cloture resolution unless the Senator offering it shall withdraw it, and I see no indication of a change of heart on his part. That being the case, I think the Senate ought to have in mind the provision of the cloture rule that after a cloture is adopted, "except by unanimous consent, no amendment shall be in order * * * unless the same has been presented and read prior to that time."

We are approaching an hour this afternoon when the clock admonishes us that the time is getting short. There are a vast number of amendments which have been submitted to this bill that have not been read, and I desire now to send to the desk, in order to save my rights, and have read a certain amendment which has been printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read the proposed amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The Secretary read as follows:

> SEC. —. That any person carrying on or employed in commerce among the several States or with foreign nations or with or in the Territories or other possessions of the United States in any article suitable for human food, fuel, or other necessaries of life, who, either in his individual capacity or as an officer, agent, or employee of a corporation, or member of a partnership, carrying on or employed in such trade, shall store, acquire, or hold, or who shall destroy or make away with any such article for the purpose of limiting the supply thereof to the public or affecting the market price thereof in such commerce, whether temporarily or otherwise, shall be deemed guilty of a felony and be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for not less than six months nor more than three years: Provided, That any storing or holding by any farmer, gardener, or other person of the products of any farm, garden, or other land cultivated by him shall not be deemed to be a storing or holding within the meaning of this act: Provided further, That farmers and fruit growers, cooperative and other exchanges, or societies of a similar character shall not be included within the provisions of this section: And provided further, That the foregoing shall not be construed to prohibit the acquiring, storing, or holding of such article for future sale for such advanced price as might prevail in the ordinary course of business and in a free and unrestricted market.

Mr. REED. Now, Mr. President, I give notice that I shall offer the same amendment with the last proviso omitted; and I ask that it may be read in that form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

> Add a new section as follows:
>
> "SEC. —. That any person carrying on or employed in commerce among the several States or with foreign nations or with or in the Territories or other possessions of the United States in any article suitable for human food, fuel, or other necessaries of life, who, either in his individual capacity or as an officer, agent, or employee of a corporation, or member of a partnership, carrying on or employed in such trade, shall store, acquire, or hold, or who shall destroy or make away with any such article for the purpose of limiting the supply thereof to the public or affecting the market price thereof in such commerce, whether temporarily or otherwise, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for not less than six months nor more than three years: Provided, That any storing or holding by any farmer, gardener, or other person of the products of any farm, garden, or other land cultivated by him shall not be deemed to be a storing or holding within the meaning of this act: Provided further, That farmers and fruit growers, cooperative and other exchanges, or societies of a similar character shall not be included within the provisions of this section."

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I take the liberty of asking the Senator, if it is not too much trouble, to lay his finger on the difference between his amendment and the provisions of the bill upon the same subject?

Mr. REED. Oh, the difference is very considerable. This proposition that I have offered is an exact copy of a provision in the bill which we passed here some time ago, and which went to the House of Representatives, and is still held in conference.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator means the price-fixing bill?

Mr. REED. Yes—well, I do not call it the price-fixing bill.

Mr. LEWIS. It has been so designated, I believe, from time to time. I may be wrong, however.

Mr. McKELLAR. The food-survey bill.

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; the food-survey bill.

Mr. REED. Now, Mr. President, I send to the desk another amendment which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. That any building or room occupied or used by a board of trade, chamber of commerce, grain exchange, or otherwise in which wheat or other food cereals are bought or sold for present or future delivery shall, for the purpose of this act, be known as a grain exchange.

All persons engaged in buying or selling in interstate or foreign commerce, for present or future delivery, any wheat or other food cereal in or about any such grain exchange shall be known and designated as traders in grain.

All sales of wheat or other food cereals by such traders in such exchanges for future delivery and not for present or immediate delivery shall be known and designated as dealing in futures.

If at any time during the pendency of the existing war between the United States and the German Empire the President of the United States shall find that such dealings in futures in or about any grain exchange unduly or unreasonably raise or enhance the price of wheat or other food cereals to the injury of the people of the United States he may at once request the traders in such exchange to discontinue for a time specified by him all the dealings in futures. In case such request of the President is not promptly complied with, then he is hereby empowered to order such dealing in futures as last aforesaid to be entirely suspended and discontinued for such limited time as he may direct, and if such order is not promptly complied with he may by proclamation declare such exchange closed, and thereafter it shall be unlawful to utilize or permit to be utilized such building or room as a grain exchange or for any person being a trader in grain on such exchange to engage in the business theretofore conducted on or at such closed exchange.

Any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall be punished by a fine of not less than $500, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if it can be done by unanimous consent, I ask unanimous consent to have this amendment considered so that any section of the bill may be stricken out and the amendment now offered substituted. I want to offer it in that form also, or may desire to offer it in that form. If I can have unanimous consent to have that right conceded, I shall not find it necessary to rewrite it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I certainly shall object to any such unanimous consent as to adopting an amendment offered by any Senator in place of what is in the bill.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; the Senator does not understand me. I am simply asking the right to have this amendment considered after cloture shall be ordered, if it is ordered, as though I had offered it as a substitute for some particular section of the bill.

Mr. GRONNA. I have no objection to that.

Mr. REED. It is a mere matter of form, and the matter would have to be voted on at that time.

Mr. GRONNA. I did not hear all of the Senator's statement.

Mr. REED. I make the same request now with reference to the first amendment which I offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand that under the cloture rule only those amendments can be considered after any cloture shall have been adopted that have been presented for actual consideration before that time?

Mr. REED. Only amendments that have been read, under the rule. I will read the rule to the Senator:

Thereafter—

That is, after cloture has been ordered—no Senator shall be entitled to speak in all more than one hour on the pending measure, the amendments thereto, and motions affecting the same, and it shall be the duty of the presiding officer to keep the time of each Senator who speaks. Except by unanimous consent, no amendment shall be in order after the vote to bring the debate to a close, unless the same has been presented and read prior to that time.

Mr. McCUMBER. That being the case, Mr. President, I will ask to have read the amendment which I now send to the desk, so that it may be pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. REED. I do not desire to yield the floor, but I do not desire to deny to the Senator the courtesy that he asks.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is all that I am asking at this time. I may not be present at some other time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Missouri will yield, the Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, line 22, after the word "therefor," it is proposed to insert the following:

In determining the compensation to be paid for farm products, all labor employed in producing the same, whether furnished by the farmer or members of his family, including the necessary domestic service, shall be computed and allowed for at the same rate of wages paid for like labor, or labor requiring a like degree of intelligence and arduous efforts, in other lines of business or trade; and in addition thereto there shall be allowed as a charge in the cost of production a reasonable rate of interest upon the capital invested in both real and personal estate and a further reasonable charge for deterioration and upkeep. There shall also be taken into consideration the increased cost to the farmer of all necessary farm equipment, food and clothing required, and other advanced cost in the ordinary necessaries of life.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, apropos of the amendment just offered, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a short address of Lloyd-George upon the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

AGRICULTURE AND THE WAR.

In his memorable speech on the 23d of February in the House of Commons, in which he dealt with the Government proposals with regard to food and shipping problems, the prime minister made the following remarks on the position of agriculture:

THE DECLINE IN AGRICULTURE IN THE PAST.

"Twenty years after the corn laws were abolished in this country we produced twice as much wheat as we imported. * * * Since then four or five million acres of arable land have become pasture, and about half the agricultural population—the agricultural laboring population—has emigrated to the colonies. No doubt the State showed a lamentable indifference to the importance of the agricultural industry and to the very life of the nation, and that is a mistake which must never be repeated. No civilized country in the world spent less on agriculture, or even spent so little on agriculture, either directly or indirectly, as we did. * * * Between 70 and 80 per cent of our staple cereal for consumption has been imported yearly, and at the present moment, I want the country to know, our food stocks are low, alarmingly low—lower than they have been within recollection. That is very largely due to the bad harvest. It is not altogether submarines. It is in the main due to our having had about the worst harvest within our recollection. Last year's crops were a failure, and that, of course, is a very serious fact when our tonnage is absorbed to such an extent by war exigencies and when our tonnage is diminishing.

NEED FOR INCREASED PRODUCTION.

"It is essential, therefore, for the safety of the nation, for the maintenance of the nation, for the life of the nation, that we should put forth every effort to increase production for this year's harvest and the next, and that we should do it immediately.

"The immediate concern is this year's harvest. It would have been easier to have done it had we done it some time ago, but some of the measures we have had to take have had to be crowded into a few weeks, and I ask, when that occurs, that some measure of indulgence should be given to a man who, like the president of the board of agriculture, is working under very difficult conditions * * * and crowding into six weeks work that ought to have been done two years ago. * * * There are only a few weeks in which to sow the spring wheat, the oats, the barley and the potatoes. The winter wheat season has gone, and it is urgently necessary that the farmers should be induced to increase the area under cultivation at once, otherwise the nation may have to choose between diminishing its military effort and underfeeding its population. That is the choice which Germany is taking—the choice of giving too little food rather than to diminish its military power and strength and striking power. That is a choice we wish to avert if we possibly can in this country, and we can do so.

SUPPLY OF LABOR.

"What is the main obstacle to inducing farmers to increase cultivation? [Hon. Members: 'Lack of labor'] Partly lack of labor. In some counties under the voluntary system labor flocked to the standard and farms were left derelict. Some of those are about the most important corn-producing districts in this country. There was no system. When the laborer chose to go there was no one to stop him, and there is no doubt at all that a good many districts have been depleted owing to the overzeal and patriotism of the laborers themselves. Since the military service acts there has been some discrimination exercised. At any rate, there are tribunals who have been sitting in judgment in these cases and considering the facts placed before them. May I say with regard to the 30,000 men called up out of the 60,000 whom the tribunals have dispensed with only 10,000 have really been called up. If you travel across and athwart France, you will find no able-bodied men of military age engaged anywhere. All the cultivators of the soil are engaged in defending that soil, and there the farmer is dependent almost entirely upon men over or under military age, upon women working on the farms, and upon substitutes.

PLOWING UP PASTURE.

"But the greatest obstacle to taking immediate action to meet this exigency is the timidity of the farmer when it comes to cutting up his pasture. He has been caught twice with too much arable land, and caught very badly—once in 1880 and the other time in 1890—and then he had years of anxiety, depression, and insolvency, his savings completely absorbed, and very often he himself for years water-logged.

"There is no memory as tenacious as that of the tiller of the soil, and the furrows are still in the agricultural mind. Those years have given the British farmer a fright of the plow, and it is no use arguing with him. You must give him confidence; otherwise he will refuse to go between the shafts. Now the plow is our hope. You must cure the farmer of his plow fright, otherwise you will not get crops. What does he say? The farmer thinks in rotations; he is not thinking merely of what will happen next year. When he is cutting up his pasture he has got to think of years ahead, otherwise he is a loser. It is no use promising him big prices for next year and then dropping him badly for the next few years. He has got before his eyes a picture of accumulated crops across the seas, ready to be dumped down in this country the moment the war is over. He says, 'Prices will break; I shall have cut up my pasture, and I shall be done for,' and he thinks of 1880 and of 1890 and what happened then, and he can not face it again. That is the real fact. Every farmer we have appealed to has always talked in that sense, and we must get over that, otherwise he will not cut up his pasture land.

GOVERNMENT GUARANTY OF MINIMUM PRICES AND WAGES.

"I do not agree myself that prices are going down immediately after the war. * * * You can not persuade the farmer of that, and it is essential that we should get him persuaded, and persuaded within the next few days, and it is no use going on to argue with him. My right honorable friend has done his best to persuade him, but, after all, you have got to cover a very extensive country, and, therefore, there is only one way of insuring immediate action on the part of the farmer, and that is by guaranteeing prices for a definite period of time—minimum prices.

"There are two or three corollaries to a guaranty of prices. The first is that if the Government guarantees prices labor must also be guaranteed. I do not believe any farmer, looking at the prospects, can fail to see that the old wages are gone—and a good thing, not merely for the laborer, but for the farmer. The best farmers in a district are those who give the best wages. Take Scotland, for example. A guaranty of minimum wages will hardly touch Scotland.

"There is no better farmer—I do not say anything about other farmers—but there is no doubt the Scottish farmer is about the best in the world.

"There is another point which the farmer must realize. The agricultural laborer has flocked to the standard in shoals. His wife is getting a bigger separation allowance than the poor fellow earned as wages before the war; and can anyone imagine that in face of that the first thing the man will do will be to start work at a figure lower than the allowance which was thought to be the minimum which the State ought to give to keep his wife and family going? It is utterly impossible; you will not do it; you will not get the laborer back to the land unless you pay him a minimum wage, and the farmer must see that.

"There is also another fact which has brought it home to the farmer, and that is that in Mr. Neville Chamberlain's scheme for national service a minimum wage has been fixed at 25s., which is obviously applicable to the agricultural labor, and every farmer knows that, and we propose to take that figure. We discussed for some time the question of whether you should have a wage board to fix wages or whether you should have a fixed minimum. That is what influenced us eventually in not setting up a wage board during the war. The farmer—I will not say preferred to know the worst, but he preferred to know exactly what he had to face. He did not want to be bothered with wage boards; he preferred to concentrate the whole of his mind on plowing the land. After the war wage boards can be set up, and the farmer will then, of course, make use of them. * * * A wage of 25s. per week will be guaranteed to every able-bodied male between the ages indicated in the scheme of Mr. Neville Chamberlain.

"Then comes another question. There will, of course, be disputes. I should hope there will not be many. But there may be disputes. It is obvious that when you guarantee a minimum wage of 25s. old men who have been taken on and kept very much through the charity of the farmer, and whom the farmer could dispense with readily, will come into account. Such an old man might very well be worth 10s. or 11s. a week for just dawdling about the farm, and liking it; but if you say a man of that sort is to have 25s. a week, it is the greatest unkindness you can do him. There are other similar cases of men who are not old, but who may be inefficient or crippled, but who would be able to render a little assistance about the farm. It is obvious that cases of this kind must be exceptions. We propose during the war to adopt a rough-and-ready method similar to the machinery set up by Mr. Neville Chamberlain to decide similar questions under his scheme. * * * My right honorable friend beside me [Mr. Balfour] reminds me that it is not merely during the war that this guaranty of a minimum wage will be given, but during the period when there will be a guaranty of prices. I will come to that period later.

THE QUESTION OF RENTS.

"There is a second plan. * * * There must be a guaranty, if the State is going to guarantee a minimum price, that it shall not inure to the advantage of any individual or of any class. There must not be any return to what happened during the Napoleonic wars. There was an enormous increase in prices, and rents were practically doubled at the end of the war. It would be obviously unfair that any class should take advantage of war conditions, and especially that they should take advantage of a guaranty by the State by which the State might lose money—should take advantage of that State guaranty to raise rents.

"Let me say at once that I have not heard of such cases. No complaints have reached the Government of anything of the kind, and in all the meetings we have had with the agricultural community no one has ever suggested that anything of the kind has happened. When, however, the House of Commons is asked to guarantee prices, I think it is entitled to have a guaranty that even in exceptional cases—cases, for instance, where estates are sold and a new owner comes into possession and proposes to raise rents—there should be some opportunity for review, and that in these cases rents shall not be raised in consequence of this guaranty of price. Of course there are some cases where rents would have been raised even in times of peace, and even under old prices. For instance, you have the case where the old tenant has been allowed to remain for 40 or 50 years at a very low rent, and it has been thoroughly understood that once there was a change of tenancy the landlord intended, and rightly intended, to put up the rent to what was just and fair between the parties. In those cases there is not going to be any interference. Another case is a rather complicated one. The tithe rent charge has gone up enormously since the rise in prices. It is obvious that the landlord should have the right to, at any rate, adjust the rent in consequence of the rise in prices, which brings better profit to the farmer himself. There have not been many cases, but the way in which we propose to deal with these cases is to say that the landlord shall not be allowed to raise his rent except with the consent of the board of agriculture, so that each particular case can be examined by the board of agriculture to see whether there is or is not a case. Powers are to be given to the board of agriculture to enforce cultivation. It is obvious that it is an injustice to the community that a man should sit on land capable of producing food when he is either too selfish or too indolent to do anything. So that the Government must have the right, through the proper department, to enforce cultivation in these cases.

PRICES OF WHEAT, OATS, AND POTATOES.

"I come now to the question of prices. In 1915 the price of wheat was 52s. 10d. a quarter; in 1916, 58s. 5d.; in the last quarter of 1916 it went up to 68s. 2d.; it is now 76s. 3d."

AN HON. MEMBER. "What was it before the war?"

The PRIME MINISTER. "Thirty-four shillings and 11 pence. Let me, however, say this, that the price of everything has gone up, and has gone up not merely for the ordinary community but for the farmer. The farmer has had to pay very much higher wages, and I am glad of it. He has, however, got to pay much higher prices for everything which he uses on his farm. He has got to do with less labor and with inferior labor. I was assured by a farmer whom we consulted, and who is one of the most upright men I have ever met, and who, I am perfectly certain, would not mislead the Government, that on the prices we were guaranteeing the farmer, on the whole, he would not make much out of them, having regard to all the conditions. That was, he said, the very minimum you could give him if you are going to induce him to cultivate at all. Oats in 1915, 30s. 2d.; in 1916, 33s. 5d.; last quarter, 38s. 4d.; and for the week ending the 17th of February, 47s. 3d. Barley has gone up correspondingly, and potatoes—well, the House knows fairly well what the price of potatoes is. I can assure the House that I know fairly well all about the price of potatoes.

"But let me say just a word about that, because there has been a good deal of trouble about it. The moment you interfere with the price of potatoes it becomes a very difficult thing—it is the most difficult thing in the world. My honorable friends knows very well that if we had not interfered the price was going up to £20 a ton. Potatoes had been sold at £20 a ton. Were we to allow that to be done? There is a shortage of potatoes, but that has nothing to do with the submarines. The potato crop is raised here mostly, and the price is determined by what you have got in this country. It would have gone to almost any figure, because the potato crop was a great failure here. It was a great failure in Ireland, and Ireland, instead of being a contributor to this country, had almost ceased to assist us. My right honorable friend Lord Devonport was bound to interfere or to allow the price to get completely out of hand. Of course the moment you begin to interfere with prices there is always a conflict, and everybody who knew nothing about it begins interfering, and here we had the usual results. My right honorable friend was absolutely right in trying to cut down the prices, and the farmer, on the other hand, was equally right in trying to get as good a price as he could. At any rate, the matter has been fought out, and I believe it has been substantially settled, though we had not much time to settle it in. That is the position in regard to potatoes; but the great advantage has been that we have managed to keep down the prices, and, on the whole, we have managed to satisfy the farmers as well. So much for the vexed question of potatoes.

"These are the guaranties we propose to give: We propose that in the present year we shall guarantee—

"For wheat, 60s. a quarter of 504 pounds—that is the minimum.

"For 1918 and 1919, 55s.

"For 1920, 1921, and 1922, 45s. Then the guaranty comes to an end.

"For oats, in 1917, we propose to guarantee 38s. 6d. per 336 pounds. That is higher than the minimum price we arranged with Ireland some months ago.

"The guaranty for 1918 and 1919 is 32s., and

"For the next three years 24s.

"Potatoes we simply propose to guarantee for this coming season at £6 per ton.

"The only guaranty we have given of the maximum is this, that if the State commandeers either potatoes or cereals the prices will not be fixed without the consent of the boards of agriculture of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and therefore, there will be an opportunity of consultation before the prices are fixed. Obviously, you can not limit the power of the State to commandeer for national purposes.

"I hope and trust that with this guaranty the farmers will put their backs into it. We are having excellent reports from Scotland. In Ayrshire, Lanarkshire, Forfar, and other counties they are cutting up pasture on a very considerable scale to sow oats and plant potatoes. Although it is very late, the farmers could increase even now by hundreds of thousands of tons the food of this country this year. And thus they can help to defeat the grimmest menace that ever threatened a country's life. I do not believe that they will fail us. Substitutes are used in every other country. Women are working now on the land, and I hope the farmers will assist to make the best of the labor which is available. They need not apprehend that in the future the country will be indifferent to the importance of the agricultural interest to the State. The country is alive now as it has never been before to the essential value of agriculture to the community, and, whatever befalls, it will never again be neglected by any Government. The war, at any rate, has taught us one lesson—that the preservation of our essential industries is as important a part of the national defenses as the maintenance of our army or our navy. So much will I say about food production."

The prime minister also dealt in his speech with the question of the dependence to a greater extent on home-grown meat, and remarked that the slaughter of cattle would mean a saving of feeding stuff to a considerable extent.

With regard to brewing, he stated that in 1914 there were 36,000,000 standard barrels of beer brewed in this country, and that in 1916 this quantity was reduced to 26,000,000 barrels. Early in the present year it was proposed to reduce the quantity still further—to 18,000,000 barrels. Mr. Lloyd-George, however, made it clear that the quantity is to be cut down still further. "It is absolutely impossible for us to guarantee the food of this country without making a very much deeper cut into the barrelage of the country, and we must reduce it to 10,000,000 barrels. That means that you will save nearly 600,000 tons of foodstuffs per annum, and that is nearly a month's supply of cereals for this country. * * * We must have a corresponding restriction on the placing of spirits on the market."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. KING. In the light of the cloture rule to which attention has just been called, I desire to send to the desk a proposed substitute for the pending measure which I offered several weeks ago, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

SECTION 1. That during the present state of war and until the same shall have been terminated and the fact declared by proclamation of the President, the President is authorized and empowered to exercise for the uses of the United States and of its allies and contractor the right of preemption and priority of purchase in the market of food, animal feed, and fuel stocks, and this preemption may be extended to such other commodity stocks, whether raw, fabricated, or manufactured, as the President shall designate by proclamation. It shall be unlawful as against the preemptive right of the United States for any person to purchase any food, animal feed, fuel, or other designated commodity stocks except for his proper use and consumption. The President may waive the preemption of the United States as to any particular commodity in favor of any use, purpose, or purchaser in his discretion, and in such cases may determine the use to which such commodities shall be subjected. Any hoard, store, or accumulation of food, animal feed, fuel, or other designated commodity stocks in the hands of a purchaser who shall have forestalled the market against the United States, or who shall have purchased or shall hold such stocks for regrating, engrossment, or speculation, may be requisitioned and taken by the President before or after delivery to such purchaser at the primary prices paid or agreed to be paid for such stocks. Notice of intention to exercise the right of preemption as to any particular commodity shall be given by proclamation of the President, but such proclamation shall not be necessary for the exercise of the right in the case of commodities within the general classification of food, animal feed, and fuel. The President may by proclamation limit the preemption to particular commodities, geographical areas or markets, and periods as he in his discretion shall determine. The President is further authorized to requisition commodity stocks in the hands of any producer, fabricator, or holder of the same, and may take such stocks by process of law for the use of the United States, its allies, and contractors. In such cases the President may pay three-fourths of his estimate of the value of such commodities and have immediate use of the same, payment of the balance to be made upon ascertainment of the compensation according to law.

SEC. 2. That the President is further authorized and empowered to establish and provide, by requisition, license, or otherwise, depots, refrigerators, warehouses, and elevators for the reception, storage, preservation, and distribution of stocks of commodities, and to pay for the same the use value of such property as prevailed before the war, or the fees, rates, or rents established by custom or law, or such as he shall deem to be reasonable. There shall be delivered to particular depots, refrigerators, warehouses, and elevators such commodities as the President shall designate; and the President is further authorized to prescribe standards of weight, measure, grading, classification, and packing for commodities purchased and taken for the use of the United States and to be delivered to such depots, refrigerators, warehouses, and elevators under the powers conferred by this act.

SEC. 3. That the President may permit, upon such terms as he shall prescribe, any producer of commodities whose stock shall be packed and prepared in conformity to the standards prescribed by him, to deliver and store the same in such depots, refrigerators, warehouses, and elevators until withdrawal for sale in the consuming market, at which time the United States shall have the first right to purchase such commodities. It shall be lawful for any national bank or bank in the Federal Reserve System to make loans and extend credit upon the security of warehouse or storage receipts for commodities stored in any Government or licensed warehouse. The President is authorized to sell the stocks of the United States at prices to be fixed by him and to exercise discretion as to the purposes and uses for which such stocks shall be sold in particular cases.

SEC. 4. That the President may deliver raw food stocks, whether of live stock or of milk, fish, fruit, vegetables, or cereal grains, to mills, canneries, condenseries, refineries, packing plants, or factories, and require that the same be milled, canned, refined, processed, packed, fabricated, or manufactured according to specifications made by him, and shall pay the reasonable or customary cost for such service; that in ascertaining such reasonable cost the charges for interest, rent, and depreciation shall be computed and distributed to the units of production upon the basis of the capital cost of a standard factory or mill unit of economic size, arrangement, and equipment running at capacity for the time required for the execution of the orders of the United States.

SEC. 5. That the President shall have the power to requisition the products of any coal or ore mine at basic prices for the coal or ore in place equal to the price at the mine less cost of extraction which prevailed before the war, and may deliver the same to any smelter, furnace, refinery, mill, or reduction works and require that the same be received for treatment, extraction, refinement, or fabrication according to specifications to be made by him, and at a cost to be ascertained as prescribed for the processing of food stocks in the foregoing section.

SEC. 6. That the requisitions herein provided may be enforced by process of seizure, libel, and condemnation in any district court of the United States, within the jurisdiction of which the goods or property requisitioned may be found, and preference shall be given to process for this purpose. In cases where compensation is not fixed by law, it shall be ascertained according to law.

SEC. 7. That the President is hereby authorized to make contracts for the purchase of the specified produce of particular farms, lands, mines, factories, mills, or other works. The stipulated price for specific produce shall be uniform in such contracts, and such contracts shall contain such stipulations as to culture, inspection, packing, and delivery as the President may prescribe.

SEC. 8. That in the withdrawal of stocks from particular depots, refrigerators, warehouses, or elevators for export or transport, the President may, in his discretion, consider the needs of the consuming market in particular municipal communities and may arrange to accommodate such markets and consumption with persons or purveyors authorized by law to act upon behalf of any such community.

SEC. 9. That the President is authorized to employ, appoint, and commission agents, purveyors, and committees to carry out the provisions of this act and to fix the compensation of such persons. He may employ any agent or department of the Government and may accept the voluntary services of any person or committee for this purpose.

SEC. 10. That there is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $200,000,000 to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Evidently a quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Husting	McNary	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	James	New	Smith, Mich.
Broussard	Johnson, Cal.	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Calder	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overman	Smoot
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Owen	Sterling
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Page	Sutherland
Curtis	Kellogg	Pittman	Swanson
Fernald	Kendrick	Pomerene	Thompson
Fletcher	Kenyon	Ransdell	Tillman
France	King	Reed	Underwood
Gore	Lewis	Shafroth	Vardaman
Gronna	Lodge	Sheppard	Wadsworth
Harding	McCumber	Sherman	Warren
Hardwick	McKellar	Simmons	Williams
Hitchcock	McLean	Smith, Ga.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. HUGHES] on account of illness.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of sickness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have a short amendment which I desire to offer and have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend section 19 by adding a new paragraph, as follows:

Provided further, That the President, in his discretion, may expend from the amount hereby appropriated not to exceed the sum of $20,000,000 on reclamation projects in accordance with the provisions of the reclamation act approved June 17, 1902, and acts amendatory thereto

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment, so that it may be pending; and I should like to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

There is hereby authorized and established a court to be known as the "administrative court," to consist of one judge for each judicial circuit of the United States, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the terms of said judges at the beginning of the service to be from one to nine years, respectively, to be determined by lot, and thereafter each successor shall hold for the term of nine years unless sooner removed for cause by the President.

The salary of such judge shall be $6,000 annually.

The judge of the administrative court shall have jurisdiction over every case of malfeasance, misfeasance, nonfeasance, or neglect of duty in office of any employee, adviser, committeeman, or officer appointed under the authority of the United States except members of the President's Cabinet and justices of the Supreme Court and judges of the district courts of the United States, with power to issue summons for witnesses, to require the production of evidence, to punish for contempt and render judgment on questions involving official misconduct, and issue writs necessary to carry out the authority herein given. The marshal of the United States district court shall serve the writs of the judges of the administrative court.

Any person, natural or corporate, upon filing bonds for the costs of the suit shall have the right to enter a complaint against any such employee, advisor, committeeman, or officer of the United States for malfeasance, misfeasance, nonfeasance, or serious neglect of official duty. The judge of the administrative court shall impose a fine not exceeding $5,000 upon the complainant where the complaint is frivolous or insincere. The costs of the proceeding shall fall upon the complainant if not sustained, and upon the defendant if sustained.

Upon such complaint being filed, the judge within whose circuit such complaint is made shall immediately require the evidence to be submitted orally and recorded or by depositions within 10 days from the date of the filing of the complaint, except upon special order where compliance is impossible, and within 10 days from receiving such evidence the judge shall make his findings.

There is hereby authorized an appellate administrative court, to consist of three justices to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The appellate administrative court shall make rules and regulations and determine forms of procedure for the administrative court and for appeals therefrom; shall have power to issue such writs as may be necessary to exercise its jurisdiction; and shall sit in Washington City, D. C.

All appeals to the appellate administrative court shall be made within 5 days from date of the publication of the judgment of the judge of the administrative court and shall be passed upon within 30 days of the receipt thereof.

The appellate administrative court justices shall hold office for a period of nine years, one for three years, one for six years, and one for nine years, to be determined by lot, and thereafter each justice shall be appointed for a term of nine years and shall have original jurisdiction over cases arising in the District of Columbia.

The appellate justices shall receive a salary of $7,500 annually.

In the event of a final judgment by the administrative court against an employee or officer of the United States, he shall have the option of resigning within five days of the rendition of the final judgment. In the event his resignation is not submitted, the office shall be declared vacant and filled by a new incumbent.

The dismissal from office under the proceedings herein authorized shall not preclude a trial or conviction under the criminal code where a violation of the statutes is exposed.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, for several days I have been very much concerned about this bill. It has assumed a condition which I think has greatly increased its importance, in its effect upon the country, over the bill as it was originally presented to the Senate. With the amendments that have been attached to this bill, if it should be enacted into law in its present form, I think in its effects upon the country it will be one of the most important measures which has passed the Congress in many years.

The bill came to the House, in which it originated, from the committee to which it was referred without much consideration. It was referred to the Committee on Agriculture of that body on the 11th day of June and was reported out and presented to the Committee of the Whole on the 12th day of June. It received from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of this body, to which it was referred, equally scant consideration. In fact, as first reported to this body from that committee it received practically no consideration. It was presented to us without any recommendations from that committee. It was subsequently recommitted, and came back almost immediately, slightly and, I think, only slightly changed.

Since that time, without any reference to any committee, without any consideration except such as can be procured on the floor of the Senate, many amendments of the most sweeping character and far-reaching effect upon the business interests of the country have been placed upon the bill, some of them as riders.

Mr. President, I am a firm believer in the wisdom of the thorough consideration of important legislation in the council rooms of the committees of this body. I believe that that is a very great safeguard against hasty and unwise legislation. My experience and observation during my 17 years' service here has been that if a measure comes from a committee in bad shape, especially when dealing with big questions, it is exceedingly difficult on the floor of the Senate to get it in good shape.

I had hoped that before we were forced to vote upon this bill, in some way, either by a recommittal to the Committee on Agriculture or by some worked-out scheme, supplementary, if you please, to the House bill, offered in the nature of a substitute, we might get the bill in a shape that would be satisfactory to Senators, satisfactory to those who especially want to give the administration the power that it thinks it needs in order to deal with the situation which confronts us, but who are not willing in giving that necessary power to couple it with powers that may be dangerous to the safety and the prosperity of the business of the country.

But the Senator in charge of the bill has felt it his duty to invoke the recently adopted rule of cloture and a vote is to be taken upon his motion to-morrow morning, leaving insufficient time to untangle the snarl this bill has got into, thereby forcing us to vote on the final passage of the bill in its present unsatisfactory shape without the right or opportunity of further amendment.

Mr. President, it is the first time that this new rule of the Senate has been invoked. I think in this instance it has been invoked before debate has been exhausted, before the full benefits of debate have been realized, and that the effect of adoption of the pending motion by the Senate will be to prematurely force the bill to a final vote.

I do not know what I may do if compelled to vote upon the bill on its final passage in its present shape, but under the circumstances, as much as I shall regret to do it, my sense of duty after the most mature reflection will compel me, if the Senator insists upon a vote of cloture to-morrow morning an hour after we meet, will compel me to cast my vote against that motion, whether any other Senator upon this side of the Chamber shall do so or not.

I had not intended to take any part in this debate, for, as Senators well know, my time during the last six weeks has been so completely taken up with the work of the Committee on Finance that I have had practically no time, or but little time, to attend the sessions of the Senate. For that reason I had intended to refrain from taking any part in the discussion; but in view of my position, as just stated, with reference to cloture, I feel I ought to ask the indulgence of the Senate for a short time while I point out the reasons which impel me to the course I shall pursue.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention to the fact that if cloture is adopted, except by unanimous consent, no amendment will be in order after the vote to bring the debate to a close has been agreed to?

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course, while I did not refer to that, I was not oblivious of it. I intended to embrace that in the general statement I made that the effect of the enforcement of the rule would be to tie our hands not only as to further debate, except under the most fettering conditions and circumstances, but with reference to the power of improving the bill by amendment or by substitute.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Caroline yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. OWEN. The cloture rule provides that, except by unanimous consent, no amendment shall be in order after the vote to bring the debate to a close unless the same has been presented and read prior to that time. So many amendments which are desired to be considered can be read before the Senate and shall be voted upon; and in that event they would be in order, regardless of the language of the rule.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But an amendment could not be presented as a result of thought developed during the debate after that time.

Mr. REED. Let me, for the benefit of the Senator from Oklahoma, suggest this thought: Suppose an amendment has been printed and read, and suppose it is adopted, and, having been adopted, it creates a necessity for some other amendment, and without that other amendment serious consequences may result, that other amendment to supplement the one which has been adopted could not be offered because it had not been read in advance of the agreement, unless unanimous consent were given.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No amendment or change can be made in any amendment that has been read.

Mr. REED. You could not even amend your own amendment by taking a word out, except by unanimous consent. That is the situation we will be in.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think Senators know the situation we will be placed in. I think they fully realize our helplessness so far as amending the bill in a way to remedy those obvious defects we have been discussing here, in the cloakrooms, and in the conference rooms, and upon the floor of the Chamber for several days. We would practically have to vote on the bill as it is now amended. That places the friends of the legislation asked by the administration for the national defense, and as it passed the other House of Congress and as it was originally presented to the Senate from the Committee on Agriculture in a very embarrassing dilemma. It forces those of us who favor the legislation desired by the President to either accept things which are in our judgment fraught with great peril to the business interests of the country or to a vote against legislation which we believe important in connection with the present situation. I say that is a dilemma in which the Senator in charge of the bill ought not to place the friends of this legislation as it was originally presented by his committee to the Senate. I do not believe that half a dozen Senators in this body are satisfied with the bill in its present shape. I believe there are not 20 Senators in this body who favor the riders which have with little consideration been placed on it, and who do not believe there are provisions in it which will operate greatly to the detriment of the public interest.

There is, Mr. President, a feeling in this Chamber that if this matter could be withheld, difficult as it is under the unanimous-consent rule under which we operated the other day, the friends of this legislation could work out some practical scheme by which the bill would be put in a more satisfactory shape, if not in a shape that would be generally acceptable to Senators. I do not know whether it is too late. The Senator from Oregon may change his purpose about this measure, but I do sincerely regret that we shall be forced to act upon the bill under the compulsion of the situation as I have described it. I hope if there is any way in which we can delay this matter, those of us who are honestly and diligently trying to work out some solution of this tangle will be given a reasonable opportunity to accomplish our purpose, whether a majority of Senators do or do not approve it.

In the circumstances which encompass and environ us I am in favor of the legislation asked by the President and passed by the House. That is, I am in favor of the principle embodied in the bill in the form in which it passed the House, which I think is substantially what the President desires and has asked.

There is but one condition under which I would vote to confer the power upon an administrative officer to arbitrarily fix the price of foods and of fuel. Unfortunately, Mr. President, that one condition exists to-day. It is a power dangerous to confer. It is a power that ought never to be conferred except upon and under such compelling circumstances as now surround us.

In consenting to the fixing of the prices of foodstuffs and fuels, while opposing like powers over the prices of the industries generally, I do not mean to take a position discriminatory against the farmer and miner.

There is a situation with reference to foodstuffs and fuels that clearly differentiates them from these other products. I do not think we need to concern ourselves with reference to the prices the Government will have to pay for products for its own use in connection with the war or those bought for our allies, because that power is probably already conferred upon the President. The power to commandeer for purposes connected with the national defense would probably give him sufficient power to prevent any imposition in the prices of food products and of fuel so far as the Government is concerned.

But, Mr. President, the situation of the people of this country with regard to food and fuel is wholly different. With prices already enormously inflated and increasing every day no mortal man can tell how soon the day will come, if the war continues, when the prices of foods and of fuels will mount to such heights in this country that the plain people of the land, the people of moderate incomes and small salaries and wages, will not be able to supply themselves with the comforts or necessaries of life. It is the duty of protecting these poor people of the country against the possibility of an inflation which may advance prices of the absolute necessaries of life and existence beyond their ability to buy that appeals to me with tremendous force. We must protect them against hunger and the chill of winter.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I suggest a unanimous-consent agreement now that I think will be satisfactory to the Senator from North Carolina and satisfactory to the Senate? If the Senator will let me submit it now it may possibly meet his objection and the objections of other Senators.

Mr. SIMMONS. I shall be very glad to have the Senator submit it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I submit the following proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the motion for cloture may be withdrawn, and in lieu of the proposal for cloture that at not later than 5 o'clock p. m., on the calendar day of Saturday, July 21, 1917, the Senate will proceed to vote without further debate upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill H. R. 4961, a bill to provide further for the national security and defense, and so forth, through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition, and that during said day, Saturday, July 21, 1917, beginning at 2 o'clock p. m., no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than 5 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Let me ask if I understood the reading correctly. Does the unanimous request say "not later" than such a date?

Mr. LODGE. We are to commence voting at 5 o'clock.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Let the Secretary read that part of it.

The Secretary read as follows:

That at not later than 5 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Saturday, July 21,

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let the Secretary read the whole of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be again read.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that the motion for cloture may be withdrawn and in lieu of the proposal for cloture that at not later than 5 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Saturday, July 21, 1917, the Senate will proceed to vote without further debate upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill H. R. 4961, a bill to provide further for the national security and defense, etc., through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition, and that during said day—Saturday, July 21, 1917—beginning at 2 p. m., no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than 5 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I merely desire to say that that seems to me to be a liberal provision and will give us the opportunity that some of us desire to see if the bill can not be put into a safe and satisfactory form, so that it can receive practically a unanimous vote of the Senate. It will give us time to do that, and I hope it will be agreed to. I agree to it very cordially.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Massachusetts, would it not be well to start Friday morning limiting the debate, because that would make it sure that every amendment would receive consideration before being disposed of.

Mr. NORRIS. That was the suggestion I rose to make.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to that change of detail, but I want to have the vote taken by Saturday, the 21st.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator from Oregon if he will not make the change suggested by the Senator from Georgia, that five-minute debate be applied to the day before.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. To Friday.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then we will be sure to get rid of amendments before the time for debate ends.

Mr. NORRIS. As far as I am concerned, I think it ought to be earlier.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. So do I; but certainly it should extend to Friday.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am perfectly willing to accept that suggestion.

Mr. NORRIS. The voting is to commence on Saturday at 5 o'clock in the afternoon?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORRIS. Then let the five-minute debate commence to apply on Friday at the beginning of the session?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. NORRIS. Say at 11 o'clock.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry. Of course, if the bill is to remain the unfinished business and is to be kept before the Senate, I say frankly that I think the time allowed is all that anybody ought to ask; but if the bill should now be taken out of the Senate and put into a committee and should be displaced, that is quite different. I think it ought to remain the unfinished business.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am perfectly willing to put that into the agreement.

Mr. LODGE. To be constantly before the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think it ought to be kept constantly before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. And make it the unfinished business.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And to remain the unfinished business until disposed of.

Mr. REED. I ask that the words "the bill shall remain the unfinished business until disposed of" be inserted. I think that is in the interest of getting the bill through. It works both ways.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am perfectly willing to have that done.

Mr. REED. I have just one objection to make. I do not like to have this unanimous consent offered with the threat of cloture hanging over the Senate. I think the cloture proposition ought to be withdrawn and this matter ought to be accepted, and I will make no objection to it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will state to the Senator that the only reason why I put that in in the beginning was that under the cloture rule the motion has to be voted on one hour after the Senate meets on the second calendar day after it is presented. It was not put in in the nature of a threat, but to comply with the rule.

Mr. REED. I do not think the Senator meant that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon whether he would not grant, instead of 5 minutes, 10 minutes for the discussion of amendments.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I accepted the change that was suggested. I have no objection to making it 10 minutes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think the amendments are very important, and a Senator may not have time to present his views fully in five minutes.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask the Senator from Oregon if he does not think we ought to put the time further back than Friday, making another day of limited debate?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; put it Thursday.

Mr. NORRIS. Put it Thursday instead of Friday.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That after the Senate meets on Thursday debate shall be limited to 10 minutes on the bill or any amendments thereto.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I think it is better as it is.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will ask the Secretary to read the proposed agreement as he has changed it, limiting the debate to 5 minutes, beginning on Thursday, instead of 10 minutes, beginning on Friday. I think the Senator from Colorado suggested 10 minutes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; I suggested that that would give a reasonable time for debate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. To commence on Thursday.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; commencing on Thursday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the request as modified.

The Secretary read as follows:

And that after the hour of 11 o'clock a. m. on Thursday, July 19, 1917, no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon the bill or any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will agree to that,

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I was unavoidably absent, and I should like to have the entire agreement read before I consent to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the motion for cloture may be withdrawn and in lieu of the proposal for cloture submits the following:

That at not later than 5 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Saturday, July 21, 1917, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill H. R. 4961, a bill to provide further for the national security and defense, etc., through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the hour of 11 o'clock a. m. on Thursday, July 19, 1917, no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon the bill or any amendment offered thereto: Provided, That the said bill shall remain the unfinished business.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, does not the Senator from Oregon believe that three whole days of 10-minute debate would be too much?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I only accepted that at the suggestion of some other Senator. It is immaterial to me.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think two days would be sufficient.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let me suggest that if that is too much we shall get through with the bill before Saturday. I hope that we will get through with it before Thursday of next week.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We can not get through with it before then.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, yes; the agreement reads "not later than 5 o'clock on Saturday" we vote.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We shall have to vote on Saturday.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No later than then.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The voting starts on that day.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not later than then.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the point, Mr. President.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We have got to vote on Saturday. Let there be no misunderstanding about it.

Mr. NORRIS. It will be remembered that on one section—section 12—we spent two days of five-minute debate.

Mr. LODGE. If there is any misunderstanding about it, we have got to have it corrected. It is all important that Senators should know when the vote is to be taken.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the object of my inquiry.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am willing to change the request, and have the 10-minute debate begin on Friday instead of Thursday. I think it is immaterial as to that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The final vote is on Saturday.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is on Saturday.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The final vote, then, comes on Saturday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unanimous-consent agreement is of no interest to the Chair, but unless it definitely states that the vote is to begin at 5 o'clock on Saturday, the 21st of July, the Chair would rule that if the Senate wished to vote before that time the Senate had a right to do so.

Mr. LODGE. Then, I ask that the unanimous-consent agreement be so amended as to meet that difficulty.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Strike out the words "not later."

Mr. LODGE. Strike out the words "not later," and vote at 5 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That settles the time definitely.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to inquire whether that means that we shall not vote on any amendment until that time?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no.

Mr. NORRIS. That had better be in the agreement. I think it a great deal better the way it was. Unless that statement is not in the agreement, if we should get through with the debate on any amendment, we should have to sit here and wait for two or three days before voting.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I suppose we could vote by unanimous consent whenever we get through with an amendment or with the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to the request made by him that this bill may be made the unfinished business and continue so until voted upon. There may be conditions arise which would make it very undesirable to have that provision in the unanimous-consent agreement. There may be something arise which would cause every Senator in the body to desire to have the bill recommitted for certain purposes; but under the unanimous-consent agreement, if that clause is in it, that could not be done. The question of having it remain the unfinished business rests entirely with the majority of the Senate, anyway. They can make it the unfinished business any day, and I have not any doubt about that. I ask the Senator from Missouri if he will not withdraw that request?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am not wedded to the request. I have not any serious objection to withdrawing it. I really want this unanimous-consent agreement made, for I want to end this bill at sometime. I do not insist upon the request.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah, if this agreement is made as it now stands, whether any other measure could be put before the Senate by temporarily laying aside the unfinished business?

Mr. SMOOT. Under the rule, of course, that could be done.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That can be done under the rule, but could that be done in view of the provision of the unanimous-consent agreement that the bill shall remain continuously the unfinished business?

Mr. SMOOT. I am asking that that part be eliminated from the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I believe with the Senator from Utah that it would be the purpose of the Senate to keep the bill before the Senate as the unfinished business, and, so far as I am concerned, I do not see any use of adding that at the end of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If that provision remains in the agreement, we should be absolutely unable to take up any other business.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think the Senator from Missouri will object to having that withdrawn.

Mr. REED. I have said that it is immaterial to me.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Then, Mr. President, I suggest that those words be eliminated. I now ask that the unanimous-consent agreement be read with that elimination, and I hope the Senate will be able to agree to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request for the unanimous-consent agreement will be read in its present form.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] asks unanimous consent that the motion for cloture may be withdrawn and in lieu of the proposal for cloture submits the following:

That at 5 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Saturday, July 21, 1917, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill H. R. 4961, a bill to provide further for the national security and defense, etc., through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that from and after 11 o'clock a. m. on the calendar day of Friday, July 20, 1917, no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon the bill or any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, as I now understand, the Senator from Oregon has eliminated the provision that the bill shall be kept as the unfinished business?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I was willing to do that, Mr. President. Of course if any Senator thinks he would object to the agreement on that account——

Mr. McCUMBER. Suppose that a Senator wishes to propose an amendment before that time and there should be some other business brought before the Senate. He may have an amendment and might want to speak for half an hour on it, and yet the majority of the Senate could hold some other bill before the Senate. That would prevent any action or any discussion on this measure until that day.

Let me suggest to the Senator that if we have this unanimous-consent agreement and leave the matter open, so that the bill may be displaced as the unfinished business at any time, any Senator desiring to speak upon the bill or present an amendment in the interim may call it up for discussion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Would not the morning hour give us all the time we might need for matters disconnected with this bill? Is not this bill of sufficient importance for us to keep it the unfinished business and to work on it?

Mr. LODGE. Absolutely.

Mr. McCUMBER. It certainly is; but what assurance have we that the majority will keep it as the unfinished business?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not believe there will be any disposition on the part of the Senate to act unfairly about it. I am sure that the Senator from North Dakota would have no difficulty on that score.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will accept the assurance of the Senator from Oregon

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I promise the Senator from North Dakota that I will do my best to keep the bill as the unfinished business; and whenever it suits the convenience of the Senator, or of a goodly number of Senators, to have a morning hour, I shall always consider the wishes of the Senate, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator from Oregon says it will be his intention to keep the bill before the Senate, I am sure he can do so.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will try to do so, Mr. President. Now, I presume that the roll will have to be called, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was waiting to see whether any Senator present objected; and if there was no objection, the Chair would order the roll called.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I understand, there is nothing in the unanimous-consent agreement to prevent the Senate from voting on any amendment when it gets ready to do so, either on Friday or Saturday? I want the construction of the Chair. We have had so many misunderstandings with reference to unanimous-consent agreements that I think we ought to have this perfectly clear.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is nothing in the proposed agreement to prevent the Senate voting on amendments at any time.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Then, Mr. President, if there is no objection on the part of Senators in compliance with the rule, I suggest that the roll be called.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I could not hear what the Chair said about amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair said there is nothing in the proposed unanimous-consent agreement to prevent the Senate voting on amendments at any time prior to Saturday, the 21st of July. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Johnson, S. Dak	New	Smith, Md.
Borah	Jones, N. Mex.	Newlands	Smith, Mich.
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Kellogg	Overman	Smoot
Culberson	Kendrick	Owen	Sterling
Curtis	Kenyon	Page	Sutherland
Fernald	King	Penrose	Swanson
France	Knox	Pittman	Thompson
Frelinghuysen	La Follette	Pomerene	Trammell
Gore	Lewis	Ransdell	Underwood
Gronna	Lodge	Reed	Vardaman
Harding	McCumber	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Hitchcock	McKellar	Sheppard	Walsh
Husting	McLean	Sherman	Warren
James	McNary	Simmons	Williams
Johnson, Cal.	Martin	Smith, Ga.	Wolcott

Mr. HUSTING. I desire to announce the unavoidable absense, on official business, of the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN].

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absense of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of sickness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Secretary will read the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senate that I have stricken out two or three words in the beginning, as will be observed from the reading.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that the motion for cloture be withdrawn and that at 5 o'clock p. m., on the calendar day of Saturday, July 21, 1917, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill H. R. 4961, a bill to provide further for the national security and defense, etc., through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that from and after 11 o'clock a. m., of the calendar day of Friday, July 20, 1917, no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon the bill or any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, there are a number of Senators who would like to have the hour on Saturday when the voting shall begin made 4 instead of 5 o'clock. That will enable us surely to get through before late in the evening. I ask the Senator from Oregon to modify the proposed agreement in accordance with that suggestion, unless some Senator objects.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope that the proposed agreement will not be so modified unless the time when the 10-minute rule shall apply is put further back, so that the 10-minute rule may be in force for a day longer. Otherwise we may have amendments offered with no time to debate them, and every Senator admits that is a very undesirable thing to have happen. On one section we devoted two days under the 5-minute rule, and debate under the 10-minute rule will, of course, consume more time than under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I think the last two suggestions are very good, and I suggest to the Senator from Oregon to modify the proposed agreement so that the 10-minute rule may begin on Friday at a certain hour—say, 11 o'clock.

Mr. NORRIS. It begins on Friday now. It should be Thursday.

Mr. PENROSE. I will correct my statement and say Thursday instead of Friday, and that the vote on the bill be taken at 3 o'clock on Friday, or at 2 o'clock.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am willing to do that.

Mr. NORRIS. Make it 3 o'clock.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, half past 2 o'clock, I will say, if the Senator from Oregon will accept that suggestion.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will accept it. I ask that the unanimous-consent agreement be submitted to the Senate as modified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. How is it now?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Beginning on Thursday the 10-minute rule will apply, and the vote will be had at 3 o'clock on Saturday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. At what time on Thursday will the 10-minute rule apply?

Mr. PENROSE. Let the voting begin at 2.30 o'clock on Saturday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What time on Thursday, the Chair inquires, is it desired to have the 10-minute rule apply?

Mr. NORRIS. On Thursday at 11 o'clock.

Mr. PENROSE. At 11 o'clock on Thursday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the proposed agreement as modified.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that the motion for cloture be withdrawn and that at 2.30 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Saturday, July 21, 1917, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill H. R. 4961, a bill to provide further for the national security and defense, etc., through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that from and after 11 o'clock a. m. of the calendar day of Thursday, July 19, 1917, no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon the bill or any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if I understand the proposed agreement, amendments may be offered as late as 2.30 p. m. on Saturday.

Mr. PENROSE. And after that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They may be offered after that, but not debated.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And even after that hour they may be offered without any opportunity whatever to debate them or to have any explanation made of them or to answer any objection made to them. I do not think that that ought to be permitted, and I hope that the proposed agreement in that respect may be changed. I think that if we are to begin voting at 2.30 on Saturday on the amendments and the bill some time prior to that hour, say some time on Friday, should be fixed after which no amendment can be offered. Then there will be an opportunity to debate amendments at least for 24 hours.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to inserting that. I think the suggestion is a good one, and I will ask that the agreement be modified so that the time for offering amendments be limited to, say, on Friday at 12 o'clock. Would that suit the Senator?

Mr. PENROSE. Or else, Mr. President, why not limit the time when amendments may be offered up to 2.30 o'clock on Saturday and provide that no amendments may be offered after that time.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The vote is to be had at 2.30 o'clock.

Mr. REED. If that is done, I want to make a suggestion. If we cut off the right to offer amendments, we ought at least to retain the right to offer amendments by unanimous consent, because we may accept some amendment that makes other changes necessary.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think that is a good suggestion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And, furthermore, Mr. President, it should be the right of any Senator, if that were done, to present an amendment at any time, even if not then in order, and have it read from the Secretary's desk for information prior to that time, and then it ought to be subject to the common right.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think the proposal of the Senator from Wisconsin, if adopted, will arrange all that. It will leave it open. I will ask the Secretary to insert the proposal of the Senator from Wisconsin that no amendment shall be offered after the hour suggested—2 o'clock on Friday, I think, it was.

Mr. REED. Except by unanimous consent.

Mr. NORRIS. Except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Except by unanimous consent; yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will restate the proposed agreement.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the words "any amendment that may be offered" where they appear in the body of the proposed unanimous-consent agreement and add at the end thereof the following words:

And, further, that no amendment shall be proposed to the bill from and after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. of the calendar day of Friday, July 20, 1917, except by unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, how does the proposed agreement read with the clause stated by the Secretary stricken out? It seems to me it would change the meaning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed modification.

The Secretary read as follows:

That at 2.30 o'clock p. m., on the calendar day July 21, 1917, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, and upon the bill H. R. 4961—

And so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The words "any amendment that may be offered" are stricken out. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none; and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

The agreement as finally made is as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that the motion for cloture be withdrawn and that at 2.30 o'clock p. m., on the calendar day of Saturday, July 21, 1917, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, and upon the bill H. R. 4961, a bill to provide further for the national security and defense, etc., through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that from and after the hour of 11 o'clock a. m., of the calendar day of Thursday, July 19, 1917, no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon the bill or any amendment offered thereto; and, further, that no amendment shall be proposed to the bill from and after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m., of the calendar day of Friday, July 20, 1917, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I ask leave of the Senate to have printed for the use of the Senate the usual number of copies of the bill as amended up to date.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to offer an amendment to the pending bill?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I send to the desk an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the pending bill. I wish to say that I prepared it in anticipation of the cloture which was to be invoked for to-morrow. Since the cloture has been abandoned, I may or may not present this substitute. I wish to say that I have prepared it after a conference with a number of Senators. It does not embody my own views entirely. It contains some provisions to which I object. But I realize, as Macaulay said, that compromise is the essence of politics, and when there are conflicting views to be adjusted there must be reciprocal concessions. I have prepared the amendment in that spirit, and may or may not present it.

I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, upon this point of the power of control, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to some testimony given by Mr. Hoover before a House committee, which I think ought to be given considerable attention by the Senate. I call the attention of the Senate most earnestly to the statement I am about to read. I read an answer of Mr. Hoover:

The plan I proposed was that we should create in that particular a small board which for lack of a better name we would call the food strategy board, the members of the board to be chosen by the food controllers of each country. The board would not be a legislative board nor have binding authority on any of the Governments, but would simply plan the origin of the food supplies for the European allies as between all of the different sources and would determine its distribution as between the different allies, and once it had made its determination, it would hand the actual operation from the European allied point of view over to functions like the wheat executive to purchase that wheat and distribute it. We on this side need to set up, obviously, some organization for food control in order that we may deal with that particular situation among others. Now, just in passing, in setting up an implement of that kind among the allies, we will have set up a dangerous implement for our own country unless we participate in its control. I might point out to you that if any of you gentlemen or myself held that position of the single buying agent with a four months' supply of wheat behind us as they will have, or other cereals when their harvest comes in, we could probably drop the price of wheat in this country to 75 cents a bushel. I do not say they will do it, but it is an implement which must be a matter of concern to us both that they do not manipulate it so to either inflate our prices by a continuation of competition or too excited purchasing or, on the other hand, that they do not use it to depress prices.

Now, as to the problems in this country—

I call attention to this language—

Now, as to the problems in this country, I feel myself very much of a stranger to my own country, as I have been away since the war began.

He might have added and many other years before the war began.

But as I look on the food problem here with the background of Europe and with some knowledge as to currents in this country, it appears to me that we have a lot of Scyllas to get between. There is no royal road in this matter, and in order to clarify what I mean I might take the question of wheat alone and follow it through as to how it strikes my view, looking at it from both sides. There is in this country a very considerable movement for the establishment of a minimum price in order that the producer may have a guarantee of a market; a justifiable measure, indeed, for the stimulation of production, but a minimum price does not protect the consumer. A minimum price is capable of enforcement, because obviously it rests on the Government to pay the money and it can be done. There is also in this country a current of feeling toward maximum prices. That current of feeling obviously originates with the consumer.

A maximum price——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. Let me finish reading the sentence:

A maximum price is a device intended to protect the consumer only, not the producer, and I may say, as a broad generalization, that without some reenforcing implement in the shape of actual control of a large portion of the commodity in question, the maximum price has been a universal failure in Europe.

I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I understand the Senator is reading from Mr. Hoover's testimony before the Senate committee.

Mr. REED. Before a House committee.

Mr. BORAH. In that he evidently condemns the maximum-price project.

Mr. REED. Yes, sir.

Mr. BORAH. How under this bill would you protect the consumer?

Mr. REED. That is a question the Senator will have to answer or Mr. Hoover will have to answer.

Mr. GRONNA. Right in connection with the question asked by the Senator from Idaho, I wish to ask the Senator if he thinks we could protect the consumer by controlling the price of the raw product, as it is called, the raw material wheat. That does not protect the consumer.

Mr. REED. I wish to read some more of this testimony. Continuing where I read:

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not know that I understand that exactly. You mean unless the Government controls at least the surplus, or a large proportion of the surplus, it can not enforce any provision for maximum prices.

Mr. HOOVER. That is true. For instance, the French Government has enforced a maximum price on wheat—

Now, let me call attention to the fact that Mr. Hoover sat before the committee of the Senate and made the statement that price regulation in France had put the price of flour down. I am sorry Mr. Hoover did not give this statement at the same time. Let me read it:

For instance, the French Government has enforced a maximum price on wheat, because they control, by way of the imports on Government account, about 20 per cent of the total consumption. They sold that 20 per cent at a large loss to the Government in order to hold down the indigenous wheat to the Government's maximum. In this country we have a surplus of practically all products, and I see no possibility of success in maximum prices except possibly as a bogie to frighten some one in an emergency.

Mr. President, as we have been proceeding in this bill from time to time a little additional light has filtered in. The statement was boldly made to the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate that the success in keeping down the price of flour in Europe was due to the food control—the speculator was driven out of the market, and so forth; but it transpires now that the French Government at least took the taxpayers' money and put it into the price of wheat, and thus, of course, the price of flour was kept down to the consumer. If the Government paid part of the price the consumer would have that much less to pay.

But this is the point I started to illustrate a moment ago: There are so many angles to this question that one can hardly continue in a straight line. The point I wanted to call attention to is that Mr. Hoover states that whoever controls 20 per cent of a product will control the price of the product, and that the foreign purchasers now that they have the plans to buy through one agent can, unless there be some counter-controlling force set up, reduce the price of wheat to 75 cents a bushel. That illustrates the tremendous power of control that is already vested in the Federal Government, for we have given the control in this wise: We have permitted the President by a simple proclamation to stop the exportation of any article of food, and if he can stop the exportation of any article he absolutely controls, either himself or through his agents, the price of the entire product in this country, for the price of the surplus fixes the price of the product, and Mr. Hoover states that the mere power to buy through one agent would enable them, unless controlled, to reduce the price to 75 cents a bushel of wheat. Under those circumstances, it seems to me, Congress ought to pause before it gives any further or greater power to be exercised by Mr. Hoover or anybody else.

There are one or two statements in this document in addition to those I have called attention to that I want to bring to the attention of the Senate, and in connection with them I want to furnish some facts.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, this is a very important question. If the Senator will yield to me, I should like to call for a quorum.

Mr. REED. I really hope the Senator will not.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Very well, I shall not insist upon it.

Mr. REED. It is late in the afternoon, and I do not blame Senators for going away. What I have said may attract enough attention to be read in the RECORD.

I want the Senate to listen to this statement. Mr. Hoover goes on to state what is necessary and then makes the statement I shall read. I will give a little of the context.

Mr. HOOVER. With an organization of that kind, I see no way where speculation would come. It is quite difficult to set up a control over the whole list of every kind of commodities which would make it wholly impossible for any mortal soul to speculate in some of them. In cotton your control might need to be a general control between two bodies in order to avoid the overlapping of controls.

Let me say to the cotton raisers, all of whom seem to be absent, they had better look out a little, for Mr. Hoover has his eye on them.

In cotton your control might need to be a general control between two bodies in order to avoid the overlapping of controls. There is the question of administration in all these things. The result of three years of turmoil and an enormous accumulation of blundering and experience has been the universal development in every European government of foodstuffs, munitions, and shipping into administration bodies of equal importance with the other administrative bodies of the Government. That has been found necessary in order to give prestige to these organizations under which they may cooperate with the commercial interests of the country and to give the prestige with which they may cooperate with the similar departments of the allies.

Now notice this language:

Above all to create in the minds of the people a certain imaginative alarm resulting in saving and arising from the very fact that you set up a food control in the country. The fact that it is set up and given wide powers is in itself an advertisement to the people that there is cause for concern. The operations of this department fall into those larger issues which I endeavored to describe to you with regard to wheat. They fall into attempts to secure a better internal distribution: to eliminate the overlapping of haulage, and, of almost equal importance, to secure the elimination of waste in consumption and voluntary restraint of the people as to extravagance both in food and living. As the situation involves further degeneration in Europe, we may have to go further with the measures of forced restraint.

The point I call attention to is the creation of an imaginative alarm. That is to be one of the means employed by this distinguished gentleman, and he has employed it most disastrously for our country up to this date. He started in telling the American people in substance and effect that the grim figure of starvation was stalking or was about to stalk through this country. If I wanted to take the time I could quote the utterances of Senators upon this floor to the effect that want, grim and horrible want—starvation—was already fastening itself upon the American citizen. I heard talk upon the floor of the Senate of food riots in New York City. It transpired a little later that, according to the best evidence that could be obtained, probably some German sympathizers or agents went down into the congested and poorer sections of New York City and stirred up a few old ladies to make raids upon the push carts of some Italian vendors of fruit and bananas. But it was all to help create an imaginative alarm. Only to-day we heard a Senator, usually well informed, talking about the starvation and want in our cities.

Mr. President, there has always been in every country of this world, I am sorry to say, some unfortunate people who have always been upon the verge of want. For those people the hearts of all decent men and women bleed, and until we do something to so transform our civilization as to make that sort of thing impossible it will be a sad reality upon this earth.

I said when Mr. Hoover was making these statements, and when other Senators were making them, that there was less of misery and less of want and less of famine than I have ever known to exist in the United States of America. In order to refute these statements I wrote to the mayors of a large number of cities, generally to the mayors of cities of 100,000 inhabitants or more, because it is in such cities and among such congested population that we find hardship and want and sorrow and starvation more than we do in smaller communities. I wrote a letter to the mayors of these cities. I want to read that letter to the Senate. This is the letter, and I say it is a fair letter. Then I am not going to read the replies; I am going to file them; but I am going to give you a digest of the replies. The letter was dated June 18, and mark you that was at the very time when flour was at its highest point, and potatoes were at their highest point. Since that time the price of flour has fallen enormously and the price of potatoes is off 66⅔ per cent and is still falling, and nobody knows where it is going to stop. So these replies were received under the most adverse conditions. Here is the letter I wrote:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON MANUFACTURES,
June 18, 1917.

MY DEAR MAYOR: I am very anxious to secure at once, probably for use in the Senate, a perfectly fair statement of certain conditions in important American cities, to the end that the conditions of these cities may be compared with each other, and also compared with conditions existing at this period of the year 1914. (The latter year being selected because it precedes the European war.)

It will very greatly oblige me if you will briefly answer the following questions at once and forward to me:

1. What is the financial condition of the people and business institutions of your city at the present time compared with that of June, 1914?

2. How does the employment of labor at the present time compare with the wages of 1914?

3. How do wages at the present time compare with the wages of 1914?

4. There is nearly always some portion of the people, usually small, who are unable for various reasons to support themselves in a reasonable degree of comfort. Kindly give me a comparison of the number and condition of this element at the present time with that of June, 1914.

Sincerely, yours,

JAS. A. REED.

Mr. President, I received polite answers to those letters, including the one I am about to read:

CITY OF GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., June 19, 1917.

Senator JAMES A. REED,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your communication to me, as mayor of Grand Rapids, received. The citizens of this city are indignant at your conduct as Senator. You may represent Missouri, but you do not represent the city of Grand Rapids, and until we see a change, I, as mayor, decline to send you any information unless compelled to do so by law, that you may use to delay the plans of not only the Army and Navy but the President in carrying out this war.

Yours, very truly, PHILO C. FULLER, Mayor.

Mr. President, when I received that letter from the distinguished mayor of Grand Rapids I, of course, felt utterly crushed and humiliated, but I was particularly disappointed that I had not received the information. A few days later I was furnished with a newspaper clipping from Grand Rapids. It appears that the mayor, having written this exceedingly courteous and somewhat brilliant reply to my letter of inquiry, had turned the matter over to the public press, and in the Herald of Grand Rapids I find this statement:

HERE ARE THE ANSWERS.

Just what Senator JAMES REED expected to prove by the facts which he sought from Mayor Philo C. Fuller regarding business conditions in Grand Rapids we do not know. In fact, we don't know what the Missouri Senator is about much of the time. But because of the Senator's energetic though unwise opposition to the administration food bill the natural supposition was that he planned an attack upon this measure. It was this thought which prompted Mayor Fuller's patriotic and timely refusal to furnish the desired report. If such were the Senator's plans, he is better off without the statistics.

Believing that it would be impossible for Senator REED or anyone else to gather business statistics showing that Grand Rapids now is anything but immensely prosperous the Herald obtained from City Manager Cummin the Missourian's questions. With the answers, prepared by Municipal Secretary John L. Boer, after careful investigation, they are as follows:

"Question No. 1. What is the financial condition of the people and business institutions of your city at present, compared with June, 1914?

"Answer. Every answer to this question has been that the present conditions are far better than in 1914. Bank deposits have increased since March, 1914, by $10,600,000.

"Question No. 2. How does the employment of labor at present compare with June, 1914?

"Answer. State Employment Bureau and Grand Rapids Manufacturers' Association advise that there never was so great a demand for labor as at present. Other sources of information agree.

"Question No. 3. How do wages at present compare with 1914?

"Answer. State labor bureau statistics show the average daily wage increase from $2.22 in 1914 to $2.38 in 1916. Figures for 1917 are not available, but general impression is that wages have increased materially since last year.

"Question No. 4. There is nearly always some portion of the people unable to support themselves. Kindly give me comparison of the number and condition of this element at the present time with that of June, 1914?

"Answer. In June, 1914, the Social Welfare Association of Grand Rapids assisted 382 cases. In May, 1917, the same association assisted only 207 cases, which indicates clearly that the condition of the city's poor is much better now than it was three years ago. The welfare department advises me that they have had no applications for assistance from an able-bodied man for some time."

Now, the editor comments:

If Senator REED had any hopes that Grand Rapids conditions would aid him in crying calamity as an excuse for discontinuing shipments of food to our allies or otherwise interfering with most efficient warfare he started from an erring premise. Secretary Boer's report permits Grand Rapids to enjoy its second laugh at the expense of Missouri's oratorical Senator.

Incidentally the report provides ample and pleasant proof of the present prosperity of Grand Rapids.

Let me assure the editor of this paper that I am deeply obliged to him for having furnished this bit of truthful statement regarding the condition of Grand Rapids. Let me also assure him that I did not seek the information for the purpose of crying calamity, but I sought it for the purpose of refuting the cry of the greatest calamity howler who has appeared upon this earth since Jeremiah went about crying out "Woe! Woe! Woe!" to all the earth. I wanted to reply to the statements which have been put forward to the effect that this country is upon the very verge of bankruptcy and destruction. Let me, without taking the time to read the answers—and I shall file these letters—give an epitome of the answers. I want to put them in the RECORD. The questions asked of all were the same. There is one city, I believe, in all that gives an adverse report, and it gives an adverse report to nearly all of the questions. That is Mobile, Ala. When you come to ascertain the reasons, the letter gives them, and here they are:

It must be observed that the evil effects of this war upon sea commerce has fallen as a heavy blow upon the coast, outside of a few capital ports like New York. Added to this, I may say we have been peculiarly disfavored by Providence during the last 12 or 15 months by a destructive hurricane and by the advance of the boll weevil, with the two combining to paralyze, in some measure, the agricultural enterprises of Alabama and Mississippi. Then, too, we have here the misfortune to be nearly adjacent to sundry large trade cities and towns that do not lie under the ban of liquor legislation, and therefore attract, in large measure, the personal trade of our territory.

So that is what is the matter with Mobile, Ala.

Let me for a moment take the time of the Senate to call attention to the other answers. This is the answer to question No. 1—"What is the financial condition of the people and business institutions of your city at the present time compared with that of June, 1914?"

"REPLIES RECEIVED FROM CITIES HAVING A POPULATION OF MORE THAN 50,000.

"Question No. 1. What is the financial condition of the people and business institutions of your city at the present time compared with that of June, 1914?

"Little Rock, Ark.: At least 50 per cent better.

"Mobile, Ala.: Distinctly inferior at present time. (Assigns as reason effects of war and migration of negro labor, etc.)

"Denver, Colo.: General depression 1914. Been improving since.

"New Haven, Conn.: Conditions better.

"Waterbury, Conn.: Never better than at present.

"New Britain, Conn.: Far better financial condition.

"Wilmington, Del.: Much better.

"Tampa, Fla.: No worse, although principle industry—phosphate mining—seriously affected on account of war shutting off foreign market.

"Atlanta, Ga.: Better.

"Savannah, Ga.: Excellent shape; ample money.

"Peoria, Ill.: Condition better.

"Rockford, Ill.: Substantially the same. Iron industry booming.

"Springfield, Ill.: Much better.

"Louisville, Ky.: Materially better.

"New Orleans, La.: Decidedly better.

"Portland, Me.: Decided improvement.

"Baltimore, Md.: Much more prosperous.

"Boston, Mass.: Much better.

"Cambridge, Mass.: Little better.

"Brockton, Mass.: Better condition.

"Holyoke, Mass.: Much better.

"Lawrence, Mass.: Big improvement. Bank deposits increased 25 per cent.

"Lowell, Mass.: Far more prosperous.

"Lynn, Mass.: Better.

"New Bedford, Mass.: Considerably improved.

"Somerville, Mass.: Financial condition increased 25 per cent.

"Malden, Mass.: Better.

"Worcester, Mass.: Great improvement.

"Flint, Mich.: Forty per cent improvement.

"Grand Rapids, Mich.: (See letter.)"

I have read you a report as to Grand Rapids—

"Saginaw, Mich.: Better.

"St. Paul, Minn.: Much more prosperous.

"St. Louis, Mo.: Never more prosperity.

"St. Joseph, Mo.: Greatly improved.

"Omaha, Nebr.: Much better condition.

"Manchester, N. H.: Compares favorably; nearly all business assuming greater volume.

"Passaic, N. J.: Compared with 1914 conditions are excellent.

"Trenton, N. J.: Much better.

"Binghamton, N. Y.: Considered improved.

"Rochester, N. Y.: Infinitely better.

"Yonkers, N. Y.: Generally better.

"Albany, N. Y.: Better.

"Cleveland, Ohio: Amount of business unprecedented.

"Cincinnati, Ohio: Much better.

"Dayton, Ohio: Business has been good; better than 1914; had flood in 1913."

They always tell you about that when they report from Dayton, and very properly so.

"Toledo, Ohio: Much better.

"Oklahoma City, Okla.: Had disastrous financial collapse in 1914 account of boom. Volume of business increased 200 per cent.

"Erie, Pa.: Much better.

"Harrisburg, Pa.: Considerably better.

"Altoona, Pa.: Slightly better.

"Reading, Pa.: Very much improved.

"Scranton, Pa.: Better.

"Allentown, Pa.: Much better.

"Houston, Tex.: Better.

"Dallas, Tex.: Business practically the same.

"Fort Worth, Tex.: Condition of business—but of people as a whole hardly as good."

I noticed in reading that gentleman's letter that he has been infected with the idea that there is some disaster hanging in the air.

"San Antonio, Tex.: Condition of the people as a whole not as good. Had unprecedented drought.

There you get a local reason.

"Richmond, Va.: Greatly improved.

"Spokane, Wash.: Much better. Bank deposits increased 50 per cent.

"Tocoma, Wash.: Much improved.

"Milwaukee, Wis.: Ten per cent increase in financial condition of business institutions."

Mr. President, I have the answers to all the other questions, and they are collated in the same way, alphabetically arranged according to the States in which the cities are located.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. REED. When I finish this sentence. I do not care to take the time of the Senate to read them, but I ask permission to put them in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

"REPLIES RECEIVED FROM CITIES HAVING A POPULATION OF MORE THAN 50,000.

"Question No. 2. How does the employment of labor at the present time compare with that of June, 1914?

"Mobile, Ala.: Employment of labor fallen off, due to migration of negro labor to the North.

"Little Rock, Ark.: Demand greater.

"Denver, Colo.: Labor conditions better.

"New Haven, Conn.: Difficult to obtain help.

"Waterbury, Conn.: Difficult to obtain labor.

"New Britain, Conn.: Scarcity of labor, surplus 1914.

"Wilmington, Del.: Labor scarce, demand great.

"Tampa, Fla.: Labor scarce, owing to fact that large amount of negro labor has migrated to the North.

"Atlanta, Ga.: Labor scarce.

"Savannah, Ga.: All labor employed.

"Peoria, Ill.: Demand for labor exceeds supply.

"Rockford, Ill.: Labor in demand, plenty of work.

"Springfield, Ill.: Less idle labor by 100 per cent.

"Louisville, Ky.: Have work for all.

"New Orleans, La.: Idle population reduced to a minimum.

"Portland, Me.: Demand in excess of supply.

"Baltimore, Md.: Labor more fully employed; practically no unemployment.

"Boston, Mass.: Number unemployed greatly diminished.

"Cambridge, Mass.: Difficult to get all labor required.

"Brockton, Mass.: Number unemployed very small, much smaller than in 1914.

"Holyoke, Mass.: Most lines about the same number employed; ironworkers increased 60 per cent.

"Lawrence, Mass.: Work for everybody; mills running full capacity; large number out of work in 1914.

"Lowell, Mass.: Labor at a premium; business of employment bureaus at a standstill; civil-service list exhausted on public works; more unemployed in 1914 than could be accommodated.

"Lynn, Mass.: Conditions are improved.

"New Bedford, Mass.: Labor scarce.

"Somerville, Mass.: Hard for city to obtain labor.

"Malden, Mass.: Plenty of work for everyone.

"Worcester, Mass.: Skilled labor employed June, 1914, 15,000; skilled labor employed June, 1917, 42,000 to 43,000; no figures on unskilled labor, but 'everyone is working now.'

"Flint, Mich.: Labor conditions better.

"Grand Rapids, Mich.: See letter.

"Saginaw, Mich.: More generally employed.

"St. Paul, Minn.: Many more people employed.

"St. Louis, Mo.: More unemployment in 1914 than now; no need for able-bodied persons to be out of work.

"St. Joseph, Mo.: Demand for labor greater and more general.

"Omaha, Nebr.: Surplus of labor 1914. This year every man can find work. Shortage in common labor. Wages common labor increased 50 per cent.

"Manchester, N. H.: Labor scarce—hard to secure good workmen.

"Passaic, N. J.: Labor scarce.
"Trenton, N. J.: Demand exceeds supply.
"Binghampton, N. Y.: 'Apparently all employed now.'
"Rochester, N. Y.: 'Can not get labor now.'
"Yonkers, N. Y.: Employment of labor much better now.
"Albany, N. Y.: 'Employment of labor less than it was three years ago.'
"Cleveland, Ohio: Conditions better.
"Cincinnati, Ohio: Two and one-half times as many now employed.
"Dayton, Ohio: Demand for labor much heavier; supply inadequate.
"Toledo, Ohio: Labor better employed; scarcity especially in skilled trades.
"Oklahoma City, Okla.: Surplus in 1914, shortage to-day.
"Erie, Pa.: Labor is high and men are scarce.
"Harrisburg, Pa.: More labor employed and greater demand than in 1914.
"Altoona, Pa.: More labor employed; practically no idle men.
"Reading, Pa.: Labor scarce.
"Scranton, Pa.: Labor scarce.
"Allentown, Pa.: Labor fully employed—difficult to obtain.
"Houston, Tex.: Labor more nearly employed.
"Fort Worth, Tex.: No one need be without work.
"Dallas, Tex.: Seems to be less demand; building operations and kindred activities suspended.
"San Antonio, Tex.: Labor scarce.
"Richmond, Va.: Labor scarce.
"Spokane, Wash.: Labor conditions much improved.
"Tacoma, Wash.: Employment in 1914 compared to June, 1917, probably in about the ratio of 78 per cent to 98 per cent.
"Milwaukee, Wis.: General labor conditions better.

"REPLIES RECEIVED FROM CITIES HAVING A POPULATION OF MORE THAN 50,000.

"Question No. 3. How do wages at the present time compare with the wages in 1914?
"Mobile, Ala.: Wages higher; municipality now paying 10 per cent to 15 per cent more.
"Little Rock, Ark.: General increase of about 5 per cent.
"Denver, Colo.: General increase.
"New Haven, Conn.: Wages increased 15 per cent to 25 per cent.
"Waterbury, Conn.: Wages high; difficult to obtain common labor at less than 30 cents per hour; many contractors offering 35 cents to 40 cents.
"New Britain, Conn.: Increase of about 30 per cent.
"Wilmington, Del.: Wages 25 per cent to 40 per cent higher.
"Tampa, Fla.: General increase 10 per cent to 15 per cent.
"Atlanta, Ga.: Wages increased to about 25 per cent.
"Savannah, Ga.: Wages higher.
"Peoria, Ill.: Wages increased.
"Rockford, Ill.: Wages 25 per cent to 33⅓ per cent higher.
"Springfield, Ill.: General increase; common labor about 15 per cent.
"Louisville, Ky.: Increase.
"New Orleans, La.: Increase.
"Portland, Me.: Wages 25 per cent higher.
"Baltimore, Md.: Wages higher.
"Boston, Mass.: Wages higher.
"Cambridge, Mass.: Wages higher.
"Brockton, Mass.: Increase of about 15 per cent.
"Holyoke, Mass.: Increase of from 20 to 40 per cent.
"Lawrence, Mass.: Increase from 25 to 40 per cent.
"Lowell, Mass.: General increase 10 to 20 per cent.
"Lynn, Mass.: Wages higher.
"New Bedford, Mass.: Increase of about 10 per cent.
"Somerville, Mass.: Wages higher.
"Malden, Mass.: General increase.
"Worcester, Mass.: Increase 25 to 40 per cent.
"Flint, Mich.: Wages higher.
"Saginaw, Mich.: Wages higher.
"St. Paul, Minn.: Wages 10 to 25 per cent higher.
"St. Louis, Mo.: Wages higher.
"St. Joseph, Mo.: General increase.
"Omaha, Nebr.: Increase of from 10 to 12½ per cent.
"Manchester, N. H.: General increase.
"Passaic, N. J.: Wages higher than in history of city.
"Trenton, N. J.: Wages higher.
"Binghamton, N. Y.: Wages higher.
"Rochester, N. Y.: Wages higher.
"Yonkers, N. Y.: General increase.
"Albany, N. Y.: Wages higher.
"Cleveland, Ohio: Wages higher.
"Cincinnati, Ohio: Forty per cent increase.
"Dayton, Ohio: Increase of from 25 to 100 per cent.
"Toledo, Ohio: General increase.
"Oklahoma City, Okla.: Increase of from 20 to 30 per cent.
"Erie, Pa.: Wages higher.
"Harrisburg, Pa.: Wages higher.
"Altoona, Pa.: General increase.
"Reading, Pa.: In a large number of cases wages have more than doubled.
"Scranton, Pa.: Increase 35 per cent.
"Allentown, Pa.: General increase.
"Fort Worth, Tex.: Increase 2 to 33 per cent.
"Houston, Tex.: Wages high in some industries; common labor and mechanics receiving about same wage.
"Dallas, Tex.: General increase.
"San Antonio, Tex.: Wages higher.
"Richmond, Va.: General increase.
"Spokane, Wash.: Wages higher.
"Tacoma, Wash.: Increase 10 to 50 per cent.
"Milwaukee, Wis.: Increase 7½ to 15 per cent.
"Question No. 4. There is nearly always some portion of the people, usually small, who are unable for various reasons to support themselves in a reasonable degree of comfort. Kindly give me a comparison of the number and condition of this element at the present time with that of June, 1914.
"Mobile, Ala.: Proportion of absolutely indigent decidedly greater. Cites effect of war on commerce. Had severe hurricane in last 12 months, together with advance of boll weevil. Lost a great deal of trade to adjacent territories not having liquor legislation.
"Little Rock, Ark.: June, 1914, 498 cases, 20 transient or homeless men. June, 1917, 218 cases, 11 transient or homeless men.
"Denver, Colo.: Number practically the same.
"New Haven, Conn.: Does not specifically answer question, but in general statement shows that where hundreds were out of work in 1914 it is now difficult to obtain help.
"Waterbury, Conn.: Number less. (See table attached to letter.)
"New Britain, Conn.: Condition about the same. Slight increase in number of patients in insane hospitals.
"Wilmington, Del.: Less number of dependents.
"Tampa, Fla.: Increase of about 10 per cent. Many from other sections of the country.
"Atlanta, Ga.: Unable to make comparison, but in all probability number is less.
"Savannah, Ga.: If any men are unable to support themselves it must be due either to physical inability or to unwillingness to work.
"Peoria, Ill.: About the same number.
"Rockford, Ill.: Amounts paid for Rockford Township, April, 1914, to April, 1915, $15,497.37; April, 1915, to April, 1916, $14,854.14; April, 1916, to April, 1917, $10,165.24.
"Springfield, Ill.: Less number dependents.
"Louisville, Ky.: Less number dependents.
"New Orleans, La.: Comparatively small if not insignificant numbers unable to support themselves.
"Portland, Me.: Less number.
"Baltimore, Md.: Smaller number.
"Boston, Mass.: (See letter.)
"Cambridge, Mass.: Less number.
"Brockton, Mass.: (See letter.)
"Holyoke, Mass.: Number of families June, 1914, 351; number of families June, 1917, 233. Amount expended June, 1914, $10,144.14; amount expended June, 1917, $5,842.36.
"Lawrence, Mass.: Number fallen off about 55 per cent.
"Lowell, Mass.: Number slightly less.
"Lynn, Mass.: Not much difference.
"New Bedford, Mass.: Large number. Gives as reason the large number of enlistments.
"Somerville, Mass.: (See letter.)
"Malden, Mass.: About the same number.
"Worcester, Mass.: (See letter.)
"Flint, Mich.: Although population has increased about one-third have no larger number of dependents.
"Saginaw, Mich.: Number about the same.
"St. Paul, Minn.: Number very much less.
"St. Louis, Mo.: Less number dependents.
"St. Joseph, Mo.: Larger number dependents. (Assigns reason to high cost of living.)
"Omaha, Nebr.: Has no definite information, but estimates the number to be 25 per cent greater.
"Manchester, N. H.: Of the opinion that it is a greater hardship for many families to support themselves in a reasonable degree of comfort at present time than in 1914, due largely to high cost of living.
"Passaic, N. J.: Number materially lessened.

"Trenton, N. J.: June, 1914, 171 families; June, 1916, 92 families.

"Binghamton, N. Y.: Usual number of dependents.

"Rochester, N. Y.: Only those unable to work are dependents.

"Yonkers, N. Y.: Only a small number unable to support themselves.

"Albany, N. Y.: Not so many applicants for relief.

"Cleveland, Ohio: June, 1914, 2,223 families, or 8,198 persons; June, 1917, 1,120 families, or 5,123 persons.

"Cincinnati, Ohio: Twenty per cent less than in June, 1914.

"Dayton, Ohio: June, 1914, 227; June, 1917, 184.

"Toledo, Ohio: May, 1914, 183 families; May, 1917, 111 families.

"Oklahoma City, Okla.: Number very small; confined to sick.

"Erie, Pa.: Number great deal less.

"Harrisburg, Pa.: Number greatly decreased.

"Altoona, Pa.: Estimates number to be practically the same.

"Reading, Pa.: No excuse for anybody to be unable to support themselves.

"Scranton, Pa.: Number very small.

"Allentown, Pa.: There is very little evidence of want among our people.

"Houston, Tex.: About the same number.

"Dallas, Tex.: Dependents are on the decrease in Dallas.

"Fort Worth, Tex.: This element * * * practically unknown in this section now.

"San Antonio, Tex.: Condition better.

"Richmond, Va.: Families helped fiscal year 1914, 771; families helped fiscal year 1917, 433; amount expended, 1914, $8,363.29; amount expended, 1917, $5,263.63.

"Spokane, Wash.: Less in number.

"Tacoma, Wash.: Less number.

"Milwaukee, Wis.: Conditions better."

Mr. REED. Now, I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. CALDER. Has the Senator received an answer from the mayor of New York City?

Mr. REED. I believe not. If so, it is not collated here.

Mr. CALDER. I am very sorry, because the conditions there are the same as in the other cities, practically every workingman being employed at wages approximately from 10 to 15 per cent higher than two years ago.

Mr. REED. Well, these answers are coming in in a peculiar way. They came in first very rapidly, and now every once in a while I get a letter from some mayor who apologizes for having overlooked the request or some mayor who has referred the letter to some department of the city government. Therefore, I take it, I may yet receive a letter from the mayor of New York.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I should like to add that the cost of living in New York has increased at least 25 per cent over that of two years ago.

Mr. REED. I have no doubt of that; but the point is this: The answers to the questions go directly into that proposition—and I could take the time to read them, but they will be printed in the RECORD, where they can be read, and I will file the original letters—but the answers to those questions which relate to the cost of living amount to this, that labor is better employed, that wages are better, that those who are applying for public help are reduced in number, and that is nearly, if not quite, universal. Nearly all of these mayors in their letters state that the high cost of living is burdensome to their people. Some of them complain bitterly about it. I call attention to the fact that these letters were written on the very day when wheat had touched its zenith, when flour was the highest, when potatoes were $12 a barrel, and every calamity howler throughout the world, it seemed to me, was standing on the house tops shouting, "Woe, woe, woe!" to the American people.

Now, Mr. President, since then what has happened? The price of wheat has fallen more than a dollar a bushel, and the new crop is not yet in the market in sufficient quantities to affect prices; but the corner that was created by the allies coming into our market and purchasing enormous quantities has been broken. If anybody shall rise here to deny that was the chief cause of the rise in prices, let me say that I have Mr. Hoover's testimony before me that it was the chief cause.

Since these letters were written potatoes have fallen in New York from $12 to as low as $2 a barrel. Since these letters were written old Mother Nature has given her answer to the calamity howler, and I want to read into the RECORD, so that it will at least be preserved in this dry-as-dust document, that some future historian may go through, as Carlyle went through the musty documents and tomes of France when he coined the phrase "dry as dust." I want to put into the RECORD this from the Washington Post of this morning:

BUMPER CROPS OF FOOD—BILLION-BUSHEL INCREASE FARMERS' RESPONSE TO WILSON'S APPEAL—CORN YIELD LARGEST EVER—FOUR, AND POSSIBLY FIVE, OTHER CROPS WILL MAKE NEW RECORDS, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE FINDS—PRODUCTION OF PRINCIPAL FOODSTUFFS ALL TOLD TO BE 6,093,000,000 BUSHELS.

A billion bushels increase over last year's production in the principal food crops is the response American farmers have made to President Wilson's April appeal, saying that upon them "rests the fate of the war and the fate of nations."

The extent of the farmers' response was disclosed yesterday when a production of 6,093,000,000 bushels of principal food crops was forecast in the Department of Agriculture's July crop report. It shows this year's corn crop will be the largest in history, except one, and that four, and possibly five, other crops will make new high records.

RECORD CORN CROP.

The corn crop, which, with favorable weather from now on, may equal the bumper yield of 1916, shows an increase of 541,000,000 bushels over last year, with a total of 3,124,000,000 bushels. The acreage is 14 per cent larger than last year.

The combined winter and spring wheat crop will be 38,000,000 bushels more than last year's, with a total of 678,000,000 bushels.

Barley, with prospects of the third largest crop ever grown, will exceed last year's production by 33,000,000 bushels, with an output of 214,000,000 bushels.

OATS UNDER RECORD.

Oats promises to exceed last year's crop by 201,000,000 bushels, the total production being forecast at 1,453,000,000 bushels. That is slightly under the record. Improvement between now and harvest, however, may result in a record crop.

While potato production on a 22½ per cent increase in acreage, will be a record crop with 452,000,000 bushels, or 167,000,000 bushels more than last year, not taking into account the home-garden production, which this year is estimated to be much larger than ever before.

Rye, another record crop this year, will amount to 56,100,000 bushels, or 8,700,000 bushels more than last year.

SWEET POTATOES' BIG YIELD.

Sweet potatoes will register a new high total with 82,200,000 bushels, or 11,000,000 bushels more than last year.

Rice production will be 34,400,000 bushels, the second largest crop ever produced.

Production of tobacco will break another record with a crop of 1,215,000,000 pounds, 64,000,000 pounds more than was grown last year.

Over a three billion corn crop; over three thousand million bushels of corn; to state it accurately, 3,124,000,000 bushels! We thought we were doing a wonderful thing the other day, some of us, when we said that we would conserve the corn crop by stopping the manufacture of any of it into whisky. I have no quarrel with that kind of conservation—not a bit—but what we saved was so small in comparison with the total crop that it will not be counted in the grand aggregate.

Now, Mr. President, this crop is coming on. If we act wisely, and the Lord is equally kind next year, we will have another crop like it. If we act unwisely, we will not have another crop like this. We can kill off this great productivity. An ordinary insect can sometimes destroy a forest monarch that has been a hundred years in growing. A foolish interference can destroy the confidence that is necessary in order to induce men to plant and to toil. It takes the hands of myriads of men to produce these mighty crops, this six billion bushels of foodstuffs; but it takes confidence in the hearts and souls of those people to start them sowing in the springtime, toiling in the summer sun, struggling and battling and contending with the elements until the winter's frosts have fallen on the earth. If Congress does nothing, we may be assured the crops will come; if Congress acts wisely, the crops will yet come; but if Congress plays the fool, they will not come.

When you say to the 45,000,000 people engaged in the business of farming, "We propose to turn over your destiny, your fortunes, your labor, to the appraisement of one man," that man giving testimony before a committee of Congress that he is not well posted in regard to American affairs because of his long absence from this country, you do a thing that is utterly defenseless, utterly outrageous, utterly infamous—for these American citizens have some rights that must be respected—and you do a thing that is utterly foolish.

What made the farmer plant, as he planted this year, more corn than he ever did before in the history of the world? Because there was a great world's market opening its doors; because there were good prices being offered; and then, in addition to that, there was a thing that always touches the farmer's heart—there was the appeal of the country to him to produce for the benefit of the hungry world; and he responded as he has always responded. Let us see to it that we treat him with justice. Let us see to it that if there must be any control of his prices, that control shall be put in the hands of a commission having some knowledge of farming, some knowledge of costs, some knowledge of the struggle of the agriculturist, and not in the hands of some man who admits his lack of knowlege regarding American affairs.

Mr. President, I think it a very happy thing that this bill has gone over and we are to have time to consider it. I do not intend to take the time of the Senate further to-night. Indeed, there are very few Members here. We have had strenuous days and been under a great strain. But at some time, if no one else does it, I intend to call the attention of the Senate to the law in regard to gentlemen dealing for themselves and at the same time for the Government of the United States. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] put into the RECORD one of the statutes governing this matter, and did the country a service when he placed that statute before the country. I want to have the privilege of calling attention to the immorality and illegality of any scheme or plan that proposes to allow a man to represent his own business in dealing with the United States Government and at the same time to represent that Government.

RECESS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, if no one else is ready to speak this evening, I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m., Tuesday, July 10, 1917) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, July 11, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, July 10, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty Father, in whom all our longings, hopes, and aspirations are centered, let Thy blessing descend upon us and inspire us with the largest hopes and brightest anticipations; that we may work and faint not and reálize at last for ourselves and for all mankind the desires of Thine own heart as exemplified in the life and character of Thy Son Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2423. An act to amend section 9 of the act entitled "An act to alter and amend an act entitled 'An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific Railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon,' approved July 25, 1866, as amended by the acts of 1868 and 1869, and to alter and amend an act entitled 'An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Portland to Astoria and McMinnville, in the State of Oregon,' approved May 4, 1870, and for other purposes," approved June 9, 1916;

S. 309. An act authorizing the county of Clallam, in the State of Washington, to convey to the city of Port Angeles certain lands;

S. 980. An act for the relief of Hector A. Robichon;

S. 2469. An act to authorize the change of name of the steamship Caldera to A. T. Kinney;

S. 1418. An act to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Harry Graham captain of Infantry; and

S. J. Res. 78. Joint resolution to suspend, during the present war with Germany, the requirement that not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made on each mining claim during each year for all owners who, in lieu of such assessment work, expend the sum of $100 in the raising or manufacturing of products necessary for the maintenance of the Army, Navy, or people of the United States, or shall perform 25 days of labor in any beneficial occupation, or pay into the Treasury of the United States $100.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 2423. An act to amend section 9 of the act entitled "An act to alter and amend an act entitled 'An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific Railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon,' approved July 25, 1866, as amended by the acts of 1868 and 1869, and to alter and amend an act entitled 'An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Portland to Astoria and McMinnville, in the State of Oregon,' approved May 4, 1870, and for other purposes," approved June 9, 1916; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 309. An act authorizing the county of Clallam, in the State of Washington, to convey to the city of Port Angeles certain lands; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 980. An act for the relief of Hector A. Robichon; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 1418. An act to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Harry Graham captain of Infantry; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. J. Res. 78. Joint resolution to suspend, during the present war with Germany, the requirement that not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made on each mining claim during each year for all owners who, in lieu of such assessment work, expend the sum of $100 in the raising or manufacturing of products necessary for the maintenance of the Army, Navy, or people of the United States, or shall perform 25 days of labor in any beneficial occupation, or pay into the Treasury of the United States $100; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4960) to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4960, with Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4960, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4960) to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, general debate is exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

Mr. ADAMSON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia desire that the bill be read?

Mr. ADAMSON. No; the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the substitute to the bill.

Mr. MANN. What is the request?

The CHAIRMAN. That the substitute be read.

Mr. ADAMSON. With all the privileges of an original bill.

Mr. MANN. Of course the substitute has not yet been offered, but let the gentleman ask that it be considered that the substitute has been offered.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understood that was done yesterday.

Mr. MANN. It has not been offered.

Mr. ADAMSON. It is offered, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I offer it and ask that it be considered as read.

Mr. MANN. Let the gentleman ask that it be considered as offered and then read as an original bill. That is all right.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the substitute be considered as offered and then read as an original bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers the substitute and asks that it be considered as an original bill.

Mr. MANN. He asks that it be considered as offered, and then read under the five-minute rule.

Mr. ADAMSON. The reading of the bill the first time was dispensed with yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the committee amendment, which he sends to the Clerk's desk, be considered as offered, and that it be read for amendment under the five-minute rule as an original bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the substitute for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the word "enemy," as used herein, shall be deemed to mean—

(a) Any individual, partnership, or other body of individuals, of any nationality, resident within the territory (including that occupied by the military and naval forces) of any nation with which the United States is at war, or resident outside the United States and doing business within such territory, and any corporation incorporated within such territory of any nation with which the United States is at war or incorporated within any country other than the United States and doing business within such territory: Provided, That nothing in this act shall impair or affect the President's proclamation of April 6, 1917, or any amendment or modification thereof, in relation to the branches of enemy or ally of enemy insurance companies in the United States, when such branches are under the management of citizens of the United States, and subject to rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce.

(b) The government of any nation with which the United States is at war, or any political or municipal subdivision thereof, or any officer, official, agent, or agency thereof.

(c) Such other individuals, or body of individuals, as may be natives, citizens, or subjects of any nation with which the United States is at war, wherever resident or wherever doing business, as the President, if he shall find the safety of the United States or the successful prosecution of the war shall so require, may, by proclamation, include within the term "enemy."

The words "ally of enemy" as used herein shall be deemed to mean—

(a) Any individual, partnership, or other body of individuals, of any nationality, resident within the territory (including that occupied by the military and naval forces) of any nation which is an ally of a nation with which the United States is at war, or resident outside the United States and doing business within such territory, and any corporation incorporated within such territory of such ally nation or incorporated within any country other than the United States and doing business within such territory.

(b) The government of any nation which is an ally of a nation with which the United States is at war, or any political or municipal subdivision of such ally nation, or any officer, official, agent, or agency thereof.

(c) Such other individuals, or body of individuals, as may be natives, citizens, or subjects of any nation which is an ally of a nation with which the United States is at war, wherever resident or wherever doing business, as the President, if he shall find the safety of the United States or the successful prosecution of the war shall so require, may, by proclamation, include within the term "ally of enemy."

The word "person," as used herein, shall be deemed to mean an individual, partnership, association, company, or other unincorporated body of individuals, or corporation.

The words "United States," as used herein, shall be deemed to mean all land and water, continental or insular, in any way within the jurisdiction of the United States or occupied by the military or naval forces thereof.

The words "the beginning of the war," as used herein, shall be deemed to mean midnight ending the day on which Congress has declared or shall declare war or the existence of a state of war.

The words "end of the war," as used herein, shall be deemed to mean the date of exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace, unless the President shall, by proclamation, declare a prior date, in which case the date so proclaimed shall be deemed to be the "end of the war" within the meaning of this act.

The words "to trade," as used herein, shall be deemed to mean—

(a) Pay, satisfy, compromise, or give security for the payment or satisfaction of any debt or obligation.

(b) Draw, accept, pay, present for acceptance or payment, or indorse any negotiable instrument or chose in action.

(c) Enter into, carry on, complete, or perform any contract, agreement, or obligation.

(d) Buy or sell, trade in, deal with, exchange, transmit, transfer, assign, or otherwise dispose of, or receive any form of property.

(e) To have any form of business or commercial communication or intercourse with.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wish to draw the attention of the gentleman from Virginia to line 21, on page 3, the paragraph beginning, "The words 'the beginning of the war,' as used herein," and so forth.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman should look at the other print of the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes. At the top of page 26 of the new bill.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The paragraph reads:

The words "the beginning of the war," as used herein, shall be deemed to mean midnight ending the day on which Congress has declared or shall declare war or the existence of a state of war.

I take it that this bill, like other war bills that have been passed by this Congress, is a bill making law for the emergency that now exists. Is not that the fact?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Emergencies growing out of the war.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And it is intended to cover the existing European war?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the gentleman generally states it correctly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Why, then, on line 5, use the words "or shall declare war," looking to future wars?

Mr. MONTAGUE. This is a general act. I will say to the gentleman, While it meets the present emergencies, it was thought best that those words should be inserted; they might be very necessary hereafter without the enactment of further legislation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then this bill is not to be put in the same category with other war bills that have been passed. It is not an emergency measure for the present European war?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think that the bill is intended to meet the emergencies growing out of the present world-wide conflict; but inasmuch as we have this bill upon this particular subject, there is no reason why there should not appear in it a general statement meeting similar conditions hereafter arising.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let us see if we understand the situation. Up to the present time we have simply declared the existence of a state of war with the Imperial Government of Germany.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is true.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And this bill, so far as trading with the enemy is concerned, is intended to apply only——

Mr. MONTAGUE. Only to Germany.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Only to the enemy in Germany or to allies of the enemy in Germany?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes. But suppose war should be declared with some other power within two or three weeks. Why not have a law to fit that case rather than to come back here and go over all this again?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is that the purpose of the language used in this paragraph?

Mr. MONTAGUE. So far as respects this particular thing, that is the purpose.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the gentleman wants to be prepared against the possibility of some other declaration of war, apart from that as to the state of war now existing with Germany?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am not exuberant in my anticipations of other troubles, but I am not shutting my eyes to them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What I want to know is whether the gentleman is preparing permanent legislation, or whether this bill is intended only to meet the exising emergency?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The bill as a whole is intended to meet the existing emergency. The paragraph to which the gentleman has animadverted goes beyond that, as the gentleman has stated. War may produce other complications. We do not know. Other similar emergencies may arise. Other wars may grow out of this war; and therefore it is best to make one bite of a cherry.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think we have not taken this anticipatory step in any other war bill; this evidently is intended to be permanent legislation, and to cover any situation that may arise—any war that may be declared hereafter.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the gentleman's construction is in the main a correct one.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think it is clear that the committee itends to make permanent legislation.

Mr. MONTAGUE. With respect to this particular matter, it does.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. A succeeding paragraph of this bill says:

The words "the beginning of the war," as used herein, shall be deemed to mean midnight ending the day on which Congress has declared or shall declare war or the existence of a state of war.

Now, Congress passed a joint resolution declaring a state of war to exist. Is the time determined by the passage of that joint resolution or by the time when the President signed it?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can answer the question of the gentleman only by saying that the language of this bill, so far as trading with the enemy is concerned, puts it in effect as of midnight on the day Congress "has declared or shall declare war."

Mr. FESS. Is it the midnight after Congress acted or midnight after the President signed the joint resolution?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I leave the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] to reply, but the language is plain to me. It means that so far as trading with the enemy is concerned the state of war begins as of midnight——

Mr. FESS. Of which day?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The day on which Congress "has declared or shall declare war."

Mr. MANN. So far as the passage of bills and joint resolutions is concerned the President is a part of the Congress, and when Congress passes an act the date that it passes it is when the President signs it; or, if he vetoes it, when it is passed over his veto. That is always the construction of it.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield to an interruption?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. The only thing that bothered me was that the Constitution says that the declaration of war is a matter for Congress, not the executive department.

Mr. MANN. The Constitution also provides that all joint resolutions passed by Congress shall be submitted to the President for signature and approval or disapproval.

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And in that respect the President is a part of Congress in the passage of bills and joint resolutions.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment. On page 24, line 8, after the word "any," I move to strike out the word "or" and insert in lieu thereof a comma, and after the word "modification" insert the words "or revocation."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 24, line 8, after the word "amendment," insert a comma, strike out the word "or," and after the word "modification" insert the words "or revocation."

So that the line as amended will read:

The President s proclamation of April 6, 1917, or any amendment, modification, or revocation thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONTAGUE. On page 24, line 12, after the first word "and," I move to insert the following:

Such branches, and the managers and trustees thereof, shall be subject to license by the Secretary of Commerce regulating the business thereof and the control and disposition of the funds thereof.

And after the word "commerce," in line 13 of the same page, I move to strike out the period and insert the words "with the approval of the President."

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman send up his amendment?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will ask the Clerk to read the whole paragraph as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the proviso beginning on line 6, page 24, and ending on line 13, page 24, so that it will read as follows:

"Provided, That nothing in this act shall impair or affect the President's proclamation of April 6, 1917, or any amendment, modification, or revocation thereof, in relation to the branches of enemy or ally of enemy insurance companies in the United States, when such branches are under the management of citizens of the United States, and such branches, and the managers and trustees thereof, shall be subject to license by the Secretary of Commerce regulating the business thereof and the control and disposition of the funds thereof, subject to rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce, with the approval of the President.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, that is rather an important amendment. I assume that the purpose is to throw the protecting arm of the Government around these foreign insurance companies that have been given licenses under the proclamation of the President to continue business as provided generally in this bill, and not to exempt them from the general provisions of this bill?

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is true, and to protect the insurance companies that have licenses to operate in the several States of the Union. The amendment I have offered would probably protect reinsurance. I think the amendment permits a wider range of business activity by insurance companies, and at the same time gives the Government more regulatory control under the form of license.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume that under the President's proclamation of April 6, 1917, these foreign insurance companies at the present time are allowed, through their agents, to collect funds and dispose of them in the regular course of business without any report to a governmental agency.

Mr. MONTAGUE. As contained in another provision of the bill, if they are stock companies they will have to report their foreign stockholders.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the committee what is the extent of the proclamation of the President of April 6, 1917?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I have not the proclamation at hand, but I will insert it in the RECORD.

Mr. ESCH. I have it here.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ESCH. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin desire to have it read?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; but will the gentleman give the effect of the proclamation?

Mr. ESCH. It provides:

Provided, however, That all funds of such establishments now in the possession of their managers or agents, or which shall hereafter come into their possession, shall be subject to such rules and regulations concerning the payment and disposition thereof as shall be prescribed by the insurance supervising officials of the State in which the principal office of such establishment in the United States is located, but in no event shall any funds belonging to or held for the benefit of such companies be transmitted outside of the United States, nor be used as the basis for the establishment, directly or indirectly, of any credit within or outside of the United States to or for the benefit or use of the enemy or any of his allies without the permission of this Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to inquire whether, under the amendment proposed and now offered, it will be obligatory on the insurance companies to turn over these funds to the foreign property custodian of the Government?

Mr. MONTAGUE. It would be obligatory on them to report and disclose; whether or not they shall turn over the funds depends on whether the President directs it or under the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of Commerce in pursuance of the direction of the President.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume that these companies will no longer be an exception of the rule as provided in the bill.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will state that this amendment is a distinct and generous concession on the part of our Government to these companies. As far as I am individually concerned, I doubt the wisdom of this proviso at all, before amended or as amended, but if we are to have such a provision as this we do not wish to impair the effect of the President's proclamation, and this proviso as amended seems to cover the entire situation. In that I am supported by a letter from the Secretary of Commerce, which I received this morning, stating that if we have this provision he approves of this amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. This proposal is at the suggestion of the Secretary of Commerce?

Mr. MONTAGUE. At the suggestion of the insurance commissioners of several States of the Union, especially those of New York and Illinois, and seconded by the Secretary of Commerce. It was submitted to the Secretary of Commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Has the gentleman from Virginia another amendment?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has an amendment pertinent to this proviso, and if agreeable to the gentleman from Massachusetts I think it had better be disposed of now.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I have one also.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, line 2, after the word "territory," insert the words "to the extent of such business"; and on page 24, line 5, insert, after the word "territory," the words "to the extent of such business.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which properly comes before that. It is to line 22, page 23. I desire to offer it first.

Mr. LENROOT. I will yield to the gentleman from New Jersey, although his amendment has no relation to my amendment. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to withdraw my amendment for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. PARKER.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, line 22, after the word "deemed," insert the words "for the purpose of such trading and of this act"; and on page 24, line 1, strike out the words "resident outside of the United States and."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, this is the essence of the bill. This bill has two effects. One is to relieve the rules of international law with reference, we will say, to German citizens living in the United States who mind their own business and do business here and do not try to do business with Germany. Under the old international law they could to a certain extent do business, but they could not collect a debt. They were aliens, foreigners, enemies. We want to say to them that as long as they behave themselves with Americans they are friends, unless the President names them under a subsequent part of the bill and tells them that they will have to be put under special guard. The other side of this bill is just as strong.

Business now is world-wide, and we have come to a war, and we want to stop trading, not only with anyone in Germany, but we also want to say to any business man throughout the world, "You can trade with Germany or with us, but you can not trade with both; if you do business in Germany, we will not do business with you." It is, in effect, the "We do not patronize," which we have heard so much of, which may be a boycott or a blacklist, a thing which must be abolished in time of peace, but in time of war has been found to be absolutely necessary. We do not want to send funds or allow Americans to send funds to firms that have German connections, and who may see that those funds get into Germany, whether those transactions be conducted in Holland, South America, or in any other neutral country. We are forced to say, as England has said, "We will not do business or allow our subjects to do business with persons who are likely to deal with Germany." Therefore this bill says that the term "enemy" shall include persons outside of the United States who do business in Germany. It is a strong statement.

I have proposed two amendments to that, as you will notice. They are separate amendments, but I think both are necessary. The words "outside the United States and" should be stricken out. A man in this country who is doing business with Germany ought to be boycotted, if you choose to so put it, and put out of business, just as much as a man outside, or more. If a man in this country is doing business with Germany, American citizens should not do business with him, because he comes under the list of those with whom we should not do business just as much as does the man in Holland or in Sweden who is doing business with Germany. American citizens ought not to do business with anyone in or outside of the country who is doing business with Germany. On the other hand, the first amendment that I propose is very necessary. We say rightly that we will not trade with men who trade with Germany, but we ought not to call such a man an enemy. That is a strong term. He is an enemy only for the purposes of such trading and under this act. This is an act to limit trading with the enemy; it says that we will not trade with a man who does business with Germany, and that for the purposes of this act he shall be regarded as an enemy; but it should not say that an honest man who happens to have German connections, if he live abroad in a neutral country, is an enemy and should be defined for all purposes as an enemy.

And I therefore suggest that my first amendment, the definition of the word "enemy," should be limited by the words "for the purposes of such trading and of this act"; and I suggest, in the second place, that there should be no requirement that a man who trades with Germany should live abroad. It is a great deal worse if he lives here. Anyone who does business with Germany should be barred to the trade of the United States in time of war.

This gives me an opportunity to speak of the suggestion made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], that we should only bar such a man so far as trade with Germany is concerned. That will not meet the question. If we are sending wheat, we will say, to Holland, we do not want to send it to any man who is doing business in Germany. He may or will send the wheat or its proceeds to Germany, and, therefore, we do not want to have the bill restricted to his trade with Germany. That would make it necessary to find out where he is going to send the wheat. The point is to stop shipment of wheat to anyone who is in business with Germany or an ally of Germany, and it ought to be so limited.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. It does not require anything in this act to prevent that. That is already provided for in the espionage act and covered by the proclamation of the President.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. What is covered?

Mr. LENROOT. The shipment of wheat.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Oh, export trade?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. This goes further than the export of wheat. A great many other business transactions might be carried on with honest gentlemen in Holland.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman gave that illustration.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes; I gave only that illustration, it is true, but we can give a great many other illustrations in which we do not want to furnish funds to anyone who does business with Germany, because those funds indirectly get there. The United States wants to say to the world, "You can deal with Germany or you can deal with us, but you can not deal with both at the same time."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I think it very important, first, that the bill should not say that every business man is an enemy because he does business with Germany, but that it should say only that for the purpose of trading he is regarded as one. Therefore I suggest that the words "for the purposes of such trading and of this act" shall be inserted. It is likewise true that a man in America who does business with Germany is a great deal worse than a man in Holland who does business with Germany, and therefore the words "outside of the United States and" should be stricken out.

Mr. DENISON. Are there any people in this country who are now doing business with Germany?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do not know.

Mr. DENISON. How can they be doing business with Germany?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. How about the insurance companies? There are a great many ways of doing business through South America, through Holland, through Sweden, through the wireless, through the cable, through the wonderful organization of business of this day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has again expired.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, so far as the first amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] is concerned, I do not see that it affects the bill one way or the other, and I am willing to accept it. Now, if I may have the attention of the committee for a moment, the second amendment I fear materially weakens——

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. If the gentleman will permit, why should not we pass the first amendment and be done with it?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Very well.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the first amendment be put to a vote; it has been accepted by the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the first amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, if I understood this amendment, it is to strike out the first six words of line 1, page 24, "resident outside the United States and." The distinguishing feature of this bill is that residence determines the enemy rather than nationality or nativity. This purpose is intended to be carried out as far as it is practicable, and when a person, no matter where resident, does business within enemy territory he is a resident of that territory, and therefore an enemy.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. If the gentleman will permit, suppose he lives in this country and is secretly carrying on business with Germany. That is why I propose to strike out those words.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You reach that case in another way, but this bill contemplates, for illustration, a resident of Mexico having a place of business in Mexico and also in Germany, and you can not reach him simply because he has a place of business in Mexico. He must do business within Germany to constitute the enemy character. The language of the act is "or resident outside the United States and," conjunctively, "and doing business within such territory." I therefore submit to the committee——

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Suppose the resident is in the United States and he is doing business in Germany and you can not get hold of him or——

Mr. MONTAGUE. No; there are other laws to reach him.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. How would you get him?

Mr. MONTAGUE. As to this particular act, if these words are stricken out you may not reach him at all.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes; you do, because by striking them out you hit everybody who does business in Germany, no matter where he lives.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The preceding sentences of the bill would cover a resident within the territory, and by striking out the words contained in the amendment we can not accomplish any material good and may seriously weaken this bill.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. If I can make myself plain. I had first, "or resident anywhere and doing business." Would the gentleman rather have it in that form? That is the sense of what I wanted to get, so that anybody who is doing business with Germany would be hit, no matter where they reside.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman's amendment I do not think accomplishes the purpose.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Suppose we should say, "Residing anywhere or doing business."

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Suppose a citizen of the United States resident within the United States should be surreptitiously carrying on business with some one resident within the German Empire. Under the gentleman's proposed amendment there would be an enemy who shall be actually a citizen of the United States resident within the United States—an enemy of the United States. In other words, would not he come in a different category?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes; I think so.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is not that precisely a situation in which an individual would be covered completely?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the gentleman's observation is pertinent.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the second amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Yesterday, with reference to the point raised by me as to the violation of international law in section 2, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia, I prepared an amendment that I thought would cover the question, and late last evening submitted to him another in a different form, and this morning he signified that the latter one presented would not be objectionable, but in the last few minutes, upon further reflection, I think this should be modified, and I am going to ask the gentleman from Virginia if he will not ask unanimous consent to pass this over. I am sure we can get together upon it later on.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will be very glad to concur with the gentleman in that request to pass it over and take it up later. There is no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. I will ask unanimous consent that this paragraph at the top of page 24 be passed for the present, to be returned to later.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the paragraph at the top of page 24 be passed for the present to be returned to later. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I think the same course should be adopted with reference to paragraph A, on the following page, in the same language.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that paragraph A, at the top of page 25, be passed for the present. Is there objection?

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, I object. There is a committee amendment to this paragraph, which the gentleman from Virginia desires to offer.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman yield to me for one moment?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, indeed.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I would like to offer an amendment to page 24, line 18. After the word "body" insert the words "or class."

The CHAIRMAN Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] yield for that purpose?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, indeed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, line 18, after the word "body," insert the words "or class."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONTAGUE. On the same page, line 23, after the word "proclamation," insert the words "or Executive order."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, line 23, after the word "proclamation," insert the words "or Executive order."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, what is the purpose of that amendment? Are you going to declare somebody an alien enemy of the United States and put them under this bill? Is it not proper to have a public proclamation instead of a secret Executive order?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am glad the gentleman called my attention to that That amendment was offered through inadvertence and I desire to withdraw it.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that an amendment has just been adopted inserting the words "or class," ought not those words to be inserted on line 14, page 25, after the word "body"? It will then read, "such other individuals or body or class of individuals."

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. ESCH. I offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ESCH: Page 25, line 14, after the word "body," insert the words "or class."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the word "natives," in line 19, page 24, and the same word in line 15, on page 25. The effect of the provision in the two paragraphs taken together is that the President may by proclamation and of his volition, with or without adequate cause, declare to be our enemies any United States citizens or groups of citizens merely because they happen to have been born in Germany or in Austria or in any other of the central powers. I should like to learn from the committee some reason for that authorization, which seems a very drastic one, to declare to be enemies of the United States and perhaps ruin men because perhaps 40 or 50 or 60 years ago they were born in a country with which the United States is at war, or an ally of a country with which the United States is at war. There are men in this House—I know of one man, and I think there are several men—who were born in Germany. If this bill should become law in its present form it would permit the President to treat as public enemies Members of this House and several million other men or women who are now in the United States, and who are just as loyal as are any Members of this House. I can not see the reason for treating a naturalized citizen whose country of origin is Germany or Austria or Bulgarin in the drastic way which this bill permits. I should like an explanation from the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Acting for the chairman, I would reply to the gentleman by saying that such drastic action will not be taken unless it is necessary for the safety of the United States or for the successful prosecution of the war.

In other words, it is perfectly obvious that a citizen of the United States or a body of citizens will not be embraced within the proclamation unless some act or acts performed on their part gives aid or comfort to the enemy or is of so hostile a character that it threatens the success of the war and the safety of the Nation.

Mr. ROGERS. Now, the gentleman, of course, will agree——

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the gentleman will permit, I submit that it is beyond the range of possibility that the present President or any President would embrace in the proclamation the character of citizens in the mind of the gentleman from Massachusetts, for it is only the class of citizens that jeopardize the safety of this country and the success of the war that is referred to. If any body of citizens exercises such hostile conduct, it is a matter of self-preservation of the Government that they be embraced within the proclamation.

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman recognizes that a naturalized citizen of the United States is practically on a parity with a native-born citizen, with very few exceptions, which are unimportant in this connection. As the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] suggested a few moments ago, in discussing the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], those naturalized citizens of the United States of German origin are in all respects citizens of the United States.

If they do wrong, they can be reached under the general provisions of our Penal Code and of the recently enacted espionage act. There would seem to be no reason for putting them in a different category and classification in this bill simply because, forsooth, 50 or 60 years ago they were born in Germany or Austria-Hungary, or some other one of the central powers.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I would say that the word "natives" here does not necessarily mean the native must be a citizen of the United States of German extraction.

Mr. ROGERS. What is the purpose of using the word "native" in this connection if it is not to include men of German origin who are now citizens of the United States? Why do not the words "citizens or subjects of any nation with which the United States is at war" accurately embrace all whom the bill should properly embrace?

Mr. MONTAGUE. But they are not citizens. They may be of German origin and residing in the United States, but not citizens of the United States.

Mr. ROGERS. Then they would be covered by the other words of the bill—"citizens or subjects"——

Mr. MONTAGUE. Not of the United States, but of a nation with which the United States is at war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, as I understand this bill, where anyone is declared an alien enemy you can do no trading with that person. That is a correct interpretation, is it not—where one under the terms of this bill is declared an alien enemy, it is taboo to trade with that person, is it not, under the terms of this bill?

Mr. DEWALT. Except as he has a license.

Mr. MANN. Well, here, to begin with, is a German subject of the United States declared to be an alien enemy. He can not buy groceries, he can not pay a street car fare, he can not deal with anything that is property, he can not go into a restaurant or a hotel.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. MANN. Certainly. I am trying to get information.

Mr. DEWALT. I think the gentleman misapprehends the scope of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps. I have only read it; that is all. I may not know what it means.

Mr. DEWALT. The alien enemy, such as the gentleman terms him, is not the party who has residence in the United States.

Mr. MANN. That depends. We are discussing a proposition now that does make the party in the United States an alien enemy. That is the very paragraph now under consideration. It gives the President the power to declare any German citizen living in the United States an alien enemy, and then says if he is an alien enemy you can not pay him any money, you can not trade with him, you can not exchange or transmit any property with him, you can not deal with him for any property, you can not sell him a bill of groceries, you can not sell him a dinner at a hotel.

Now, that goes a good ways. But then here is a proposition that authorizes the President to declare an alien enemy a naturalized American citizen born in Germany, and then undertakes to say that, though he is an American citizen, you can not sell him property, he can not sell his property.

I know we have forgotten that there is a Constitution of the United States, but the departments have gone crazy in reference to these matters. They see a German spy on every housetop and on every street corner, and they are afraid of the spies. They are scared stiff, and no occasion for it. We are in war. We have got to carry on the war remorselessly. But that is no reason why we should all get scared to death at home.

By what authority do we propose to say that some Member of this Congress, born in Germany, naturalized as an American citizen, can not draw his pay from the Sergeant at Arms, can not rent a house, can not live, must die—must starve to death—on the street; he can not even do that in a bed?

Now, the gentleman says that will not be done. Then what is the purpose of putting the provision in authorizing it to be done if you do not intend to do it? Why offend every sense of decency and propriety by stating that we give to the President the power to take away the right of every naturalized citizen of the United States who happens to be born in a country at war with us? I do not think that we ought to say, even as to German citizens in the United States whom it may be desirable to place under some kind of ban, that they can not trade in order to live. It is ridiculousness gone mad.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "natives," in line 19, page 24.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROGERS: Page 24, line 19, strike out the word "natives."

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That should also include the comma following the word "natives."

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who is always emphatic and always pungent in his remarks, has been equally emphatic and pungent in regard to this word "natives," in subsection (c), on page 24. The emphasis of his remarks goes so far as to say that any native of a foreign country, although that native might be a naturalized citizen of the United States, would be prohibited by the terms of this act from obtaining either food or shelter or sustenance of any kind if the President of the United States by proclamation should declare that he should be thus deprived.

Now, that is the basic proposition, and I take it as a proposition which is well founded in reason under the emergencies of the case. Why should not a native of a foreign country, although he may be naturalized, be subject to the provisions of this act if he makes himself subject to it by saying or doing anything which militates against the successful prosecution of the war?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman evidently contemplates each individual standing on his own feet. That paragraph, however, authorizes the President to name a whole class of citizens—a body of citizens—not one—not Tom, Dick, and Harry, but a whole class together, and make them alien enemies.

Mr. DEWALT. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Now, let us take Mr. A, who is a native of Germany but a naturalized citizen of the United States. He is as innocent and loyal to the flag as any man that ever lived.

Mr. DEWALT. I grant you that.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Likewise he has ten thousand brothers of the same kind. There may be others. There is nothing here to prevent the President from saying that all that are born in Germany and naturalized citizens of the United States are alien enemies. Now, the gentleman can surely see that that is not proper if it can be avoided.

Mr. DEWALT. I understand that, and I understand it very well.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. How is any strength given to the bill, or how is the bill strengthened by including the word "natives" in there?

Mr. DEWALT. If the gentleman permits me for a moment to refer him to the first three words in this subsection, he will see that it contains this clause, "such other individuals."

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Just read the next two or three phrases.

Mr. DEWALT. Yes; I understand. I will. The President of the United States might select you, if you please, if you were a native of a foreign country, as an individual, and by special proclamation declare that you should not have any of the rights that otherwise you would have; or he might say that you in connection with others, constituting a body of individuals, should be thus deprived. But you go to the extremity of asserting and declaring that the President by his proclamation would, of his own volition and act, include everybody of a class to which German citizens or Turkish citizens or Austrian citizens might belong. Now, if there be such a class, and if it could be determined by reasonable proof that they were militating against the successful operation of the war, I care not whether they be a class or whether they be individuals, I maintain that they should be subject to these provisions. And whether they are deprived of food or sustenance, whether, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says, they could not get a bed to sleep in, or whether they could not buy a street car ticket, or buy a meal at a restaurant, any individual who puts himself up against the Government of the United States in this emergency, whether he be born in a foreign country, naturalized here, or whether he be a citizen or subject of that foreign country, he ought to be subject to the provisions of this act.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARD. I should like to ask the gentleman to explain to me the meaning of the word "class" that has just been adopted.

Mr. DEWALT. I myself do not know just exactly why the words "or class" were put in, or at whose instigation they were put in. They were offered by Gov. MONTAGUE just a few moments ago.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am sure the gentleman knows as much about the meaning of the word "class" as any Member of the House. I apprehend the real purpose of his inquiry is to draw a conclusion. A class means a class—a group of individuals who come within the denomination of that class. We might say "all Bavarians." We might say "all those who were born in Prussia."

Mr. GARD. What is the practical application of the word "class"?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The practical application is left to the President. He can designate any group of individuals as a class and make them alien enemies. Now, just let me put this inquiry. I know we all want to get this thing straight.

Mr. GARD. Sure.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Turkey is an ally of an enemy of the United States, not an enemy at the present time. Suppose certain Turkish subjects in this country should be guilty of very improper conduct. I can readily see how they might; and suppose the President should issue a proclamation declaring that all citizens of Turkey are hereby declared alien enemies of the United States. That would embrace all Armenians, who have for many, many years looked upon the United States as the one asylum in the world to which they could come and secure freedom from Turkey; and we should be taking those who have thus come to us for help and assistance, and have heretofore received it, and declaring them alien enemies and putting them in the category of those who can not contract or buy anything, who can not, as has been said, get a meal of victuals. That would not be fair.

Mr. DEWALT. I suppose, however, that the gentleman will concede this, that the President of the United States is supposed to have some discretionary wisdom.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Why give him the discretion if it is not necessary and if he is not going to use it?

Mr. DEWALT. I hold that it is necessary, because if an emergency arises where any class or body of individuals, or any individuals acting separately and alone, militate against the successful prosecution of the war, this power should be given and these restrictions placed upon them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the gentleman a further question. Could you not reach the purpose of your bill entirely, after you have described and mentioned individuals, by then adding a provision including individuals who are grouped or associated together for the purpose of doing this, that, or the other thing hostile to the United States, so that the operation of this law shall be confined only to those who as individuals act, or those who associate themselves together with other individuals for the purpose of doing hostile things?

Mr. DEWALT. I see no objection to that at all, provided always the question of the grouping of these individuals and their acting in concert be left for the determination of the President of the United States.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am perfectly willing to do that. One question further. A man who is a naturalized citizen of the United States is amenable to the laws of the United States in all respects. Now, are not those laws ample to punish or to handle any citizen of the United States who may be so far forgetful of his duties as a citizen as to perform acts that bring him within the scope of this bill? In other words, could you not just as well afford to leave out entirely the word "natives"?

Mr. DEWALT. I do not think so, for this reason: The parties who are foreign born, whether they be from Germany or from any other foreign country, can be divided into these separate classes, namely, those who are residents of this country and who may not be citizens of this country by naturalization, or they may be natives of the foreign country who are naturalized here and therefore no longer citizens of the foreign country. The provision of this section is to include both those classes; and whilst I see the force of the argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that it may work hardship in some cases, nevertheless, as he has very well said, we want to fight this war to a finish without doing harm, of course, to any innocent party.

This being an emergency measure and placing in the hands of the President this highly penal power seems to me ought to be restricted, but the restriction ought not in any way to hamper the action of the President.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. I will.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman would not claim that there is any distinction in the rights between the naturalized American citizen and the native-born American citizen?

Mr. DEWALT. Basically, no.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman by the bill confines the power of the President to shut off trading rights to naturalized American citizens, thereby drawing a distinction in favor of the native-born American citizens. Is it not the fact that there are many native-born American citizens who are making much more trouble about the war than are the naturalized American citizens?

Mr. DEWALT. They are subject to the laws of treason.

Mr. MANN. This bill does not attempt to cover them.

Mr. DEWALT. This provision does not apply to the native-born American citizen.

Mr. MANN. That is just what I am saying. It applies to the naturalized citizen. What is the distinction, as far as the constitutional rights are concerned, between the American citizen, native born, and the American citizen, naturalized? I always supposed that they stood on the same footing.

Mr. DEWALT. A naturalized citizen possesses all the rights of the native-born American citizen.

Mr. MANN. Then you have no greater power over the naturalized citizen than you would have over the native-born citizen, and yet we propose by the bill to exercise a power over the naturalized citizen which we do not attempt to exercise over the native-born citizen, drawing a distinction as to the patriotism of the German-born citizen naturalized in the United States and his son born in the United States, and other people born in the United States. Does not the gentleman think it is rather an unwise distinction after all?

Mr. DEWALT. I can not agree with the gentleman, for the reason that there is always in my mind this subdivision of these foreign-born citizens.

Mr. MANN. And further, if the gentleman will permit, if the native-born citizen of the United States aids the enemy, we have ways of punishing him.

Mr. DEWALT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And these same methods of punishment apply to the naturalized citizen. If we are safe in relying upon the existing laws to govern the native-born citizen, why are they not equally efficacious to rely upon in the case of the naturalized citizen; why make any distinction in this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may offer this amendment and have it pending.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment already pending.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Then I withdraw my request.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The pending amendment, Mr. Chairman, is the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, there is only one purpose sought by the committee in their insistence upon having the word "natives" retained in the bill, and that is to authorize the President of the United States to classify naturalized citizens of German birth as enemies and subject them all to the penalties applicable to enemies, as provided in this bill. There are decisions of the Supreme Court of this country that hold under the liberalized rules of international law that it is not considered inimical to the welfare of the country to allow alien-born citizens of an enemy country domiciled in this country to trade with each other, provided they do not lend any assistance to the enemy, and yet the gentleman from Pennsylvania, backed by other members of the committee, is insistent on giving this drastic power to the President, this absolute power that would be unbecoming even to the Czar of Russia, to allow him to take out and classify those in our country who are naturalized citizens, though as loyal as any native born. We are going indeed afar in this bill, and I am surprised that anybody will rise on the floor and advocate an autocracy like this, no matter who the man to exercise it may be. I am not saying anything against the wisdom or the high devotion of our President, but we should not, with the constitutional privileges guaranteed by the Constitution to citizens, native and naturalized, confer upon him power to single out natives of countries with which we are at war, and who have become naturalized, and classify them as enemies and refuse to permit them to do business or even to exist in this country.

Under public law there are two classes of residents, citizens and subjects. Those who are domiciled here and are not citizens of the United States will be included in the word "subjects." Even those who have taken out first papers under our law of naturalization are still subjects of the foreign government.

This bill is a war measure and sought to be enacted under the war powers of the Constitution. We have authority to exercise powers of sovereignty as a nation over citizenship, whether that citizen is native born or naturalized. If there are in this country—and I question whether there are—naturalized citizens who are disloyal to the country, they can be reached by municipal law, but we ought not to go to the extent, as advocated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the committee, of putting the sanction of Congress—because that is what we do—by conferring power on any individual to say that naturalized citizens of this country who happen to be natives of foreign countries living in this country shall have the ban put upon them of being refused the right to trade and be subject to all the other drastic penalties that apply to enemies. The gentleman from Virginia in his prefatory statement yesterday is in conflict with the position he now takes. Yesterday the gentleman stated that it was based on residence in the belligerent country, and now he is seeking to apply it to citizenship and domicile, apparently in contradiction of the position taken yesterday. I think we have not yet come to that pass in this free American country when we should even by appearance vest that power in the President or any other executive authority. [Applause.]

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. SEARS. If the word "natives" includes naturalized American citizens, would it not be class legislation to impose upon them a more drastic law than we impose upon other citizens?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly. It is almost unthinkable that we should find any person in this House advocating the retention of that word when the purpose of it has been pointed out by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS]. The surprising thing to me is that since war was declared not only these naturalized citizens of German extraction but those of German birth who are not even naturalized, but who wish to be naturalized, are standing loyally by the Government. There is no disposition anywhere, so far as I am aware, among those six or eight or ten million persons of German extraction who are in this country not to stand loyally by the country. They have subscribed liberally to the liberty bonds, and they have subscribed to the Red Cross fund, and they are doing everything that the native American citizens would be expected to do, and it ill becomes any Member here to try to justify the sanctioning of such authority as is embodied in this clause.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In a discussion of this question a very interesting proposition has been raised. I have listened with extreme interest to the arguments which have been presented, and the argument of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] meets a good deal with my approval, so far as it refers to the word "natives." We need a modification, but it will not do to strike the word out entirely. If you will follow me carefully I think I can show you why this section should be modified. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] a few moments ago hit the nail squarely on the head when he said that a naturalized citizen of this country stands upon the same footing that a native-born American citizen does; and to my mind it seems that if we should draw any distinction in the enforcement of our laws as between naturalized citizens and native-born citizens of America, our bill in that regard would be unconstitutional, because it would not be guaranteeing equal rights to all the citizens of our country. When a person from a foreign country becomes a citizen of this country he is guaranteed all of the rights that you and I native-born citizens have. Some have suggested that to get around the point at issue we strike out the word "natives." That would then permit the native-born German who has become a naturalized citizen to stand equally with the American citizen here; that far it is all right, but what is the result when you strike out the word "natives"? This paragraph reads:

> Such other individuals, or body of individuals, as may be natives, citizens, or subjects of any nation with which the United States is at war, wherever resident or wherever doing business, as the President, if he shall find the safety of the United States or the successful prosecution of the war shall so require, may, by proclamation, include within the term "enemy."

I can see where there might be a native of Germany who is not a citizen of this country nor a citizen of any of the warring powers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman conceive of any individual who is not a citizen or a subject of some nation?

Mr. ROMJUE. No; I can conceive of no individual who is not a citizen or a subject of some nation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then these two classes would cover all those who are citizens or subjects of any nation. There are only two classes recognized in international law—citizens or subjects.

Mr. ROMJUE. I will ask the gentleman to follow me for just a moment. You will notice that the text is:

> That if the President finds that a successful prosecution of the war or the safety of the United States requires he may, by proclamation, designate natives, citizens, and subjects of our enemy nations in this war, as enemies.

You will notice from a reading of the paragraph that it covers all natives, citizens, and subjects of the nations with which we are at war. But a man may be a native of Germany and yet not now be a citizen or subject of Germany for the very simple reason that, though he was born in Germany, he has renounced his citizenship and has become a citizen of some other power, to wit, he may have become a citizen of Brazil or Sweden, and if you strike "natives" out of this bill you will deprive the President of authority under this bill to handle such a person as he could handle the undesirable citizen of Germany. So to strike it out would be to err in that regard at least.

On the other hand, to leave the word "native" in the bill unmodified would mean that we would be enacting a law that would be enforceable against a native of Germany who is now a subject and citizen of this country, and who is no longer a citizen and subject of Germany, but yet a native of Germany. This would set up a rule, or rather a statute, enforceable against native-born Germans who are now citizens of the United States, and the same law would not apply to nor affect American-born citizens. Manifestly this would be wrong, and the President and no other thoughtful American citizen wants anything else than that all American citizens, whether naturalized or native born, abide by the same laws.

We are not at war with some of the nations of the world, and I repeat, that a native-born German may have renounced his German citizenship and yet he may not have taken out American citizenship. He may be a citizen of some other country that is at peace with all of the warring factions, if that be possible at this time. Therefore I say it is important that you do not strike out the word "natives" entirely.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Does not the gentleman think that it would be sufficient to say "natives, except naturalized American citizens"?

Mr. ROMJUE. Yes; I think an amendment of that kind would correct the entire matter, and I really believe it ought to be adopted, because, as I said a moment ago, I do not believe we can constitutionally draw a distinction and enforce it as between naturalized and native-born citizens in this country, and ought not to attempt to do so.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state how he construes the words "if he shall find the safety of the United States or the successful prosecution of the war shall so require"? Does he construe that to mean that these people shall do some positive act which will threaten the safety of the country or the successful prosecution of the war, or does he construe it to mean that the mere fact that they are naturalized citizens of enemy or ally to the enemy origin is sufficient to threaten the safety of the country or the successful prosecution of the war?

Mr. ROMJUE. In answer to the gentleman I would say this, that there has been a great deal said here in this House from time to time about the authority that is given to the President of the United States, and we might as well say now that we are in a war, the most serious war that the world has ever seen, and we must trust some one. Some doubt the wisdom of giving President Wilson the authority that has been given to him, but there is not a man on the floor of this House who would intentionally sacrifice the honor of this Nation or do any injustice in carrying on the war, and I think it ill becomes us to question Mr. Wilson's motives and what he will do. We must give to somebody general blanket authority if we want to carry this war on successfully. If the President is given the authority under this bill it seeks to bestow, so far as dealing with enemies of this Government is concerned I have no hesitancy in believing that authority will not be abused and the power it is sought to give is essential to the welfare of this Government. I will say I know of no better way of judging President Wilson's attitude in the future than by a consideration of the past, so far as regards people who will come under the provision of this bill, and, so far as I am concerned, I am ready for a little more drastic medicine for the spies who have sought to undermine our country.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, just a moment. I am infavor of striking out the word "natives." It may be worth while to give the President power over all aliens, but I do not believe in giving the President any power over naturalized citizens that is not given over other citizens. Whether they be native or naturalized—born abroad—they are citizens.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New Jersey yield for a question?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. If I have the time.

Mr. FESS. Is there a stage in the process of naturalization where the one seeking naturalization is neither a subject or a citizen of the country from which he comes?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. No. He declares his intention, but he does not renounce allegiance until he is naturalized.

Mr. FESS. When he renounces allegiance that does not affect the entire loss——

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The declaration of intention does not renounce allegiance. Allegiance is renounced upon naturalization but not before.

Mr. FESS. There is no twilight zone when a man is without a country?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. No, sir.

Mr. FESS. Is the gentleman sure of that?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, in line with the suggestion and at the instigation of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE], who has charge of the bill, let me propose to the gentlemen who have taken exception to the word "natives" this tentative proposition, as suggested by the gentleman from Missouri. After the word "natives" insert the words "other than naturalized citizens."

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Why not use the language "who are not citizens of the United States"? That will take away any stigma that may seem to attach.

Mr. DEWALT. That would be the same thing—"who are not citizens of the United States." What would the gentleman say as to that phraseology? The gentleman from Illinois had objection to the word "natives," and I understood he had another amendment. How would that meet the objection of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Where would that come?

Mr. DEWALT. After the word "natives," on page 24, line 19, insert "who are not citizens of the United States."

Mr. MANN. Well, the purpose would be all right, as far as I am concerned, but it would have to be a parenthetical insertion there. It would have to be a provision put inside of parentheses, and that is not very good legislation.

Mr. DEWALT. If you insert after the word "natives" these words: "Such other individuals or body of individuals as may be natives, except such as are citizens of the United States"?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Let me ask, Who would that leave in the category? Who would be natives who would not be citizens of the United States under this paragraph?

Mr. DEWALT. Those who are natives of foreign countries.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Of the enemy's country. Who would they be?

Mr. DEWALT. There might be a great many of them.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I can not think of any.

Mr. ROGERS. Let me answer the question. Take the case of a man born in Germany who goes to Holland and is naturalized there and then comes to the United States and is naturalized here.

Mr. BURNETT. Why not have the word "natives" stricken out entirely and leave it "citizens or subjects of any nation"?

Mr. DEWALT. I do not know whether the gentleman from Alabama listened to the argument of the gentleman from Missouri, which was very able, in reference to the retention of the word "natives" in some form.

Mr. GARD. If the gentleman will permit a suggestion, how would the suggestion that the word "nonnaturalized" be placed before the word "natives" strike the gentleman? What does the gentleman think of that?

Mr. DEWALT. That would cure it, "or body of individuals as may be nonnaturalized." I think that would cure it, and that would meet the suggestion.

Mr. MANN. Why not strike out the word "natives"? Every other case is covered by the language of the bill.

Mr. BURNETT. That is my suggestion.

Mr. MANN. Strike out the word "natives."

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, I recognize the force of the argument of the gentleman from Illinois in regard to the constitutionality of the provision, as it would clearly make a distinction between naturalized citizens of the United States and native-born citizens of the United States, and recognizing also that we all desire to frame the best legislation that we can with due regard to the interest of all the citizens of the United States whether they be natural or native born or foreign born, and yielding to none, in spite of the remarks of my eloquent friend from Wisconsin, in my admiration for the Germans, because I, too, am of German birth—my forefathers were born there, and I am of Pennsylvania German stock—recognizing all that, and desiring the best legislation in the interest of all, I would ask to strike out the word "natives." [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. We again recognize the ability of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I ask that we may have a vote on the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] striking out the word "natives."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to strike out the word "natives," in line 15, on page 25. I ask unanimous consent that that word may be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROGERS: Page 25, line 15, after the word "be," strike out the word "natives."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MILLER of Minnesota: Page 24, line 18, after the word "class," insert: "of individuals associated together for any purpose inimical to the safety of the United States or the successful prosecution of the war."

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill if he is willing to accept that?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be read again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, by inadvertance the words "of individuals" were inserted and should not be included.

Mr. MONTAGUE. May I ask the gentleman how far his words——

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] will be permitted to modify his amendment.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The amendment must be made to strike out the words "of individuals" and insert it as I have made it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "of individuals" and insert the following: "associated together for any purpose inimical to the safety of the United States or the successful prosecution of the war."

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The words "of individuals" must be included in the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Insert that after the word "individuals."

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] yield for a moment?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. DEWALT. I ask, with the permission of the Chairman, that the Clerk read the subsection now as it would read with the gentleman's amendment in it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MILLER of Minnesota: Page 24, line 18, after the word "class," strike out the words "of individuals" and insert the following: "of individuals, associated together for any purpose inimical to the safety of the United States or the successful prosecution of the war."

Mr. MONTAGUE. The words "of individuals" stricken out, not the word "individuals" contained in your amendment as offered and not the "individuals" contained in the bill itself?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That is correct.

Mr. DEWALT. Suppose the Clerk reads the section with the amendment in it.

Mr. MANN. It is just as though the word "individuals" had not been stricken out.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We have no objection to that.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman ought to consider it very seriously. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. MANN. Under the gentleman's amendment, as I understand it, if the President desires to declare anyone an alien enemy under the provisions of this act as a body or a class it must be people who are associated together for the purpose of injuring the United States in the war?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. Of course, that would be a matter of proof. The Government would have to prove when the matter came into court that these people were associated together. Now, does it not occur to the gentleman that there may be cases, quite a number of them, arising where the President should have the power to forbid German citizens or corporations in the United States to carry on business? We are commencing not merely a regular war, but we are commencing a trade war with Germany, partly by this bill and partly by what has taken place heretofore. We may find as a result of this bill that all American citizens in Germany are forbidden to do business over there. That might be prevented if the German Government knew that if they did that over there the President would promptly respond by forbidding German citizens over here doing business.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am very frank to answer that I do not think the President ought to have the power in a wholesale manner to put the stigma of alien enemy upon a class of people who are resident within the United States, without any proof or knowledge that many of the individuals included are disloyal to the Government of the United States or are engaged in hostile or improper conduct.

Now, I do not think England has gone that far, and she has gone a good ways when she has made a blacklist, which she has done to our exceeding sorrow and disadvantage. She did not blacklist groups or classes, but individuals, and that ought to be the test in the United States. We ought not to punish innocents any more than we ought to permit guilt while we are trying to avoid punishing innocents. We ought to be able to pick out the guilty and punish them. That is the theory upon which all law is founded, and that ought to be the theory of law in case of war. If there is a class of individuals or citizens of Germany, Austria, or Bulgaria, or any other nation, who are associated together for purposes hostile to the United States, in any form, it is easy to find out who they are and to punish them. But let us not put the stigma upon everybody that happens to be a citizen of those countries.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. If there is any body or class of foreigners in the United States cooperating to injure the United States in this war, have we not got laws to punish them?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Well, I suppose that is so.

Mr. MANN. What is the use, then, of putting this in? We have penal provisions against anything of that sort. That is treason, to begin with. We have laws covering those things. We passed a number recently covering everything of the sort.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. This is much broader language than that respecting treason. A person can be punished under this paragraph who could not be punished for treason.

Mr. MANN. It might not be treason so that it could be proved; but we have laws covering the cases to which the gentleman would confine this to.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not think so, if the gentleman will permit. This language says, "in the successful prosecution of the war." That might mean anything.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is trying to reduce his amendment to an irreducible minimum by stating that it does not mean anything.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Oh, no; I am not.

Mr. MANN. If it means that the President is restricted in making his proclamation to classes who are actually engaged in cooperation with each other, which is a conspiracy to begin with and punishable under the conspiracy statutes, the gentleman takes away all power of the President over the matter at all; and if you want to do that the proper way to do it is to strike out all except "individuals" here; strike out "body or class." It would not mean anything, it seems to me; but I say that with due deference for the opinion of the gentleman, for whom I have the highest regard. It would not mean anything to say that the President may declare to be alien enemies the men engaged in a body who are actively engaged in a conspiracy against the United States.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. There is a distinction between an individual who is performing by himself what we might call direct acts against the safety of the United States, or against the successful prosecution of the war, and——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. There is a distinction which should be drawn between that kind of an individual and one who may be associated with a large number of others, he himself doing nothing whatever except to give aid and comfort to the organization or agents of the organization doing the active work, and therefore there are two classes that the President ought to have the right to reach. Now, instead of the language I have quoted restricting the President, in my opinion it enlarges the field of his operations. Why? It enables him to issue his proclamation against all individuals as such and all who are associated together or in any way engaged in any enterprise against the successful prosecution of the war. That might be an association of individuals who are opposed to the selective draft. They are not amenable to the laws of the United States at this minute, but the President might, if they were aliens, say that such an organization is inimical to the safety of the United States and against the successful prosecution of the war, and make these men that which they really are—enemies of the United States.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. DEWALT. The fault in the gentleman's amendment to my mind and to the minds of the members of the committee is this—and it is suggested very well by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]—that it would place upon the Government the burden of proof as to this association for inimical purposes. When the gentleman first spoke of his amendment I suggested to him that he should incorporate in it these words, "that such association be determined by the President of the United States solely," and said that there was no objection to that.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I have no objection to that being incorporated in it; none whatever.

Mr. DEWALT. Now, I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the Clerk read in the gentleman's time, if he will permit it, subdivision section (c) as amended, so that we shall have it clearly.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield for that purpose?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, line 18:

"(c) Such other individuals or body or class of individuals associated together for any purpose inimical to the safety of the United States or the successful prosecution of the war as may be citizens or subjects of any nation with which the United States is at war, wherever resident or wherever doing business, as the President, if he shall find the safety of the United States or the successful prosecution of the war shall so require, may, by proclamation, include within the term 'enemy.'"

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Would not such an act within itself constitute a crime under existing law?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. No; it would not.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I have just cited an instance.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; and the instance cited is opposition to the selective draft. The gentleman no doubt is aware of the fact that yesterday two persons were convicted in the United States Court for the Southern District of New York of that very act.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. A man doing that might bring himself within the laws now existing, but he might do a whole lot of acts that are not included in the laws now existing.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. He is taking that man and classifying him as an alien.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That is what I am trying to do.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If he commits an act and that act is a crime, the laws now take care of it.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The purpose of this act is to prevent the commission of acts that are not crimes under existing laws.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think the gentleman is making this section vicious.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has noticed that the latter part of this paragraph requires the President to make the findings before he can name these individuals or bodies or classes of individuals.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I noticed that.

Mr. MANN. And that he shall find, if the safety of the United States or the successful prosecution of the war shall require, that these people shall be declared alien enemies. Now, the gentleman proposes to insert at the beginning of the paragraph a jurisdictional class against which the President makes a finding at the end of his confirmation, but making it jurisdictional as to his authority to do anything about it at all that certain facts exist, which facts probably could not be ascertained until the war was over. It is drastic as the bill stands, but if we are going to have it drastic, and if the gentleman is in favor of having it drastic——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am in favor of having it drastic but not drastic in the sense of working a hardship upon innocent individuals.

Mr. MANN. I understand that, but the paragraph itself provides that the President shall make the finding, which the gentleman from Minnesota proposes to make jurisdictional.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not think so.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Not jurisdictional in that sense.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes. If it is not jurisdictional, then it is merely duplication, because he has to make the finding. If it is jurisdictional, it is destructive, as it seems to me.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If the gentleman will give me his attention, I desire to say this: As the paragraph is drawn the President can find that these individuals are acting in such a way as to be opposed to the safety of the United States or the successful prosecution of the war. If this amendment that I propose be adopted, there will be two things. Not only will he have authority to find that individuals are doing that, but he will also have authority and be required, if he exercises his authority, to find that individuals are associated together for the purpose—he has to make a finding of the purpose—for the purpose of being opposed to the safety of the United States or the successful prosecution of the war. Then he can do to them the same things that he can now do to individuals under the provisions of the bill as drawn.

Mr. MANN. Well, he can do that now.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. There are two findings that he will have to make. Under this provision as drawn he has to make one finding. If the amendment is adopted he will have to make two, as far as the individuals affected by this are concerned, namely, he must find that they are associated for this purpose——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is one of the clearest-headed lawyers in this House, but on this matter he is wrong.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The purpose of this amendment is just one thing, and, to my mind at least, it can not be befogged so as to be obscured. It is to relieve from the harshness of this proposed law a class of individuals in the United States. I at first thought we might better strike out the body and the class. I think that is the opinion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and that is the reason for his objection to this. After the debate that has occurred I do not go quite that far, because I can readily see that a class of individuals might be associated together for purposes that they ought to be prevented from carrying out and yet they would not be brought within the terms of this bill if we strike out the body or the class. But in order that in handling them we may not by that act inflict an unjust and unwarranted hardship upon innocent individuals, I propose to modify it so that if it shall become necessary for the President to act in reference to a body or class of individuals he must first find that the individuals who comprise the class and are being proceeded against are associated for an improper or enemy purpose.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, after the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] was presented I indicated my acceptance of it, but subsequently I found, upon reading it at the Clerk's desk, that I had not fully understood it. I therefore believe I was premature in indicating such acceptance.

This bill has been very carefully drawn. A great deal of time has been spent upon it. I submit to the committee that we ought to be conservative in making changes in it. Now, as respects this amendment, the provision that the individuals must be associated for what he terms inimical purposes—affecting the safety of the United States or impairing the successful prosecution of the war—requires the finding of a precedent jurisdictional fact. It imposes a condition precedent before the President can act. He must, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has suggested, duplicate his actions. It is either a duplication or it puts an unnecessary burden upon the President, for he must practically first find the existence of a conspiracy, which should not be put upon him in this emergency; and I submit to the committee that we had better let it stand as found in the section.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the clerk read the section as it is already amended, with the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota, so that we may understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will report the paragraph, as suggested by the gentleman from Ohio.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, line 18:

"(c) Such other individuals or body or class of individuals associated together for any purpose inimical to the safety of the United States or the successful prosecution of the war as may be citizens or subjects of any nation with which the United States is at war wherever resident or wherever doing business as the President, if he shall find the safety of the United States or the successful prosecution of the war shall so require may, by proclamation, include within the term 'enemy.'"

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] is left as it is it seems to me to be a most dangerous proposition. I believe that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota modifies it and perhaps makes it just. If it is left in its present form, an innocent member of a body of individuals may be punished simply because that body is doing something inimical to the Government.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has made a very cogent suggestion in regard to the two findings required of the President. The finding of one fact would be the finding of the other, and certainly whether the word "find" was in there or not the President ought not to do that unless he finds the fact to be true. He simply ascertains it; that is all. Talk about the burden of proof. Certainly the President will want to be convinced in some way before he does an injustice to somebody, and whenever he is convinced, and he has to be convinced by an investigation or by proof, and whenever he finds that they are banded together for purposes inimical or hostile to the United States, then the other finding follows, and it seems to me the gentleman, in splitting hairs, has made an argument here that shows a tendency, if the committee contention prevails, to bring about a dangerous condition. We have in our Constitution the right of trial by jury. We suspend all those things as to aliens during the war. Possibly that is right in emergencies, but certainly the President ought to have something upon which to act, and can he just pick up any man and merely because he is a native of Germany conclude therefore that that man is guilty of something that is inimical to the Government or that he ought to be suppressed or regarded as an alien enemy? Certainly the President will act upon some proof. He must act upon some fact, and some reasonable fact. Now, we all know that the President is a busy man, and we know that he will not have time to give these matters the personal investigation that perhaps a judicial tribunal would have the time and the opportunity to give, and that is a greater reason why we ought to hedge it about so that we will not be a government by autocracy.

Believing that our President is patriotic and would not desire to do an injustice to anyone, and the very fact that he can not give each individual case that kind of investigation that ought to be given when we declare that a man is an enemy to this Government, ought to cause us to hedge the law about by every means possible to keep an injustice from being done. I think the talk about putting the burden of proof is an argumentum ad absurdum, because it implies that the burden will not be on the President otherwise to reach his findings. Whenever the first finding is passed then it seems to me he passes easily to the second finding, and that is easily determined by the proof that authorizes the first.

I have very few German people in my district, not one-thirtieth of the population of that district, and I believe that the most of them, especially the naturalized citizens, are just as true and loyal to the Government and our flag as anybody else. I was glad when we struck out the opprobrium sought to be placed upon them by saying that a native-born German, even though he was a naturalized citizen, and even if he had joined the Army and was following the flag, if some evil genius wanted to bring trouble to him, might be declared an enemy under the great power given to the President. I tell you, gentlemen, we ought not to be swept off our feet; we ought to proceed cautiously. I believe the whole of this sentence ought to be stricken out. I believe it ought to be an individual proposition. If the President can find that anyone is inimical to our Government, why could not he fix a penalty for individual responsibility without embracing a whole class? I believe the whole sentence ought to go out in the form in which it is presented to us, because if we do not strike it out it will make more enemies, and say to our German friends, even though they have taken out naturalization papers and are not doing anything against us, "We are branding you as enemies," and will make in their hearts enmity that they do not all feel. [Applause.]

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, line 23, after the word "corporation," insert "or State or any political or municipal subdivision thereof."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered because the word "person" used in subsequent sections of the act may not include a State, city, or town or any other political subdivision of the State. It might be that an alien enemy would have property situate in some State or some political subdivision of a State upon which property the State or the city or town or township might expect to collect State or local taxes, and this amendment to the definition of the word "person" would permit the State or a municipal, local, or political subdivision of a State to present its claim for the taxes assessed on the property to the custodian of such property provided for in this bill and have that claim adjudicated or passed upon and approved and the money paid over. The State, city, county, township, or whatever subdivision of the State it might be might have a lien on that property for taxes or for betterments and the like, and under the provisions of the bill it is not clear in my opinion that the word "person" as defined in this paragraph and especially used in the sections following would include a city, town, township, or a county or the State.

I have in mind, for instance, where a person who under the provisions of this bill would be classed as an alien enemy, owning a summer estate and that estate being assessed and liable for taxes. I doubt if under the provisions of the bill the town in which that estate is situated would be able to file its claim for taxes with the alien property custodian and receive payment therefor.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does not the word "corporation" include it?

Mr. WALSH. It would not include a State, and it would not include some towns in Massachusetts, for instance, which are not strictly incorporated.

Mr. MANN. They do not have to be incorporated.

Mr. WALSH. Well, there is a doubt about it applying to such corporations.

Mr. MANN. Municipal corporation.

Mr. WALSH. Municipal corporation is not included in the division.

Mr. MANN. It says corporation.

Mr. WALSH. But the word corporation as used in the bill, as I have stated, especially in subsequent sections, would, I am inclined to believe, be interpreted to mean that it applied only to business or commercial corporations and not to municipal or political corporations. This amendment would clear up the doubt. Certainly after the property got into the custody of the Treasury of the United States or into the custody of this alien-property custodian, if there was any doubt about whether it included a political subdivision of a State and it meant the payment of money, the doubt probably would be resolved against the person: that is to say, the State, county, city, or town that was claiming payment. Certainly it would seem these taxes should not be lost to the State or localities levying them.

Mr. ELSTON. The gentleman is trying to particularize and cover all possible stages. Why can not you say corporation, body politic, or municipal? That would cover everything. If you said body politic it would cover it all.

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment and substitute therefor, in line 23, page 25, the words "or body politic" after the word "corporation," in view of the suggestion of my learned friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment to the extent stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Does the gentleman think that a State is a body politic?

Mr. WALSH. I do not know what else it is if it is not a body politic.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, line 23, after the word "corporation," insert "or body politic."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make an inquiry about this term "body politic" of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. I have no doubt but that in a very general sense a body politic consists of any body or group of individuals grouped together for governmental political purposes. That is old language that used to be current a hundred years ago or more. It has practically disappeared from the textbooks and from the decisions, and in a strictly technical sense I question whether a State is a body politic, as States are organized now as parts of the Federal Government. Why not leave it as it was originally?

Mr. ELSTON. It is not intended to refer to States within the United States at all?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Oh, I understand so. Why not leave that "or corporation, commercial or municipal"?

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman desire an answer from me?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am propounding my inquiry to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts,

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the inquiry propounded by the gentleman from Minnesota, I would say that I think a State is a body of citizens upon whom are conferred certain rights by the Congress of the United States in pursuance of the Constitution of the United States. They are given certain duties to perform and are subject to certain liabilities, and certainly that political division could be construed to be a body politic just as much as a city which might be incorporated within a State, by and under the constitution of that State, the citizens of which should be given certain rights and privileges and would be subject to certain liabilities. The State would include the city and the city would be a body politic, certainly; and I think the State would be a body politic, perhaps raised to the "nth" power. Has the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] completed the search he desired to make?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Does not the gentleman think the language would be improved if he were to strike out the word "or," before the word "corporation," and say "corporation, municipal corporation, or State"? Then there would not be any doubt about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the modified amendment has been seconded by a member of the committee, I will ask the gentleman from Virginia whether the chairman will accept the amendment?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is agreeable to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, a moment ago we amended the bill on pages 24 and 25—in line 19, on page 24, and in line 15 on page 25—by striking out the word "natives," but we failed to strike out the comma. I think the comma in both places should be stricken out.

Mr. MANN. That is a matter for the enrolling clerk. It does not require action on the part of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the comma will be stricken out.

There was no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, line 18, strike out all of subdivision (c).

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I can not conceive of any act committed as described in subdivison (c) which is not already covered by the penal laws. We seem to have lost sight of the fact that we included punishment in the espionage act, in the food-control bill, and in the selective-draft act. What is sought to be accomplished here is not to punish an individual or a class of individuals because of an act committed, but in cases where there is suspicion and no evidence sufficient to warrant an indictment. To take these people, this whole class, declare them alien enemies and deprive them of any right under the law, deprive them of the writ of habeas corpus and detain them during the war, not because they have committed a crime, but on the say-so of the President or any other officer, violates every principle of free government known to us. We have extended extraordinary power to the President of the United States in every bill that we have passed. We have added riders in every bill, so much so now that we do not know whether we will pass the food-control bill before all of the food is consumed, wasted, or controlled by speculators. All because certain gentlemen in this House lost their heads one Saturday afternoon. Here we are writing into this bill after decrying autocracy, after praising the Russian commission for dethroning the Czar, words which will give the President or his administrative officers power to take any class of individuals, declare them enemies, and send them to concentration camps and keep them there, not because they have committed any act, because if they commit any act described in subdivision (c) there is ample provision to punish them, but because there is mere suspicion.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. BLAND. Does not the gentleman think there ought to be some provision here to meet extraordinary circumstances that might arise?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman state the circumstances that might arise?

Mr. BLAND. If I could state them it would probably be included in the bill, but there might be circumstances arise with which we are not now familiar.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I stated that I could not conceive of any act intended under this section which is not actually covered by other statutes if the act is committed or attempted. I say now that if one conspires against the selective draft, we have provided for it. If one does anything in reference to controlling food, we have provided for it. If one tries to impart information to an enemy, we have provided for it. You can not conceive of any act inimicable to the Government or to the successful prosecution of this war that is not covered by statutes; and yet here you are granting to the President power to take persons, to take classes of persons, declare them enemies and so treat them. This is the first time in the history of this country that we have included "classes" in a bill. We are giving power to take people by class and groups, without trial, without jurisdiction, without showing cause, without proper cause, and hold them until the termination of the war.

Mr. ELSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will.

Mr. ELSTON. The gentleman speaks of the classification of the enemy in such a way as to make it appear as if this was including the enemy in the general sense, whereas it is classified only in the sense in which this bill classifies the enemy. It will deprive him of certain rights in reference to trade and commerce. The gentleman speaks as if the designation of enemy would apply every penalty——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. As has been stated on the floor of this House he can not contract, he can not buy food, he can not——

Mr. ELSTON. He would not be put in concentration camps or be thrown into prison, as the gentleman says. It deprives him of certain civil rights.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. He could not go on a street car according to this bill; he could not buy food, and I respectfully submit this suggestion that this whole section should be stricken out. It is unnecessary. We have too many statutes now. We have created so many departments and offices, extended unheard-of powers, that we can not begin to remember them all. We should at least at this late day exercise better judgment and more calm deliberation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York demands a division.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person in the United States, except with the license of the Secretary of Commerce, as hereinafter provided in section 5—

(a) To trade, or attempt to trade, with an enemy, or for, or on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of an enemy, either directly or indirectly, with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that the person with or for, or on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of whom such trade is conducted, or attempted to be conducted, is an enemy.

(b) To trade, or attempt to trade, with an ally of enemy, or for, or on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of, an ally of enemy, either directly or indirectly, with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that the person with or for, or on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of whom such trade is conducted, or attempted to be conducted, is an ally of enemy.

(c) To transport, or attempt to transport, an enemy, with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that the person transported, or attempted to be transported, is an enemy.

(d) To transport, or attempt to transport, an ally of enemy, with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that the person transported, or attempted to be transported, is an ally of enemy.

(e) To transmit, or take, or attempt to transmit or take, out of the United States, in any manner, any letter, document, writing, message, picture, diagram, map, or other device or form of communication addressed to or intended to be delivered or communicated to an enemy, with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that the intended recipient is an enemy.

(f) To transmit or take, or attempt to transmit or take, out of the United States, in any manner, any letter, document, writing, message, picture, diagram, map, or other device or form of communication addressed to or intended to be delivered or communicated to any ally of enemy, with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that the intended recipient is an ally of enemy.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. Line 5, page 28, after the word "map," insert the words "phonographic record."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ESCH: Page 28, line 5, after the word "map," insert the words "phonographic record."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ESCH. I desire to offer a like amendment, in line 12, the same page, after the word "map."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 28, line 12, after the word "map," insert the words "phonographic record."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not have an amendment to offer to this section except this pro forma amendment, but I would like to comment upon the section briefly before it is passed. It provides that it shall be unlawful for any person in the United States, except with a license from the Secretary of Commerce, to do certain things, which things are enumerated and which include under subsection (f):

To transmit or take, or attempt to transmit or take, out of the United States, in any manner, any letter, document, writing, message, picture, diagram, map, or other device or form of communication addressed to or intended to be delivered or communicated to an ally of enemies—

And so forth.

Now, that is conferring a very wide power upon the Secretary of Commerce and a power which hitherto, to a large extent, has been exercised in another of the departments of the Government, to wit, the Department of State. I have been wondering as I read this section whether there will not be a conflict of authority here as between two of the departments of the Government. We are by this act creating a great deal of business for the Secretary of Commerce and giving him a tremendous power, much of which, perhaps, involves diplomatic action by the Secretary of State, as, for instance, in the matter of documents, communications, and letters. You might go so far as to include passports. Is all this business to be taken over from the Department of State, business that may not pertain to trade at all, to the Secretary of Commerce; and if that is so, will it not lead to confusion in this country and a conflict of jurisdiction?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will notice under the terms of the bill the Secretary of State himself may not communicate with Austria, Bulgaria, or Turkey except he obtains a license from the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is in point. These are certainly extraordinary powers that are being given to the Secretary of Commerce, who hitherto has exercised no such authority with regard to our international affairs.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. In reply to the interrogatory of the gentleman from Illinois, these restrictions in reference to license apply to no one other than persons. They do not apply to officials. It is limited to persons, and does not include officials.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. An official is a person; he must necessarily be.

Mr. WINGO. He does not send a communication as a person; he sends it as an official.

Mr. MANN. Official person, of course.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman does not think an official communication is sent by a person. It is sent by an official of the department.

Mr. MANN. Any official in the United States of a petty corporation may send anything he pleases, regardless of this.

Mr. WINGO. I am talking about public officials.

Mr. MANN. I am talking about public officials—a public official of Podunk County, or some other official, of the city of Chicago, say.

Mr. WINGO. We are talking about those communications which officials have the legal capacity to send. A public official of Podunk County has no official right, nor can he send an official communication to Austria.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Suppose there is a dispute as to whether a communication is going to an enemy or ally of an enemy, and it is such business as would ordinarily go through the Department of State, is the American citizen who desires to enter into communication with some one in a foreign land to go to the Department of Commerce and then be turned over to the Department of State, or is he to apply in the usual way to the Department of State?

Mr. WINGO. I will answer the gentleman that if it is a communication addressed to the Austrian Government, for instance, it would be proper communication to go through the Department of State. If it is a communication with reference to commerce, should it not go through the Secretary of Commerce?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The language does not confirm that. No one can send a letter or document—and "document" is a term usually applied to official papers—without obtaining a license. Not from the Secretary of State but from the Secretary of Commerce. It may be an official matter. It may be a matter having no relation to the enemy or the ally of an enemy. It may be diplomatic, yet the license must be had from the Secretary of Commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has expired.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LAGUARDIA offers the following amendment: Page 28, line 1, after the word "manner," insert the words "other than by means of the United States mails."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the chairman of the committee will kindly give me a little bit of his attention, I wish to say that I was startled yesterday when a member of the committee stated that under this provision no letter could be mailed to a relative residing in a country allied to the enemy. Now, then, if it is the purpose to stop all communication, well and good, but let us not make the mere mailing of a letter a crime, because I am sure the gentlemen of the committee will agree that there are a good many law-abiding, innocent people in this country who do not read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or the Official Bulletin, and it may be many weeks before they learn that the United States Congress passed any such extraordinary, unnecessary, and unusual provision.

Now, then, if we will permit the mailing of a letter, the Government, of course, can control the mail. Whether they send the letters on or not is another question. But let us not make the mailing of a letter a crime. There are thousands of law-abiding persons—Croatians, Ruthenians, Slavonians, Turks, and Bulgarians—all over this country who have relatives abroad, and who are likely to mail a letter. And what is going to happen? These men will be listed in the various mining camps and the different coal regions, or wherever they may be; and if there is any labor disturbance, or if at any time the local authority may wish to exercise this power, these innocent people will be indicted under this provision for the very innocent act of mailing a letter. I wish to make it clear. The Government has power to intercept mail—stop communications—but this provision makes the mere mailing of a personal letter a crime carrying severe punishment.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman interpret the language of this bill as to communicating to an ally of an enemy as having any bearing upon a man writing to his relatives?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes. I asked a member of the committee yesterday, and I was surprised to hear it. That is just what it means.

Mr. WINGO. I am surprised to hear the gentleman's viewpoint.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I got the viewpoint of the members of the committee, and I am trying to express it. Now, if the committee's purpose is to have this bill enacted into law, and it is an emergency purpose, let us try to send one bill to the Senate that is logical, sensible, and necessary. The Senate is now overworked in trying to untangle our blunders here. I urge the adoption of my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, and in doing so I wish the attention of the gentlemen in charge of the bill. I notice in section 3 and in its subdivisions (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), that there is duplication, and I would suggest for the sake of economy in the bill and a better understanding of it, using the illustrations in (a) and (b) on line 6, page 27, it be made to read as follows:

To trade, or attempt to trade, with an enemy, or with an ally of the enemy.

Because subdivision (a) and subdivision (b) are identical in terms, except one is trading with the enemy and the other is trading with an ally of the enemy, and it can be made much more comprehensive and concise by putting "ally of the enemy" in with "enemy." I do not desire to offer the amendment, but I desire to call it to the attention of the committee also in respect to subdivisions (c) and (d). One is attempting to transport an enemy and the other is attempting to transport an ally of an enemy. And the same with regard to subdivisions (e) and (f), with regard to transmission out of the United States. One is to an enemy, and one is to an ally of an enemy in a certain matter.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the gentleman will permit me for a moment, this subject was quite carefully considered in the committee, and we came to the unanimous conclusion that we had better leave it as it was. There is force in the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio, I will say, and if I had drafted the bill perhaps I would not have framed it as it is.

Mr. MANN. The purpose of it was, no doubt, to enable the President to suspend the law as to an ally of the enemy.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes. It may give uniformity, but I think we had perhaps better leave it as it is.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, under these two paragraphs of this section it becomes impossible for anyone in the United States to communicate in any way whatever with their relatives or friends in Germany, Turkey, Austro-Hungary, or Bulgaria, with the further statement that the President may suspend the operation of the act as to the three latter named countries.

Of course this is a very hard rule to enforce. We who have been raised in the United States for several generations and who do not have a mother or father or brothers or sisters or nephews or nieces or other close relatives abroad may not fully appreciate this drastic provision, that the son or daughter here may not even make an effort to learn whether the mother or father in Germany or Turkey is alive.

Now, I do not say that this legislation ought not to be enacted, although I have grave doubts about it. But if this legislation is enacted, it seems to me that it is the duty of the Government itself, then, through the State Department, to make inquiry at the request of people here, citizens of the United States, concerning their relatives in Germany, to know whether they are alive. That the State Department now refuses to do. We do not in fact now have any real communication. You can not send a letter now—a relative here can not—and get it through the lines to a relative in Germany, and you can not get information here unofficially in reference to relatives in Germany, because they are not permitted to send communications here; and the State Department—I do not say they are not right about it up to date—refuses to make any inquiry, which, of course, they could do through the Swiss and Spanish legations.

I have always observed in a good many political fights the amenities of life between partisans. I do not feel myself that, because we are in a war where it is our duty to exercise every power which we can bring to bear to win victory, it is necessary for me to add personal hatred toward all the people who are born in Germany, nor do I think it advisable in the United States to undertake to inculcate the idea that all people born in Germany are therefore monsters and ought not to be communicated with. I think that the Government of the United States ought, when it forbids private communication, to at least have some method of ascertaining as to the living of some of the people in Germany who are relatives of people in the United States.

Mr GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all the language on page 28 between lines 3 and lines 16, inclusive; in other words, to strike out subdivisions (e) and (f).

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 28, strike out all of subdivisions (e) and (f).

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I do that because it seems to me that the question of communication, in so far as it may exist in the judgment of the United States, between anyone in the United States and an enemy thereof is amply taken care of by legislation which was recently passed. I refer to the so-called espionage bill, which had its approval only on June 17 of the present year. Section 2 (a) of that act provides that—

SEC. 2 (a) Whoever, with the intent or reason to believe that it is to be used to the injury of the United States or to the advantage of a foreign nation, communicates, delivers, or transmits, or attempts to, or aids or induces another to, communicate, deliver, or transmit, to any foreign government, or to any faction or party or military or naval force within a foreign country, whether recognized or unrecognized by the United States, or to any representative, officer, agent, employee, subject, or citizen thereof, either directly or indirectly, any document, writing, code book, signal book, sketch, photograph, photographic negative, blue print, plan, map, model, note, instrument, appliance, or information relating to the national defense, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 20 years: Provided, That whoever shall violate the provisions of subsection (a) of this section in time of war shall be punished by death or by imprisonment for not more than 30 years; and (b) whoever, in time of war, with intent that the same shall be communicated to the enemy, shall collect, record, publish, or communicate, or attempt to elicit any information with respect to the movement, numbers, description, condition, or disposition of any of the armed forces, ships, aircraft, or war materials of the United States, or with respect to the plans or conduct, or supposed plans or conduct of any naval or military operations, or with respect to any works or measures undertaken for or connected with, or intended for the fortification or defense of any place, or any other information relating to the public defense which might be useful to the enemy, shall be punished by death or by imprisonment for not more than 30 years.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, that the language I have read, and preceding and succeeding language also, with which the members of the committee are as familiar as I am, and which therefore I shall not read, will take care of every possible and proper situation. I question—seriously question—if it be the rightful province of the Congress of the United States at this time to take such drastic action as to say to a son of an old resident of Germany that he may not communicate with his father in the old country—that he may not send a letter to know what the state of his health may be.

This war, as the President of the United States has well said, is not a war of hatred of the German people, but a hatred of the autocracy of their Government; and I fear that the incorporation of proposed legislation such as this would have but one effect, and that would be the beginning of a great hate, which we have sought to avoid.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McKEOWN. I will ask the gentleman, if this section remains in the bill will it prevent a son or a daughter who is maintaining an aged father in Germany from remitting money to him to maintain him?

Mr. GARD. I would say unquestionably it would.

I go as far as any man, Mr. Chairman, in desiring to do everything possible for the protection of the United States, but I do not think we should go so far as to say that the most intimate of innocent family relationships should be severed by legislative action, or should be absolutely prevented, when there is no harm coming to the United States. Some one yesterday—I think it was a member of the committee—said it was intended to cover all possibilities of communication by cipher code or otherwise. Surely that is reaching the extremity in legislation, because the United States has an abundance of opportunity to inspect outgoing and incoming mail. It has done it and is doing it now; and the law at present provides a drastic penalty for anyone who sends or attempts to send any information abroad which may be beneficial to the enemy or prejudicial to our national defense. I think we have safeguarded every American interest. To go beyond that would be, to my mind, an invasion of the province of humanity and would suspend the very intimate relations of members of the family for no purpose except to inspire a degree of hatred which fortunately does not at this time exist

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the committee, as I said on yesterday, in relation to this amendment, that these sections lessen the present rigor and inhibitions of international law; they give the right to issue licenses whereby letters may be sent out of the United States. I concede that existing law is hard and drastic, but in the midst of war we can not have qualms about matters of this sort. Sending money abroad for the purpose of assisting the aged mother or father needing support has been suggested by the gentleman. That appeals to the instincts of humanity, but manifestly no Government conducting a war would permit its citizens to send money to the enemy country for any purpose. It is subject to confiscation when it gets to the other Government, and it seems to me the wisest and best course is that contemplated by this bill, namely, that these hardships may be taken care of by licenses, and that the Government in the administration of the matter, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] a while ago, can best meet the necessities and respond to the humanities of the case.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman stated that international law now forbids doing any of these things, and that this will permit them to be done, as I understood him.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think international law forbids the transmission of letters between the citizens or subjects of belligerent nations.

Mr. MANN. If international law already forbids it, I suggest that there is some doubt whether this would permit it. This is negative in form, not positive. This does not grant a right; this forbids certain things. If international law now forbids them, this does not grant the right.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But if the gentleman will turn to section 5, I think he will find that licenses can be given to effectuate the proper transmission of letters.

Mr. MANN. But it does not say what they can be given for. This section says it shall be unlawful for any person in the United States, except with the license of the Secretary of State as hereinafter provided in section 5. Now it may be inferentially understood that that gives a right now forbidden by law, if you obtain a license, but that is only an inference. To give a positive right by an inference is never a good method of legislation. If the gentleman is correct in concluding that all of these matters are now forbidden by international law, then the language of the bill ought to be changed, and it ought to be made lawful, with the licensing, to do these things.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does not the gentleman think that when the license is issued it does make such transmission lawful?

Mr. MANN. I think myself that the gentleman overstated the case when he said that the sending of a letter from a private citizen in the United States to a private citizen in Germany is forbidden by international law, if the letter relates only to private affairs.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman inquire if the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. MONTAGUE] has any authority or any precedent for the statement that the sending of family letters is prohibited by international law?

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman from Virginia did not intend to say that. I think he meant to say that if general trading was now forbidden, this would permit it; but it is only a permission by inference.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The purpose of my amendment was not to permit the transmission of letters, but to moderate the severe punishment provided in this bill for the mere mailing of a letter.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understand the gentleman's amendment has been disposed of.

Mr. DEWALT. Quite a long while ago.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We are now dealing with the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Does the gentleman in charge of the bill know of any power in the Government at this time under existing law to open and inspect the contents of letters passing between this country and other countries?

Mr. MONTAGUE. There is the censorship power.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Does it extend that far?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think it does. I think that power has been exercised in nearly every war. It was exercised very drastically during the Civil War.

Mr. GARD. It is being exercised now.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. By the general powers of the Government, so that a letter written here to some one in Germany could be examined by our authorities?

Mr. DEWALT. Certainly. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. GARD. I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia whether he has read the section of the law which was read to the committee, and whether he is not satisfied therefrom that it affords every protection, so far as the transmission of any information relative to the national defense is concerned?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The Secretary of Commerce in the hearing did not think it afforded the necessary protection. Therefore he insisted on these provisions, as the gentleman will observe by reading the hearings.

Mr. WINGO. I assume that all desire to pass legislation embodying the main purpose of this bill—that is, to prevent trading with the enemy. I assume that we purpose to prohibit any kind of communication that will be of military advantage to the enemy or a military detriment to our own country. I think we can accomplish these ends without at the same time prohibiting the class of communications to which attention has been called.

I do not agree that international law now prohibits the sending of private letters. I think a more correct statement of international law is that international law permits a belligerent government to censor or prevent the delivery of letters that under the censorship is deemed detrimental from a military standpoint.

After all, international law on this subject, I suspect, is susceptible of misunderstanding, as on many other things. I can conceive how it is possible for a man being liable to criminal punishment under this act by simply mailing a letter to a relative in Germany, even though it be a proper letter of no value to the enemy or injury to this country. In any event the Government controls the mail and may hold the letter.

Take the illustration some one has already given. Some man of German parentage living in this country, a loyal American citizen, a man whose soul is wrapped up in loyalty to the flag and our own country, as much so as any native born, and yet he has in his heart a very natural desire to know something about the welfare and condition of his parents in the enemy country. Now, I agree with the gentleman from Illinois that we do not undertake to relieve that situation by providing that the Secretary of Commerce may license these things.

If it be prohibited by international law, as is contended, then in order to give the relief it appears to me we should by some affirmative declaration impose upon some department of the Government the duty of trying to get this information for these unfortunate people who are loyal to this country, but yet who have a right to get information as to the relatives who happen to be living in a belligerent country, and I can not see where any injury could come to the Government if we made it the duty of some one to do that.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. DECKER. Did the gentleman understand that the bill itself specifically defines what the word "enemy" means?

Mr. WINGO. Yes; that occurred to me after I made the statement a moment ago.

Mr. DECKER. According to international law, I think probably the gentleman's statement would be correct.

Mr. WINGO. That occurred to me after I made the statement a minute ago. We undertake to say in this bill that the word "enemy" shall include persons living in a belligerent country, but the thing that appeals to me is the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, as well as the suggestion of the gentleman from New York. There are a great many good people in this country who are loyal—I know some of them—who have relatives living in Germany. I know a Frenchman, born in France, a loyal citizen of this country for years and years, a man who has been elevated to high office in his community, who wants to keep in touch with his sister and nieces in Germany, who are detained there—not permitted to go out of the country. I have as best I could through the State Department obtained the information for him during the last few years. Now that war has been declared between the United States and Germany, that man, hating the German Government as much as any native-born American citizen, might address a letter to his French sister in Germany, and under this bill he would commit a crime. That ought not to be permitted by any language in this bill, and we ought to go further. We ought to make it the duty of the Secretary of Commerce, or of the State Department, which I think would be preferable, to conduct these inquiries and in that way not only protect the Government against information going there but still at the same time afford the information that these unfortunate people are entitled to.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, there is one question that I should like to ask the chairman of the committee. The word "enemy" as used in this bill is defined in section 2, and the definition includes this language:

> Any individual, partnership, or other body of individuals of any nationality, resident within the territory * * * of any nation with which the United States is at war.

It is with regard to the word "resident" that I desire to make the inquiry. Does that mean having acquired what we know as a legal residence, a domicile?

Mr. MONTAGUE. No; it does not. The word "residence" is much broader than the word "domicile." Domicile would give you perhaps the idea of permanency, of a legal habitat, but the word "resident" means a sojourner staying or residing in. It embraces domicile and is broader than domicile.

Mr. TEMPLE. If it is not limited to domicile but includes residents of any kind, would it include an American boy in the Army of the United States who had been captured and held as a prisoner of war in Germany?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I should think not.

Mr. TEMPLE. What is there in the bill to show that such a temporary sojourner in Germany is not included in this definition?

Mr. MONTAGUE. He is still a citizen of the United States.

Mr. TEMPLE. Oh, but I asked the gentleman whether it meant domicile or legal residence, and his reply is that it means a temporary sojourn. If it means a temporary sojourn, it may be conceivably applied to one of our American soldiers in prison there.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will say to the gentleman that I do not mean it does not include a sojourn. It includes that, and it includes much more, but the gentleman's opinion upon that matter is one that I would give great deference to.

Mr. TEMPLE. I have no opinion. I am trying to find out what the bill is intended to cover.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I could not think that the bill is intended to cover a member of the expeditionary force sent to the enemy country.

Mr. TEMPLE. Without being so intended, does the bill actually do that?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not think so.

Mr. TEMPLE. I attempted to clear the ground with my first question to learn what the word "resident" meant in this section; whether it meant one who acquired a legal domicile, a legal residence, and the reply was no.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I did not say that. I said it includes that, and it includes much more.

Mr. TEMPLE. Oh, yes; it includes much more. Then I want to know whether it includes anybody who might in any sense be a resident of Germany, and if so, why does it not include our own soldiers who may be unfortunate enough to be captured?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Because a soldier upon the soil of Europe is in no sense a resident. He is not there by his own volition. He is not there exercising any of the civil functions of a resident.

Mr. TEMPLE. He has acquired no domicile or legal residence.

Mr. MONTAGUE. He may not be a sojourner at any given spot for one minute. He is under the flag of the United States and under the command of the United States.

Mr. TEMPLE. There is no doubt about that.

There is no doubt that he has not acquired a legal residence, but might it not be wise to make the bill unmistakable on that point?

Mr. MONTAGUE. What would be the gentleman's suggestion?

Mr. TEMPLE. I have not had time to formulate any definite ideas, and I am not sure that it is necessary. I was seeking information from the committee.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TEMPLE. I will.

Mr. WINGO. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that one State court has passed upon the word "resident"? The legal decision, and it was in a liquor case, of the word "resident" is one who has fixed a place of abode——

Mr. TEMPLE. I know the definition.

Mr. WINGO (continuing). With the intention of remaining there until unknown exigencies of life call him hence. I believe that is the wording.

Mr. TEMPLE. I am well acquainted with that. Another point I want to speak about in connection with this matter is the statement which has been made two or three times that communications of any kind by mail or otherwise are contrary to international law. It seems to me that is a mistake. So far as I am acquainted with the law of nations, it does not make any provision as to what may take place between two belligerents, except that they must conduct their warfare under certain restrictions and in accordance with certain rules and usages. If they wish to arrange any kind of communication, they may do so. Arrangements have been made by which prisoners in Germany may receive even packages from home. I have seen letters written by English prisoners in Germany saying they received packages of food from home and that Russian prisoners are sometimes hungry because they have not received like parcels from Russia.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is done under permit or license of the Government.

Mr. TEMPLE. International law neither requires nor forbids it. It depends on what arrangements the opposing belligerents make.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But under international law all trade and instrumentalities of trade are either suspended or interdicted upon the breaking out of war——

Mr. TEMPLE. That is true of commercial relations.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And there are included in such instrumentalities everything for the transportation of mail.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mail from this country?

Mr. MONTAGUE. To a belligereat country.

Mr. TEMPLE. It might easily be sent to Holland and then into Germany; that would be the natural line of communication.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is another question.

Mr. TEMPLE. That will depend upon whether the Post Office Department shuts off the transportation of the mail.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time of the gentleman be extended for one minute for the purpose of asking him a question. I believe the gentleman will agree as a lawyer that residence is a matter of intention coupled with facts consistent with that intention.

Mr. TEMPLE. I am quite familiar with the legal interpretation of the word "resident."

Mr. DEWALT. That is the legal definition.

Mr. TEMPLE. My first question was whether the term as used in this bill was to be confined to that, and the answer was it was not.

Mr. DEWALT. Now, the word "resident" having that definition of law, namely, that it is a matter of intention coupled with facts consistent with that intention, it certainly could not apply to a captured soldier who was upon German territory or allied territory, because he has no intention of residing in that country and there are no facts consistent with that intention which might make him a resident, and therefore it certainly could not include that.

Mr. TEMPLE. The gentleman will remember, however, when I asked whether the word "resident" was to be interpreted in that way he replied, at the beginning of my remarks, that it was not to be limited to that interpretation.

Mr. DEWALT. I understand, but the gentleman re-formed his answer.

Mr. TEMPLE. Then I will re-form my remarks.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman is correct, but in my answer I stated that it might be included, but that it also included much more.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I understand this is the section which gives to the Secretary of Commerce authority to license certain things to be done, which powers otherwise would be contrary to law unless so licensed. It seems that certainly one other department of the Government recently has taken occasion to license something which in its result was very surprising to the American people, and on the evening of the 3d of July in many of our large communities our good citizens were awakened by the cries of the newsboys hawking extra editions announcing to an anxious people the adventurous and perilous journey which had been taken by some of our transports and their safe arrival after attacks in the night by enemy submarines, "in force," as it was stated. It might have been "poetic" license or possibly a lively and lurid imagination aroused by the approach of the Nation's holiday that on the receipt of official dispatches from an admiral of our Navy setting forth the safe arrival of our transports at their destination across the seas that permitted, with official sanction from high official sources, their transcription and elaboration worthy of a chronicler of Capt. Kidd, relating to an attack that was made, as it was so vividly stated, upon our ships "in force" under cover of darkness, with torpedoes speeding by and the defense that was made by our fleet, with "our high-seas convoy" which "circled with their searchlights, answering with heavy gunfire, which heavy gunfire and the accuracy of that fire resulted in the torpedo discharge becoming increasingly scattered," but, Mr. Chairman, up to the present moment we have only this tale coming from high official sources about what actually took place. We are told the attack was made in force, although the night, illumined by searchlights though it was, "made impossible any exact count of the U-boats gathered for what they deemed a slaughter."

The world also was told that the expedition was divided into contingents, and that a rendezvous had been arranged, and that the attack was made beyond the rendezvous.

This announcement, coming as it did, couched in flamboyant style, was the work presumably of the Bureau of Public Information, which bureau was presumably to have been the official censor of the Nation had not the Congress eliminated the censorship section from the espionage bill. We have now had exemplified what would possibly occur should we have authorized any sort of censorship heretofore, or should we provide for it in this bill or in any other measure which later may come before the Congress. And when the gentleman who is in charge of this bureau of information established upon somewhat hazy authority, as I view it, was asked to give the official news, he stated that if he did that, I understand it might disclose the latitude and longitude where this attack of U-boats was made upon our fleet, as if, perchance, the captains of the U-boats were interested in knowing the latitude and longitude of the ships which they were at that moment attacking. I submit that that blundering method of arousing the interest of our citizens and seeking to frighten the people of America by elaborating official reports is not to be encouraged and ought not to be accepted as a method or plan to be followed in the future. The people are entitled to know the facts without "frills and furbelows," at least such facts as may be divulged without giving useful information to the enemy.

We should take all steps necessary to cloak with secrecy the movements of our ships. But it is likewise true that our people at home should not be aroused by any such sensational accounts which were made public in order to give the American people "a happy American holiday." To do things like that, in view of the experience that Great Britain has had in shipping her troops, both across the Channel and from Canada, in safety, which she has been able to accomplish during the past three years, and to embellish and color official reports, in order to give assurance of success in a great undertaking, will only tend to frighten the American people, will have ill effects upon them, arouse them, and cause them unnecessary apprehension and terror, and cause discontent and anger when the truth becomes known.

And so I trust if there is any power to license given in this bill that the instance of license, poetic or otherwise, which we have recently witnessed and read of during the past week can not be taken as an example of how that power and authority will be exercised in the near future. What the people would now like to know is whether there was an attack, or attacks; and if so, what happened?

As a matter of fact, as I understand it, the Associated Press, that great news-gathering agency of this country, loyal to our Government, every member of it, had a correspondent accompanying our troops, and he sent dispatches to this country announcing the safe and uneventful voyage of our troops; he, at least, was not aroused by heavy gunfire and the uproar of battle; and on July 5 he sent a second dispatch stating there had been no attack. Later Associated Press dispatches which had passed the censor of our forces in France were received here, but were intercepted and were not delivered until they were taken to one of the departments and there inspected and, possibly—I do not know—censored; but they were delayed for several hours, with no previous notice of this intended action having been given. Possibly because they did not correspond to the highly tinged account which had been published and which bore the approval of one of the Secretaries of an executive department of this Government, they were withheld from those sources for which they were intended—from the press association, to which they were addressed, and delayed for several hours—a questionable proceeding. That is another exercise of assumed or pretended censorship that the American people will not take kindly to. The American press of our Republic has set a high standard, as a whole, of patriotism. Indeed, I believe the editors may possibly be the best censors of news. Their judgment in the main can be safely trusted. [Applause.]

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment shall close at the end of three minutes.

Mr. TEMPLE. Will the gentleman yield for just a moment? My attention was diverted from the point I intended to make.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE] that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] has the floor.

Mr. TEMPLE. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. GARD. I will be very glad to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the section and all amendments thereto close—in what time?

Mr. MONTAGUE. In four minutes.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I think the request as submitted was as to the amendment and not to the section. I would like to have five minutes for the presentation of an amendment to the section.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Make it 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] asks unanimous consent that debate on the section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE].

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, this was the point I intended to make, but my attention was diverted. If we intend to maintain communication with our boys who may be prisoners in Germany it must be with the consent of the German Government. We can not do that, probably; we can not get that consent unless we make it possible for German prisoners in this country to communicate with their friends at home. I was laying the ground for this conclusion to my remarks, but interruptions had the double effect of consuming my time and diverting my attention.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, it is well recognized what is the existing status in the matter of communication by mail with foreign countries. It has been said in the debate, and I suspect it is true, that the Government of the United States has availed itself of its powers and has opened and examined mail which was addressed to some one in a foreign country, a country with which we are at war. That has prevailed, as has been said, and it is a proper provision under existing circumstances, but it is proposed in this legislation which is embodied in subdivisions (e) and (f) of section 3 to make it a crime for anyone in the United States to deposit in a mail box, here in Washington or in Chicago or elsewhere, a letter entirely free of wrong intent addressed to a parent, or other relative, or friend in a country with which we are at war. Now, I think we discussed here for many days the proposition which is at the base, it seems to me, of all these matters, and that is that we should do everything possible to bring the war to a hasty and successful conclusion, and do everything to bring victory to American arms. And we have been trying in our legislation to do that sensibly and well. But this goes so far, indeed, as to invade the common province of humanity. Why is it necessary to say at this time that with the safeguards we have around us, with not alone the absolutely stringent penalty under the espionage law, but with the power of the Government to open, examine, and suppress mail matter as well—why is it necessary to say to all of the people of the United States, to all our population that has come to us even from the countries with which we are at war, many of them as loyal as our native-born citizens, that if one of them deposits a letter in a mail box here to his mother in some place in Germany he is guilty of a crime and shall be punished? Why, wars are not fought alone in the trenches and on the firing line. Wars have become a matter of resources affecting the welfare of young and old. And surely no war should still the dictates of humanity, should take away from an American citizen the desire to know of the safety of his father and mother abroad, possibly aged persons who can in nowise contribute to the success of our foreign foe, and can give them no aid and comfort.

That is precisely the position we are in if the section prevails; that in addition to our present law, which most properly provides a drastic penalty for anyone who transmits or attempts to transmit information prejudicial to our national defense or beneficial to the enemy, we now go on record, if this legislation prevails, and make it a crime for one to deposit a letter to a friend or a relative which has not the slightest connection with any matter of national defense or giving aid to a foreign foe; and I do not think—and I say it with all due regard to those who have brought the bill here—that the time or the occasion is at hand when such drastic rules should be invoked, for in all respects we are amply protected by existing law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am impressed with what the gentleman says, and I am sure others in the House are impressed by it from the human side of the question. Suppose some one having relatives over there should want to write abroad. Would he apply to the Secretary of Commerce and lay his case before him? I raised the question a little while ago as to whether the Secretary of State or the Secretary of Commerce would have jurisdiction in a case of that kind. Will the license of the Secretary of Commerce permit one to write abroad if it be shown to the Secretary of Commerce that the writing is harmless?

Mr. GARD. I assume that that would be true, but I do not know. That would be the only object of issuing a license.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Of course, the gentleman, not being on the committee, need not answer; but is that the formula with which one would have to comply in order to communicate with a relative on the other side?

Mr. GARD. I do not speak for the committee, not being a member thereof, but I presume the regulations are to be prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce under section 3. The form I know nothing about.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, I send an amendment to the Clerk's desk and ask that it be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. There is already an amendment pending, which will be disposed of first. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 17.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my amendment be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HULBERT].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HULBERT: Page 37, line 19, after the word "enemy," insert:

"Provided, That nothing herein contained shall make unlawful the business of any corporation organized or existing under any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia the stock of which corporation is owned in whole or in part by or for the benefit of an enemy or ally of an enemy: Provided, That such corporation shall not directly or indirectly trade or attempt to trade with, for, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of, an enemy or ally of an enemy, as herein provided: Provided further, That the stock of such corporations shall be under the control of the provisions of this act."

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, before the present war broke out practically all of the fur business, which is but one illustration of many others with which I am familiar, was in control of citizens of the German Empire, who had agencies at New York, St. Louis, and other cities throughout the United States, the principal ones, however, being in the two cities that I have indicated. Because of the existence of a state of war many of these various agencies were incorporated under the laws of the several States, and while the incorporators and directors, and in some cases the officers of these corporations, are American citizens, they represent investments made with money belonging to citizens of the German Empire, to whom either the stock was issued or for whose benefit it was issued and is held by American citizens; and since the war broke out, and as the result of these operations, America has now become the unquestioned center of the fur trade.

Yesterday I propounded a question to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], who, in reply, said that corporations similarly situated would be permitted to do business in the United States; but, he added:

The officers of those corporations—the president, the secretary, and trustees—will be required under this bill to report to the alien-property custodian the name of every German stockholder or bondholder, as the case may be, and when that is listed with the custodian, then the dividends on the stock or the interest on the bonds will be paid to the custodian or to a depositary and put in the Treasury of the United States to be invested by the Secretary of the Treasury in bonds or in certificates of indebtedness. It will not mean that that corporation will cease business.

Now, a gentleman who is very extensively interested in this particular line of commercial activity has conferred with the representative of the Department of Justice, and they do not seem to be quite clear upon the exposition of the law as it was made by the gentleman from Wisconsin yesterday, with whom, however, I thoroughly agree. And therefore, in order to relieve the doubt upon that point, and to make it possible for corporations organized under the laws of the several States, which corporations are being officered and managed by American citizens, and which are employing American citizens in their daily activities, and which are carrying on business in the United States and wholly with people who are neither enemies nor allies of enemies, I propose this amendment. I might add these very concerns, with the approval of the British Government, are purchasing furs from Australian and Canadian concerns, and I can not believe we should even leave in doubt a matter upon which the British authorities have not found it necessary, through their experience, to impose such restrictions. I hope that the amendment will prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ESCH. Is this the amendment suggested by Mr. Heermance?

Mr. HULBERT. Yes. I have added to that amendment that the stock of such corporations shall be subject to the control of this act.

Mr. ESCH. So far as I am concerned, we have no objection to the Heermance amendment as printed as part of the hearings. I am not sure as to the last part of the stock provision.

Mr. HULBERT. If the committee objects to the last part of the provision, I will ask unanimous consent to strike it out.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Agreeing with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], I would be very glad if you would. The amendment did not occur to me when the gentleman first presented it. On looking at the hearings, I find that that is the amendment, with the exception of the portion which the gentleman from New York suggested to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. HULBERT. May I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the Clerk report the last clause of the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That the stock of such corporations shall be under the control of the provisions of this act.

Mr. HULBERT. In view of the statement made by the gentlemen of the committee, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw from the amendment a clause as read by the clerk, beginning with the words "Provided further."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment by eliminating the language just read by the Clerk. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York as modified.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I should like to hear the amendment reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HULBERT: Page 27, line 19, after the word "enemy," insert:

"Provided, That nothing herein contained shall make unlawful the business of any corporation organized and existing under any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia the stock of which corporation is owned in whole or in part by or for the benefit of any enemy or ally of an enemy: Provided, That such corporation shall not, directly or indirectly, trade or attempt to trade with, for, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of, an enemy or ally of an enemy as herein provided."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that all debate has expired by unanimous consent.

Mr. HULBERT. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois be allowed to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, here is a provision of the bill that authorizes trading by a corporation or an individual upon obtaining a license from the Secretary of Commerce. Thereupon the gentleman from New York offers an amendment which takes out from any prohibition to trade a corporation the stock of which is owned in whole or in part by or for the benefit of German citizens. What is the purpose of that? Under the provisions of the section, they could obtain authority to trade by obtaining a license. Why should you give a corporation any right, more than a partnership or an individual, to trade with the enemy? Then, because the stock of the corporation is owned in whole or in part by German citizens, it is proposed to say that you shall not forbid them at all to trade with the enemy. This section relates only to trading with the enemy in some form, and forbids trading with the enemy by anybody unless he gets a license. Now, here is the situation resulting from the amendment of the gentleman from New York: If the stock of a corporation in the United States is owned wholly by citizens of the United States, then they can not trade with the enemy without obtaining a license; but if a portion of the stock is owned by or for German citizens, then there is no taboo here by this section. What is the purpose of that? Why should you give a corporation in the United States partly owned by Germans a better right to trade with the enemy than you give to a corporation owned wholly by citizens of the United States?

Mr. HULBERT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HULBERT. I would call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the amendment which I have offered provides expressly that those corporations can not trade either with the enemy or with an ally of the enemy. That is the distinction which evidently the gentleman from Illinois has not appreciated.

Mr. MANN. The only purpose of this section is to forbid persons in the United States trading with the enemy. Now the gentleman says nothing in this section shall forbid a corporation owned in whole or in part by Germans from doing certain things, but they shall not trade with the enemy.

Mr. HULBERT. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HULBERT. There is not any intention, as I understand it, to forbid any corporation, no matter whether the stock is owned by citizens of the United States or by citizens of the German Empire, from doing business, so long as they do not do business with an enemy or an ally of an enemy. Now, while, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] explained yesterday, and as I have said, to my entire satisfaction, there can be no question of the right of a domestic corporation whose stock is owned by foreigners to do business under this section if they make an application for a license. Unfortunately that does not seem to be the opinion of the Department of Justice, and, therefore, in order to meet that situation, I have presented this amendment, which was submitted to the committee. Mr. Clayton J. Heermance, a very distinguished member of the bar in my city, with whom I have been acquainted for a number of years, appeared before the committee and submitted this amendment to them. He gave his testimony in the hearings there. I have no doubt that the committee has given serious consideration to this matter.

I do not think the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. MONTAGUE] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] have acceded to the suggestion contained in this amendment without mature reflection and deliberation; and I think if the gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. MANN. I am trying to get some really mature deliberation and reflection from those gentlemen now.

Mr. HULBERT. If the gentleman from Illinois will get the amendment and read it for himself, he will realize that it is not what he evidently has caught it to mean from the reading by the Clerk.

Mr. MANN. I have heard the amendment read twice, which is not a very satisfactory way of getting at its true meaning; but here is a section of the bill devoted wholly to forbidding trading with the enemy, except under a license from the Secretary of Commerce; and if the gentleman's amendment is what he thinks it is it has no place in this section. It has no relation to this section.

Mr. HULBERT. May I call the attention of the gentleman again to the amendment?

Mr. ELSTON. I heard the colloquy yesterday between the gentleman from New York [Mr. HULBERT] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], and I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is absolutely correct. The objection that the gentleman from New York made yesterday referred to an explanation of the rights of the custodian, where the custodian would have a right to take over the property owned by aliens in this country, and the gentleman from New York objected to the taking over of alien property in this country owned and operated by domestic corporations.

Mr. HULBERT. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The gentleman is confusing what I said yesterday with what the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] said.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HULBERT].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HULBERT) there were—ayes 7, noes 25.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the President, if he shall find it compatible with the safety of the United States and with the successful prosecution of the war, may, by proclamation, suspend the provisions of this act so far as they apply to an ally of enemy; and the Secretary of Commerce may, under direction of the President, grant licenses under this act, special or general, to any person or class of persons, if he shall be of opinion that such grant shall be compatible with the safety of the United States and with the successful prosecution of the war, and he may, with the approval of the President, make such rules and regulations not inconsistent with law as may be necessary and proper to carry out the provisions of this act

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to inquire as to the construction of this section. It authorizes the Secretary of Commerce to grant licenses; but licenses to do what? The sentence is not completed in that section.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I realize the force of his suggestion. With the consent of the committee I would like to have this section passed over until to-morrow.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Virginia to another matter in this section. It provides that the President may suspend the act so far as it applies to the allies of the enemy. I take it that it may be very desirable for the President to suspend the act, and it may be that the word "suspend" is sufficiently indicative to say that the act could afterwards be put in force, although I am not sure of it. It is perfectly patent that if it is desirable for the President to suspend the operation of the act as to Turkey, Bulgaria, or Austria, it may later become desirable to put this provision of the act into effect, and that ought to be provided for. The President is not likely to suspend it unless it can afterwards be made effective.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The suggestion of the gentleman is that it should be a temporary suspension?

Mr. MANN. It ought to be worded some way so that the President may suspend and thereafter revoke his suspension.

The gentleman asked that the section be passed over, and I call it to his attention that he may think of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that this section be passed over until later in the consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I desire to read in full article 23 of the treaty entered into between the United States and Prussia in 1799.

ARTICLE 23.

If war should arise between the two contracting parties, the merchants of either country then residing in the other shall be allowed to remain nine months to collect their debts and settle their affairs, and may depart freely, carrying off all their effects without molestation or hindrance; and all women and children, scholars of every faculty, cultivators of the earth, artisans, manufacturers, and fishermen, unarmed and inhabiting unfortified towns, villages, or places, and in general all others whose occupations are for the common subsistence and benefit of mankind, shall be allowed to continue their respective employments, and shall not be molested in their persons, nor shall their houses or goods be burnt or otherwise destroyed, nor their fields wasted by the armed force of the enemy, into whose power by the events of war they may happen to fall; but if anything is necessary to be taken from them for the use of such armed force, the same shall be paid for at a reasonable price.

We entered into a further treaty with Prussia in 1828, and, by article 12 of the 1828 treaty, article 23, which I have just read from the treaty of 1799, was continued in full force and effect. I suppose there can be no doubt under the decisions of the Supreme Court, and under the course of the State Department during the European war, that certainly until our declaration of war with Germany on the 6th day of April, 1917, article 23 of the treaty of 1799, which I have just read, was still in full force. I suppose there can be no doubt that certain provisions of the bill before the House are inconsistent with article 23. Notably would this be true of the provision on page 24 of the bill, subsection c, which was discussed at some length this morning and which permits the President, by proclamation, to include within the term "enemy" the citizens or subjects within the United States of Germany or any other country with which the United States may be at war.

Now, the question comes whether article 23 of the treaty of 1799 is to-day in full force and effect. The committee will notice that the treaty contemplates a state of war. It can not be said of article 23, as it can be said of many articles of a treaty between two belligerents, that it was abrogated by our declaration of war last April. The article itself, as the opening words disclose, specifically contemplates a state of war between the two parties to the treaty. "If war should arise between the two contracting parties" is the language of the treaty. It seems to me that it is of importance for the record, in order that there may be accurate knowledge of our exact status as a party to that treaty, and of the exact status of United States citizens in Germany and German citizens in the United States, that we should be fully cognizant whether in passing this trading-with-the-enemy bill we are recognizing the provisions of the treaty of 1799 as still in force. If I can get the opinion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] or the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT] on this subject, I should like to do so.

I notice that the gentleman from Pennsylvania in his remarks yesterday seemed to indicate that the treaty, in his opinion, was abrogated and no longer in force. I should like to ask him to state on what ground he arrived at that opinion.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, in response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts, what I did state yesterday was, concisely, this: My colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE] inquired of me whether the committee had taken into its thought the fact that there existed a treaty between Prussia and the United States, referring specifically, of course, to the treaty which has just been mentioned by the gentleman from Massachusetts—that of 1799. Fortunately, it so happened that I had that very treaty at that time before me and still have it, as reported in Senate Document No. 37, on the page therein referred to.

In the course of my remarks then, I stated this, and I desire now to repeat it, not only for the information of the gentleman, who I have no doubt is thoroughly informed upon the subject, but for the information of the other members of the committee who may have doubts upon the subject. This act provides that the enemy shall be, by description, one who is living in hostile territory; in other words, in territory of the nation with whom we are at war, or in the territory of the ally of that nation, and all of the provisions of this bill necessarily only apply to those who are resident within that territory.

Mr. ROGERS. How does the gentleman deal with subsection (c) of section 2, which is to be found on page 24 and which specifically deals with the citizens or subjects of Germany within the United States?

Mr. DEWALT. They are by proclamation of the President to be made subject to the provisions of this bill.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes; but if the President took advantage of this law and issued such a proclamation, he would thereby make an enemy, within the language of the law, of a person of German extraction and citizenship now living in the United States.

Mr. DEWALT. Why should he not, if that person is doing anything which is hostile to the interests of this country?

Mr. ROGERS. I am entirely in sympathy with the propriety of granting that permission to the President, but how does it dovetail in with the treaty?

Mr. DEWALT. It does not interfere with the treaty at all for this reason: If at any time within the war powers of the Government, by reason of the hostile acts of the belligerent who is at war with another nation or who is now at war with us, to wit, Germany, it becomes necessary for this Government to abrogate the treaty, it can do so at once without any negotiations, and that would be in effect an abrogation of this treaty.

Mr. ROGERS. I understand that fully. It is, then, the position of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the treaty of 1799 is now in full force and effect as far as article 23 is concerned, but that the passage of this law will make it possible for the President, in his discretion, to abrogate article 23?

Mr. DEWALT. I believe that the policy of the Government was best indicated by the President's proclamation, in which he said that the property of neutrals residing in this country should be held inviolate.

Mr. ROGERS. Will not the gentleman state his opinion as to whether article 23 of the treaty of 1799 is effective to-day or not?

Mr. DEWALT. I can not answer that except in consonance with the action of the President of the United States by his proclamation; but this I can say, that I do not believe that treaty applies to any of the individuals who are residents in this country, except by specific proclamation, because they are not enemies within the terms of the bill. The basic idea must not be forgotten that the enemy is one who is resident in hostile territory, and therefore it does not apply to German residents here.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, of course the gentleman knows very well that there are perhaps six or eight different classifications of the word "enemy" contemplated in this bill. It is quite true, as he states very clearly, that in so far as certain of those classifications are concerned there could be no suggestion that article 23 was being violated, but in so far as other classifications are concerned it seems reasonably clear that if the treaty is still in full force and effect, and if the proclamation which this bill permits were issued, there would be a direct and square violation of the treaty. Therefore it would seem to be of consequence to ascertain whether or not to-day article 23 of the treaty of 1799 is still in effect.

Mr. DEWALT. In reply to that let me quote for the gentleman's information from page 34 of the testimony that was taken in the testimony before the committee, and I am now reading from the testimony of Mr. Warren, one of the Assistant Attorneys General. Mr. ESCH asked him a question, and I quote now from his testimony:

Mr. ESCH. Did not the old Prussian treaty provide for the protection of merchants and that they should have nine months to return to their own country and dispose of their goods, and so on, with reciprocal rights for our merchants in Germany?

Mr. WARREN. That applies to alien enemies domiciled in this country, and the bill has no application at all to them, except so far as the President is authorized, if he finds the safety of the country demands it, to extend the term "enemy" to cover those persons. You will note that we specifically make no provision at all regarding alien enemies resident in the country. The bill does not touch them.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. And if they behave themselves their property will not be placed in charge of a custodian.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no. This bill does not in any way touch the property of an alien enemy resident in this country. The line of policy laid down in the President's proclamation of April 6, that the lives and property of all alien enemies in this country shall be absolutely protected and safe so long as they behave themselves—to put it in a popular way—is absolutely adhered to in this bill.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Is there not a treaty which covers the German ships in this country?

Mr. WARREN. No, sir; that is a very popular misapprehension. That particular section of the first treaty was not confirmed in the later treaty, so that the only treaty provision which is now in existence is the treaty provision relative to merchants domiciled in this country, who may have nine months in which to depart therefrom with their goods and effects.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr Warren, if I understand your statement, a German domiciled in this country—one who is not naturalized—if he is living here and transacting business, is not affected at all in his person or property by this bill?

Mr. WARREN. He is not affected in the slightest degree, with this single limitation: If the safety of the country demands it, the President is given the power to extend the term "enemy" to such persons.

The CHAIRMAN. Which would depend entirely upon the conduct of him and others like him?

Mr. WARREN. Which would depend absolutely on the conduct of such persons in this country. So far as we can see at the present time, no necessity for the inclusion of alien enemies in this country within the term "enemy" has arisen or is likely to arise; but no one can tell. If this war continues the length of time which some persons believe it may, no one can tell what conditions may arise in this country with reference to alien enemies. It may be necessary for the term "enemy" to be applied to them also; but the bill as drawn does not now apply to them.

I think that is a categorical answer to the gentleman's question, and in further response to the gentleman's inquiry permit me to state that Mr. Warren, from whom I have quoted, said specifically that the only treaty provision which is now in existence is the treaty provision relative to merchants domiciled in the country, who may have nine months within which to depart therefrom with their goods and effects.

Mr. ROGERS. That, of course, answers my question in so far as the opinion of Mr. Warren can answer it. Mr. Warren thinks that provision from the treaty of 1799, which I read, is still in full force and effect.

Mr. DEWALT. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. And the gentleman agrees, does he not, that the very day after this bill is signed by the President he would have the power under the law to issue a proclamation defining as enemies the residents of German citizenship in this country?

Mr. DEWALT. Precisely.

Mr. ROGERS. Does the gentleman think it is wise for us to leave extant and in force a treaty with Germany and at the same time give the President power to fly contrary to the terms of the treaty?

Mr. DEWALT. In reply to that I would say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I have long desired and have had an ambition to become Secretary of State, but not having yet arrived at that distinction I do not think I can answer the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. With reference to the very interesting proposition raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts as to whether the treaty of 1799 is still in force, he refers to article 23, and I think it might be well to read article 12 of the same treaty, which is as follows:

Experience having proved that the principle adopted in the twelfth article of the treaty of 1785, according to which free ships make free goods, has not been sufficiently respected during the last two wars, and especially in that which still continues, the two contracting parties propose, after the return of a general peace, to agree either separately between themselves or jointly with other powers alike interested, to concert with the great maritime powers of Europe such arrangements and such permanent principles as may serve to consolidate the liberty and the safety of the neutral navigation and commerce in future wars. And if in the interval—

That is the situation raised at the time the declaration of war was made.

And if in the interval either of the contracting parties should be engaged in a war to which the other should remain neutral, the ships of war and privateers of the belligerent power shall conduct themselves toward the merchant vessels of the neutral power as favorably as the course of the war then existing may permit, observing the principles and rules of the law of nations generally acknowledged.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the very cause of the war in which we are now engaged was not only a violation of the rules of international law in the submarine warfare by Germany, but the express and flagrant violation of article 12 of this very treaty of which the gentleman speaks, and there can be no question that when one of the contracting parties to a treaty deliberately and flagrantly violates one of its principal provisions the other contracting party is no longer bound by that treaty or held to it. On that I quote from Hall on international law:

The general rule, then, is clear that a treaty which has been broken by one of the parties to it is not binding upon the other, through the fact itself of the breach, and without reference to any kind of tribunal.

Woolsey lays down the same doctrine. So that whether or not this present bill does violate article 23 of the treaty, Germany certainly will never be in a position to complain, because she was the first violator of that treaty and the United States is perfectly free to consider it as no longer binding.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I will.

Mr. ROGERS. I am told the State Department takes exactly the position of the gentleman from Wisconsin, that the treaty of 1799 has been abrogated by the acts of Germany; but does not the gentleman think it is more cognizant with upright dealing as a nation if we face the question in some way or other through the action of the State Department and Congress in announcing that the treaty is dead and we are no longer bound by it in legislating on any trading-with-the-enemy act?

Mr. LENROOT. I think that would be preferable; I was simply arguing what I believed the situation was. I would like to insert in the RECORD, without reading, article 13, which is along the same line and is, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE] suggests, and even stronger than section 12. It is as follows:

ARTICLE 13.

And in the same case of one of the contracting parties being engaged in war with any other power, to prevent all the difficulties and misunderstandings that usually arise respecting merchandise of contraband, such as arms, ammunition, and military stores of every kind, no such articles carried in the vessels, or by the subjects or citizens of either party, to the enemies of the other shall be deemed contraband, so as to induce confiscation or condemnation and a loss of property to individuals. Nevertheless, it shall be lawful to stop such vessels and articles and to detain them for such length of time as the captors may think necessary to prevent the inconvenience or damage that might ensue from their proceeding, paying, however, a reasonable compensation for the loss such arrest shall occasion to the proprietors; and it shall further be allowed to use in the service of the captors the whole or any part of the military stores so detained, paying the owners the full value of the same, to be ascertained by the current price at the place of its destination. But in the case supposed of a vessel stopped for articles of contraband, if the master of the vessel stopped will deliver out the goods supposed to be of contraband nature, he shall be admitted to do it, and the vessel shall not in that case be carried into any port nor further detained, but shall be allowed to proceed on her voyage.

All cannon, mortars, firearms, pistols, bombs, grenades, bullets, balls, muskets, flints, matches, powder, saltpeter, sulphur, cuirasses, pikes, swords, belts, cartouche boxes, saddles, and bridles beyond the quantity necessary for the use of the ship, or beyond that which every man serving on board the vessel, or passenger, ought to have, and in general whatever is comprised under the denomination of arms and military stores, of what description soever, shall be deemed objects of contraband.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I will.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The treaty that the gentleman has referred to is a so-called treaty of amity and commerce?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. There could have been no war between the contracting parties for a breach of that treaty. The treaty itself provides for a condition of war. The treaty itself provides what shall occur in the event one or the other of the contracting parties shall violate the treaty.

Mr. LENROOT. Let me make this statement: I have not recently read the treaty in all of its articles, but I apprehend that there might be a cause for war that would not be an express violation of the different articles of that treaty.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The matter I direct to the gentleman's attention is the fact that the treaty itself is a peace provision—it is a treaty of amity and friendship.

Mr. LENROOT. Surely.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. And hence there could not have been any war without a breach of a treaty which is a treaty of amity and friendship, and since the treaty itself makes provision for cases which necessarily arise after a breach of the treaty, how can the gentleman say that because one of the provisions of the treaty is broken that which provides for that which shall be done is also abrogated?

Mr. LENROOT. The title of this, of course, is "a treaty of amity and friendship," but the gentleman will recognize there might be a treaty termed one of "amity and friendship" dealing with certain specific subjects, and yet there might be a cause for war, and war would be actually engaged in outside of any infringement of the specific articles named in the treaty.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. But the gentleman has said that this war arose because of the breach of article 12.

Mr. LENROOT. I said it arose because of a violation of international law that was expressly covered in article 12.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. So that this article 23, if I recollect the correct number of it, was intended to cover just the particular case that could arise when article 12 was broken?

Mr. LENROOT. No. The gentleman does not get my point. I assume that the general rule of international law concerning the breaking of a treaty would still prevail, but war might exist through some other cause than a violation of the particular articles of the treaty, in which case article 23 would, of course, prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph, for the purpose of continuing my colloquy with the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that by unanimous consent the paragraph was passed by until later on in the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That paragraph is passed.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to the fact that as between private contracting parties the relation is not necessarily terminated because of the breach of one of the terms of the contract by one of the parties. The breach must be of a term which is essential to the subject matter of the contract. If we should apply to contracts between nations the same rules of good faith and reasonable construction that we apply to contracts between private parties, we can not say that merely because one of the terms of the treaty has been broken another provision of the treaty, which necessarily implies that it shall remain in force after a breach of the other provisions and war has occurred between the contracting nations, has been abrogated.

Now, it seems to me that this is an important point. Are we to regard our treaties as "scraps of paper"? If we are to do so, let us do it, at least as a frank and brave Nation, by saying so. Let us denounce the treaty. But let us not slip and slide around and ignore the plain provisions of a treaty intended to apply to the very conditions that exist at this time.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the gentleman a question: Assuming that Germany violates every paragraph of the treaty, violates every principle of international law, does the gentleman think that the United States in its relations with Germany should consider itself bound in all of its promises with Germany and let Germany go free?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will say in reply to the gentleman that I am not arguing that we ought to observe this clause of the treaty or expressing an opinion whether it is still in effect, but I do say that we ought to say one thing or the other. We ought to say bravely and honorably that the entire treaty has been terminated by the acts of Germany; we ought to take that responsibility; or we ought to live up to it and not try to evade the effect of it. It is clear to me that we are now legislating inconsistently with the terms of that treaty.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the next section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of Commerce, with approval of the President, is authorized to appoint, prescribe the duties of, and fix the salary (not to exceed $5,000) of an official to be known as the alien property custodian, who shall be empowered to receive all money and property in the United States due or belonging to an enemy, or ally of enemy, which may be paid, conveyed, transferred, assigned, or delivered to said custodian under the provisions of this act; and to hold, administer, and account for the same under the general direction of the Secretary of Commerce and as provided in this act. The alien property custodian shall give such bond or bonds, and in such form and amount, and with such security as the Secretary of Commerce, with approval of the President, shall prescribe. The Secretary of Commerce may further employ in the District of Columbia and elsewhere and fix the compensation of such clerks, investigators, accountants, and other employees as he may find necessary for the due administration of the provisions of this act; and he may in his discretion accept the voluntary services of individuals therefor: Provided, That such clerks, investigators, accountants, and other employees shall be appointed from lists of eligibles to be supplied by the Civil Service Commission and in accordance with the civil-service law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania and Mr. LENROOT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is recognized.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 30, line 9, after the word "law," insert the following:

"Provided further, That the Secretary of Commerce shall cause a detailed report to be made to Congress on the 1st day of January of each year of all proceedings had under this act during the year preceding. Such report shall contain a list of all persons appointed or employed, with the salary or compensation paid to each, and a statement of the different kinds of property taken into custody and the disposition made thereof."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is the same amendment in substance as was included in the food bill.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think it is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, page 29, line 13, by inserting after the figures "$5,000" the words "per annum." I presume that was the intention.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LENROOT: Page 29, line 13, insert after the numerals "$5,000," the words "per annum."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We have no objection to that, Mr. Chairman.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ESCH: Page 29, line 17, after the word "enemy," insert "or to any person whom there may be reasonable cause to believe to be an enemy or ally of an enemy."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, let us see what the effect of that amendment may be.

Mr. ESCH. After the word "enemy" on page 29, line 17, we insert the words "or to any person whom there may be reasonable cause to believe to be an enemy or ally of an enemy."

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will pardon me, do I understand my colleague from Wisconsin to place his amendment at page 29, line 17, after the word "enemy"?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. May I inquire of the gentleman who is to determine whether there is reasonable cause?

Mr. MANN. Here is the situation: The law would authorize and direct the payment of money, and so forth, to the custodian—money belonging to an enemy or ally of an enemy. That is a question of fact. Reasonable belief is not a question of fact.

Mr. ESCH. But it enlarges the scope of the section.

Mr. MANN. Supposing he is a citizen of the United States; if the money is deposited with the custodian and he is a citizen of the United States he is entitled to have the money paid over to him, but as deposited under this amendment I do not know whether he would ever get his money or not. If he is an enemy under the terms of this bill, then the custodian receives it. If he is not an enemy and the custodian has received it, then he can make the custodian turn it over to him. But under your provision you authorize the custodian to receive money which I may owe to the gentleman from Wisconsin. I turn it over to the custodian with the statement that I have reason to believe that the gentleman from Wisconsin is an enemy, and then the custodian has it. I know of no way of getting it away from him. But if we turn the money over to the custodian improperly—money belonging to some one who is not an enemy—it is recoverable. I am not sure, but I know what the gentleman wants to cover.

Mr. ESCH. It will have to be carried in subsequent sections of the bill. There are other places where like language can be inserted.

Mr. MANN. You propose by the bill to pay over to the custodian money or property which belongs to an enemy, under the definition of the term "enemy" in the bill. You do not want to do any more than that. You do not want to turn anybody else's property over to the custodian unless he is in fact an enemy, and if the custodian receives the property belonging to some one who is not an enemy, I think the custodian could be sued for it.

Mr. LENROOT. Express provision is made in the bill for that later on.

Mr. MADDEN. If the custodian is in doubt about it he could keep it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would the custodian or the Secretary of Commerce be the one to decide whether or not there is reasonable cause to suspect a person of being an enemy?

Mr. ESCH. The custodian would be the person officially to administer this property.

Mr. MANN. A man might have reason to believe that the man is an enemy when that is not the fact.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The custodian might believe it and the Secretary of Commerce might not believe it.

Mr. ESCH. I do not think that would work out in actual practice.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question as to the constitutionality of this amendment, as applicable to the citizen who is suspected of being an alien enemy—that part of the Constitution about taking property from a man without due process of law. This would take a citizen's property without due process of law.

Mr. MANN. Under the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me, personally, that it would be safer to leave it where it is, so that if the money is turned over to the custodian the right of the custodian to hold it would depend on whether the debtor is in fact an enemy.

Mr. ESCH. I shall not insist on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin ask to withdraw it?

Mr. ESCH. Yes; I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill, or some member of the committee, to be kind enough to answer a question with reference to the use in this bill of the word "ally." I interpret that to include, we will say for purpose of illustration, Bulgarian subjects. Now, we have a treaty with Bulgaria, and we are not at war with that country. That treaty gives to the Bulgarian citizens certain rights and privileges in reference to their property, and it seems to me this section is clearly inconsistent with our Bulgarian treaty. I want to ask some member of the committee whether it was intended to abrogate that treaty or ignore it, or how it was expected to reconcile these terms of the act, which is clearly at variance with the treaty? What was intended by that? Will some gentleman explain that?

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, the question asked by the gentleman from Alabama is similar to the question propounded by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] in regard to the operations of treaties.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman pardon me for a moment?

Mr. DEWALT. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It is argued that the Prussian treaty was abrogated and is not now in effect, whereas there can be no doubt that our treaty with Bulgaria is in full effect.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. We are at war with Prussia.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes; and we are not at war with Bulgaria.

Mr. DEWALT. Irrespective of the fact that we are at war with Germany, the treaty obligation of 1799, in so far as it applied to merchants having the right to transport their goods from this country within nine months, was recognized by the President of the United States by his proclamation of April 6. In conformity with that idea this bill was drawn, with the provision, however, that when the President of the United States deemed it necessary for the protection of this country, in the furtherance of the interests thereof in the prosecution of the war, he might declare by proclamation that those parties in this country were subject to the provisions of this act. Now, this act also provides not only that the enemy shall be subject to the provisions of the act, but that the allies of the enemy shall be subject thereto. Admitting, then—which is the fact—that Bulgaria is an ally of Germany, and admitting also that we have treaties existing between Bulgaria and the United States by which Bulgarian citizens have certain rights, the fact still remains that if the emergency arises by which the President of the United States deems it necessary, for the preservation of the interests of this country, to abrogate any or all of the provisions of that treaty, I maintain that under the war power he has that right, and it would be given to him by this section of the bill.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman inform us whether he regards the position of Bulgaria with reference to this country as different from that of Norway, we will say?

Mr. DEWALT. I do not think so, except——

Mr. TEMPLE. Oh, yes.

Mr. DEWALT. Except that Bulgaria is an ally of Germany.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That does not change her aspect toward us, so far as our treaties are concerned.

Mr. DEWALT. No; but it might very materially change our aspect toward her.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. May I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that so far as the legality of this bill is concerned it might as well apply to subjects of neutral nations? Would the gentleman say that we could authorize the President, or that we ought to authorize the President, to ignore treaties with neutral nations because it happens to be for our convenience?

Mr. DEWALT. No.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Treaties are the supreme law of the land. How can we authorize the President to ignore them or set them aside by proclamation?

Mr. DEWALT. No such thing is contemplated in the bill, and it is a wide stretch of the imagination to think that anything of the kind could be contemplated, because the bill itself provides, first, as to the enemy; and, second, as to the allies of the enemy. They are the only two classes that are contemplated by the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the general principles of international law, intercourse is only forbidden with those nations with which the Government is at war, and intercourse is not forbidden with any country, though an ally of the belligerent with which the Nation is not at war. If I am right in that position, are we not then trenching upon the rights of citizens domiciled in countries other than the country with which we are at war, though they may be domiciled in the country of an ally of the country with which the Nation is at war?

Mr. DEWALT. The gentleman's question may be entirely clear to himself, but I must say that it is rather confusing to me, though that may be because of my lack of comprehension.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. I first propounded to the gentleman my understanding of the principle of international law that intercourse is forbidden only between the countries with which the Nation is at war, and not with any allies of those countries with which the Nation is at war. If such is the fact, that that is public law, acknowledged by text writers and by the Supreme Court of the United States in many decisions, are we not transgressing or going beyond international law when we seek to appropriate the property of citizens of the allies of the country with which we are at war, for instance, Bulgaria, Turkey, or Austria-Hungary?

Mr. DEWALT. I think not, because in the first place——

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman agree with my first postulate, that the intercourse is only forbidden in international law with the country with which we are at war?

Mr. DEWALT. I agree as far as the general proposition is concerned, namely, that international law recognizes that there is a cessation of commerce and intercourse between belligerents. I agree with the proposition that it does not ipso facto apply to the allies of the belligerents. But I also couple it with this reservation, that if the acts of the belligerents with whom we are at war or the acts of the allies are such as are inimical to the best interests of ourselves, being at war with the nations with whom the ally is acting, that then we would have the right under international law to enforce the provisions of this act.

Mr. STAFFORD. The provisions of this bill are broader than that. It does not say property of foreigners domiciled with the allies of the belligerents shall only be appropriated when that country commits acts inimical to our country. It says that all the dividends and profits in this country belonging to citizens of an ally of the belligerents shall be turned over to the foreign custodian.

Mr. DEWALT. Very well. Let me ask the gentleman a question, admitting that Bulgaria is an ally of the country with which we are at war. What is the gentleman's idea of the word "ally"?

Mr. STAFFORD. One who is associated in acts of aid or assistance to the belligerent but not necessarily in any act as an aid in the position of a belligerent to our Government.

Mr. DEWALT. I do not see that the distinction can be made. If the gentleman's definition of an ally is, "such a party as is giving aid and assistance to a belligerent nation," then it must follow as a matter of clear sequence that any act that is done by an ally must be in opposition to us. Does not that follow?

Mr. STAFFORD. When Italy declared war on Austria-Hungary it was not considered as war against Germany until much later after the declaration of war was made by Italy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the bill.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, line 9, after the word "law," strike out the period and insert a colon and the following:

"Provided, That no person shall be appointed who is liable to be drafted into the military service of the United States."

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, that provision was put in the other bill, and it is to prevent the appointment of any clerk who might be drafted into the service of the United States.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the gentleman from New York that I do not think it is necessary to discuss that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. (a) That every corporation incorporated within the United States, and every unincorporated association, or company, or trustee, or trustees within the United States issuing shares or certificates representing beneficial interests shall, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Commerce, with approval of the President, shall prescribe and, within 30 days after the passage of this act, transmit to the alien property custodian a full list, duly sworn to, of every officer, director, or stockholder who is an enemy or ally of enemy, together with the amount of stock or shares owned by each such officer, director, or stockholder, or in which he has any interest.

Any person in the United States holding or having custody or control of any property, beneficial or otherwise, alone or jointly with another or others, for or on behalf of an enemy or ally of enemy, and any person in the United States indebted in any way to an enemy or ally of enemy shall, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Commerce shall prescribe, and within 30 days after the passage of this act, or within 30 days after such property shall come within his custody or control, or after such debt shall become due, report the fact to the alien property custodian by written statement under oath, containing such particulars as said custodian shall require. The Secretary of Commerce may extend the time for filing the lists or reports required by this section for a period not exceeding 90 days from date of passage of this act.

(b) If any property, money, or other property so held or so owned shall have been, after the beginning of the war, conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered, or paid to, for the account or benefit of or in trust for an enemy, with knowledge or with reasonable cause to believe that such was the nature of the transaction, such assignment, conveyance, transfer, delivery, or payment shall be void: Provided, That the foregoing provisions of this subsection (b) shall not apply to any payment of money or delivery of property made prior to the passage of this act in performance or in satisfaction of an obligation or right incurred or created prior to the beginning of the war, where such payment or delivery was made to an agent or trustee appointed prior to the beginning of the war, and who at the time of such payment or delivery had authority to receive the same and there was no reasonable ground to believe that such agent or trustee intended to transmit, or to connive in the transmission of, such money or property to an enemy during the continuance of the war.

(c) If the Secretary of Commerce, by direction of the President, shall so require, any money or other property owing or belonging to an enemy or ally of enemy, or which the Secretary of Commerce, after investigation, shall determine is owing to or belongs to an enemy or ally of enemy, shall be conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered, or paid over to the alien-property custodian, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Commerce shall prescribe. And if not so required, any person not an enemy or ally of enemy who owes to an enemy or ally of enemy any money or other property, or to whom any obligation or form of liability is presented for payment, may, at his option, pay, convey, transfer, assign, or deliver to the alien-property custodian said money or other property is due, with such exceptions and under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Commerce, with approval of the President, shall prescribe.

(d) No person shall be held liable in any court for or in respect to anything done or omitted in pursuance of any order, rule, or regulation made by the Secretary of Commerce under the authority of this act.

Any payment or delivery of money or property to the alien-property custodian which this act authorizes shall be a full acquittance and discharge for all purposes of the obligation of the person making such payment or delivery, to the extent of such payment or delivery. The alien-property custodian and such other persons as the Secretary of Commerce may appoint shall have power to execute, acknowledge, and deliver any such instrument or instruments as may be necessary or proper to evidence upon the record or otherwise such acquittance and discharge, and shall deliver up any notes, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness or obligation respecting, or any security that may have come into the possession of the alien-property custodian for, the payment or delivery of the moneys so paid or property so delivered, with like force and effect as if they, respectively, were attorneys duly appointed by the obligee or owner. The Secretary of Commerce shall issue to every person so appointed a certificate of the appointment and authority of such person, and such certificate shall be received in evidence in all United States courts or other courts within the United States. Whenever any such certificate of authority shall be offered to any registrar, clerk, or other recording officer, Federal or otherwise, within the United States, such officer shall record the same in like manner as a power of attorney, and such record or a duly certified copy thereof shall be received in evidence in all courts of the United States or other courts within the United States.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 32, lines 3 and 4, by striking out the words "appointed prior to the beginning of the war and."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 32, lines 3 and 4, after the word "trustee," strike out the words "appointed prior to the beginning of the war and."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, international law does not forbid the payment of money to an agent resident in the United States of an enemy who is in an enemy's territory, although it does not permit the transmission of the money by the agent to the principal. The theory of this bill which prevents the transmission of money to the enemy country and to the enemy I think is entirely sound; and the theory which proposes in the future to keep out of an agent's hands money which otherwise might be lawfully paid to him is also entirely sound. But, in view of the fact that under international law it has been perfectly proper for the debtor in the United States since the 6th day of April up to the present time, and will be lawful up to the time when this bill becomes a law, to pay a debt which he owes to a man in Germany to the agent of the German in the United States, it does not seem proper now to require that the appointment of that agent should have occurred prior to the beginning of the war. In other words, if on the 1st of last May a German in Germany who was owed money in the United States by a citizen of the United States appointed X in the United States his agent to receive that money, it was a perfectly proper transaction, and it was a perfectly proper transaction on the part of the debtor in the United States to pay that money to X, provided he did not have a reasonable ground to believe that the money when paid by him was to be transmitted to enemy territory. What we are seeking to avoid is the transmission of money to Germany. We are not seeking to avoid the liquidation of the debt to the agent, provided payment has in good faith been made to the agent prior to the enactment of this law. By simply eliminating the words "appointed prior to the beginning of the war and" we provide that all appointments of agents after this law has been passed shall be void, and payment to the agent shall be void; but we do not impress with an unlawful character perfectly bona fide and legitimate transactions which have resulted from agencies created subsequent to the declaration of war and prior to the enactment of this law. As the bill now stands, it is retroactive in that it makes unlawful a transaction which, in the absence of legislation, was perfectly proper and legitimate. Such a result would be unfair and seems to be attended by no compensating advantages. In giving the plan retroactive effect it may produce great hardships upon persons who in the best of faith have made payments to agents in the United States of German principals without contemplating that such transaction might later be declared illegal and the payment void. Any such proposal works an entirely unnecessary hardship upon our own innocent citizens.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 4960, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. HICKS for 10 days, on account of official business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LESHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD an account of the dedication exercises adopted at a patriotic mass meeting of the American citizens of Slavonic descent, held in the city of Pittsburgh, Pa., on the 24th day of June, 1917, including a speech of my colleague, Hon. GUY E. CAMPBELL, of Pittsburgh.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BUSINESS IN ORDER ON CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order to-morrow on Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with, and that we proceed with the consideration of the trading-with-the-enemy bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to dispense with business in order on Calendar Wednesday, to-morrow, and proceed with the trading-with-the-enemy bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 49 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, July 11, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of Commerce, submitting supplemental estimates of appropriations required by the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918 (H. Doc. No. 252); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication of the Secretary of Commerce, submitting supplemental estimates of appropriations required by the Department of Commerce for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918 (H. Doc No. 253); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DYER: A bill (H. R. 5368) providing for an advisory referendum by the people of the District of Columbia on certain questions relating to municipal self-government and representation in Congress; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BURNETT: A bill (H. R. 5369) to provide for the deportation of certain aliens, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Miss RANKIN: A bill (H. R. 5370) authorizing and providing for the support of the dependent wives, mothers, minor brothers and sisters, and minor children of enlisted men in the Regular Army, of enlisted men in the Organized Militia or National Guard, called or drafted into the service of the United States, and of the enlisted men of the forces raised by the act of May 18, 1917; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BRAND: Resolution (H. Res. 114) to reward women and girls for certain agricultural services during the war; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. LONDON: Resolution (H. Res. 115) calling upon the Postmaster General to furnish to the House certain information; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FORDNEY: A bill (H. R. 5371) granting a pension to Mary Muehleder; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FRENCH: A bill (H. R. 5372) granting a pension to Mary Botsford; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 5373) granting an increase of pension to William C. Adams; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHERWOOD: A bill (H. R. 5374) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Green; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota: A bill (H. R. 5375) granting an increase of pension to Patrick Keligher; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Report of the grand jury empaneled in the United States district court of the northern district of Illinois, at Chicago, at the June term, 1917, pointing out the conditions of trade in food products and urging the necessity of legislation which will absolutely put a stop to the exploitation of war conditions to raise prices to the consumer for the benefit of the few who are handling food products; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. DALE of New York: Memorial of Conference on High Cost of Living, relative to tax on value of all land; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DOWELL: Petition of employees of the post-office department of Des Moines, Iowa, relative to conscription of incomes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DRUKKER: Petition of citizens of Paterson, N. J., favoring woman suffrage as a war measure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. EAGAN: Memorial of the American Drug Manufacturers' Association, relative to gross-sales' special tax; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Memorial of the Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Ohio, favoring House bill 2572, to increase pensions of certain widows and former widows of deceased soldiers and sailors of the Civil War; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAWLEY: Petitions of Jeannette Taylor, S. Patterson, and others, opposing vaccination and inoculation for soldiers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HUTCHINSON: Petition of the New Jersey Conference of Seventh-Day Adventists, opposing the passage of Senate bill 2260 and House bill 128; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, resolution adopted by the New Jersey Branch of the National Woman's Party, protesting against the arrest and jail sentence of six suffrage pickets in Washington, D. C.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KEHOE: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Florida, requesting that the reservation known as the Choctawhatchee Reservation, in west Florida, be withdrawn, and that the land therein be restored to homestead entry, and that all citizens be allowed to make homestead entry thereon in compliance with the laws of the United States; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: Petition of Mrs. Warren P. Lombard and 39 other residents of Ann Arbor, Mich., relative to national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania: Evidence in support of House bill 1034, for the relief of Jonathan B. Rhodes; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LUNDEEN: Resolutions of the Minnesota Scandinavian Grand Lodge of the International Association of Good Templars, demanding the passage of a national total prohibition amendment to the Constitution; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MAGEE: Petition of C. R. Drum and other citizens of the city of Syracuse, N. Y., favoring full national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. NOLAN: Petition of Sherwood & Sherwood, Scharlin Bros., and Julius Levin Co. (Inc.), of San Francisco, Cal., protesting against the passage of legislation prohibiting withdrawal of distilled spirits from bonded warehouses; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. RANDALL: Memorial of Highland Park Baptist Church, of Los Angeles, favoring national prohibition and conservation of food; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. REED: Petition of Clyde Waters, secretary, and the members of Branch 96 of the Glass Bottle Blowers' Association, of Clarksburg, W. Va., urging the passage of the food-control bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. SCHALL: Petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Minnesota, favoring prohibition as a war measure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SNYDER: Petition of sundry citizens of the thirty-third New York district, favoring Nation-wide prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of sundry citizens of the thirty-third district of New York and Teamsters' Union, No. 445, of Utica, N. Y., against Nation-wide prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TEMPLETON: Petition of Presbyterian Church of White Haven, Pa., protesting against the manufacture of intoxicating liquors; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota: Memorial of State Federation of Labor of North Dakota, declaring loyalty to the Government, commending the selective conscription law, and protesting against any effort to lengthen the hours of labor; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, July 11, 1917.

(Legislative day of Monday, July 9, 1917.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The VICE PRESIDENT announced his signature to the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 33) to relieve the owners of mining claims who have been mustered into the military or naval service of the United States as officers or enlisted men from performing assessment work during the term of such service, which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

NEWS-PRINT PAPER INVESTIGATION (S. DOC. NO. 61).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Federal Trade Commission, transmitting, pursuant to a resolution of June 27, 1917, a report of the Federal Trade Commission relative to the news-print paper investigation, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a petition of the General Synod of the Reformed Church of the United States, praying for the establishment of "white zones" around all military and naval camps and stations of the United States for the protection and conservation of the young manhood in the service of the Government, in which the sale of all intoxicating liquors and institutions of vice be strictly prohibited, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial from the Socialist League of Elizabeth, N. J., remonstrating against the undemocratic persecution of the socialist press of the country and praying for the repeal of the law permitting the Post Office Department to censor publications, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a telegram embodying a resolution of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association, expressing willingness to cooperate in the raising of the necessary additional revenue and to stand their just and fair proportion of the increased taxation of the country, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the amendment pending I ask to have stated, but in view of the fact that there are very few Senators present I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson, Cal.	New	Smith, Mich.
Calder	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Smoot
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Page	Sterling
Curtis	Kendrick	Penrose	Swanson
Dillingham	Kenyon	Pittman	Thompson
Fernald	Knox	Pomerene	Vardaman
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Gerry	McCumber	Reed	Walsh
Gore	McLean	Shafroth	Williams
Gronna	McNary	Sheppard	Wolcott
Hale	Martin	Sherman
Hollis	Myers	Smith, Ariz.
Husting	Nelson	Smith, Ga.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I desire to announce that my colleague, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], is necessarily absent on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. THOMPSON. The junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] is necessarily absent on business of the Senate.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce the absence on public business of the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. I wish also to announce the absence of the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] on official business.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I desire to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is absent on important business. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. HOLLIS. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] is detained on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

SELECTIVE-DRAFT REGISTRATION.

Mr. CALDER. I ask permission of the Senate to have inserted in the RECORD a table by States showing the registration for the selective draft, the number of aliens and enemy aliens of military age, and the percentage of aliens as compared to the total registration.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I dislike to object, but there will be other Senators who will want to have morning business transacted, and I feel constrained to object until we get rid of the pending bill.

Mr. CALDER. If the Senator will pardon me, I only ask that this table may be printed in the RECORD. I do not desire to discuss it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I shall not object to that, but any other request I shall have to object to.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Total registration, aliens, and alien enemies.

United States.	Total registration.	Aliens.	Alien enemies.	Per cent of aliens.
Alabama	179,828	1,173	59	.7
Arizona	36,932	14,652	193	40.0
Arkansas	147,527	566	98	.4
California	297,532	67,464	2,948	24.1
Colorado	83,038	9,027	272	11.0
Connecticut	159,761	18,519	1,126	12.0
Delaware	21,864	2,883	92	13.1
District of Columbia	32,327	1,570	79	.5
Florida	84,683	6,582	208	7.8
Georgia	231,418	1,224	120	.5
Idaho	41,150	3,883	181	9.8
Illinois	672,498	95,145	6,051	15.0
Indiana	255,145	13,651	1,149	5.8
Iowa	216,594	11,788	1,865	6.0
Kansas	150,029	6,358	311	4.5
Kentucky	187,573
Louisiana	157,827	2,966	216	2.8
Maine	60,176	10,043	120	16.8
Maryland	120,453	7,387	912	6.8
Massachusetts	359,323	106,014	1,508	29.7
Michigan	372,872	69,282	3,021	19.0
Minnesota	221,747	24,599	1,971	11.0
Mississippi	139,525	567	45	.4
Missouri	299,825	10,992	1,008	4.0
Montana	88,273	11,790	687	14.0
Nebraska	118,123	5,044	1,154	.5
Nevada	11,894	3,670	87	31.0
New Hampshire	37,643	9,597	79	25.0
New Jersey	302,742	77,372	4,956	27.0
New Mexico	32,202	4,324	108	13.0
New York	1,060,693	233,909	14,807	24.0
North Carolina	200,032	560	78	.3
North Dakota	65,007	7,705	615	12.0
Ohio	565,384	82,108	6,180	15.0
Oklahoma	169,211	2,947	219	1.8
Oregon	62,618	6,131	577	10.7
Pennsylvania	830,507	174,898	12,674	22.6
Rhode Island	53,458	15,043	126	28.0
South Carolina	128,039	447	58	.3
South Dakota	58,011	2,606	484	5.0
Tennessee	187,611	1,030	85	.5
Texas	408,702	26,029	1,834	6.8
Utah	41,952	7,145	344	17.0
Vermont	27,658	3,487	72	12.8
Virginia	181,823	2,575	179	1.5
Washington	108,330	16,001	791	15.5
West Virginia	127,409	10,678	1,008	9.0
Wisconsin	240,170	25,588	23,121	11.7
Wyoming	22,848	3,353	321	15.0
Alaska
Indians	6,001
National parks	85	4	2	7.0
Total	9,666,078

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator from New York introduced a bill, if I remember correctly, some two weeks ago seeking to remedy injustices in the registration. I should like to ask the Senator if there has been any committee meeting on that bill, and whether there is any possibility of an early report upon it. It seems to me that it is a very important matter.

Mr. CALDER. I introduced a bill two weeks ago which, in effect, would have placed the draft on the citizen registration. That bill is pending in the Committee on Military Affairs. It has not yet been reported from the committee.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I insist on the regular order.

CONSERVATION OF FOOD AND FUEL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4961) to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19 strike out lines 14 to 25, and on page 20 strike out lines 1 to 19, and insert section 13 in the following words:

SEC. 13. That the President is authorized and directed to commandeer any or all distilled spirits in bond at the date of the approval of this act for redistillation, in so far as such redistillation may be necessary to meet the requirements of the Government in the manufacture of munitions and other military and hospital supplies, or in so far as such redistillation would dispense with the necessity of utilizing products and materials suitable for foods and feeds in the future manufacture of distilled spirits for the purposes herein enumerated. The President shall determine and pay a just compensation for the distilled spirits so commandeered; and if the compensation so determined be not satisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same, such person shall be paid 75 per cent of the amount so determined by the President and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as, added to said 75 per cent, will make up such amount as will be just compensation for such spirits, in the manner provided by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 15, to change the number of the section from "16" to "14."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 18, to change the number of the section from "17" to "15."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 24, to change the number of the section from "18" to "16," and on page 22, line 6, after the word "essential," to strike out: "Provided, That all persons, excepting persons serving without compensation, shall be appointed in accordance with the provisions of the civil-service act of January 16, 1883," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 16. That the sum of $2,500,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be available until June 30, 1918, for the payment of such rent, the expense, including postage, of such printing and publications, the purchase of such material and equipment, and the employment of such persons and means, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, as the President may deem essential

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Oregon why this large sum of money is required. Is it simply for office expenses and the employment of bureau officers? There is no bureau in the Government that costs anything like we are appropriating here. It says "purchase of material and equipment." What equipment? Is it to build a house or something of that kind? I should like to know how this sum of money—$2,500,000—was arrived at. What is it for?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is to cover the cost of administration as estimated by those having the food control in charge.

Mr. OVERMAN. It seems to me to be a very large amount of money for the purposes specified. There is not a bureau in the Government which costs anything like this amount of money. If it is simply for bureau expenses, it seems to me that it is enormous. Take the great Agricultural Department and the War Department and the Navy Department, the expenses of administration do not cost anything like this sum.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think it will be found that it will be the largest establishment of the Government.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think so myself.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If we want to make it a success.

Mr. OVERMAN. I would like to know how this sum of money was arrived at.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to say to the Senator from North Carolina that while the committee have not gone into details, I, as one of the members of the committee, am sure that this amount will be required. We can not compare the appropriations for this bureau with the Agricultural Department. Take the product of wheat alone, the Senator will realize the immense amount of money that will be required and the force that will be necessary to take care of that product alone.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is just what I am talking about. This does not provide for any purchases, but it is a direct appropriation.

Mr. GRONNA. It is not for purchases, but for running expenses.

Mr. OVERMAN. What is this appropriation of $2,500,000 for?

Mr. GRONNA. It is to pay the expenses of this force. I do not think it is any too large. If anything it is too small. I am quite sure of that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Are these appointments to be made from the civil service or are they appointments that may be made entirely at the discretion of the head of this bureau?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They do not come under the civil service.

Mr. OVERMAN. Anyone can see that they ought not to come under the civil service. It would be impossible to get them in that way.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does that mean that better service can be obtained without going through the ordinary usual custom of a civil-service examination?

Mr. GRONNA. If I may be permitted to answer the Senator from Michigan, I do not think these men ought to be placed under the civil service. These are men who will be appointed, and their services will be only temporary. If we place them under the civil service we must keep them. The service of these men will be required only during the war.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it the opinion of the Senator that efficient men can be obtained without going to the Civil Service Bureau for them?

Mr. GRONNA. It is my opinion that for this particular work we can find men as capable of doing the work as those under the civil service, and perhaps more so.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. According to the statement of the Senator this is to be the largest bureau that is to administer the affairs of the Government.

Mr. GRONNA. It is.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Larger than the War Department, larger than the Treasury Department, with all the extraordinary demands that are to be made upon them.

Mr. GRONNA. I think it will be larger, and more money will be required.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That being true, why leave it outside of the civil service entirely? Are you hopeful that you can obtain the services of competent people without subjecting them to the delay of an examination and the test which the civil service requires?

Mr. GRONNA. It was the opinion of the committee, and I think the committee was unanimous—if I am mistaken I trust the Senator in charge of the bill will correct me—I think it was the unanimous opinion of the committee that these men should not be placed under the civil service; that the President of the United States should be left unhampered in this work; that he should be allowed to select his men and those men appointed by the President should be allowed to select their subordinates.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Of course, the Senator knows the President will have very few appointments to make under this provision. They probably will be made by the head of this department, whoever he happens to be.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not think there will be only one man. I think it will be a board; at least I hope it will.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If they are unhampered by a tenure of office and by civil-service rules these men may be employed in the discretion of the head of this department and may be discharged whenever in his opinion they are not doing the work that is required or are not necessary.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In that respect, I presume the Senator contends that the public service is being administered with more judgment than if hampered by established law?

Mr. GRONNA. I do not know; I would not make that statement, but may I ask the Senator this question? Does the Senator think it would be wise for the Government to agree to keep on the pay roll the several thousand men who will now be required just for a short time, which is during the war?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have never been an ardent advocate of the civil-service laws. I would rather trust to the sound judgment of men of intelligence and experience in the selection of such subordinates as may be needed in this emergency than I would any bureau. I think the Government is tremendously hampered to-day by the civil-service laws. I think there is more favoritism to-day in the departments of the Government under civil service than there has ever been under the spoils system. I do not think the public service is as efficient in all respects as it ought to be, as it was before the civil-service laws became effective.

Furthermore, I do not believe that promotions are made upon merit. Under the civil-service law I think the rankest favoritism prevails. It is almost impossible to reach an incompetent—I was going to say "noncompetent," but it is almost impossible to reach an incompetent—official under the civil-service law. Even heads of departments find it difficult and often unsatisfactory to conduct public business with such a restriction.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Am I trespassing upon the Senator's time?

Mr. OVERMAN. What the Senator says is very interesting, and I did yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I thought the Senator had yielded the floor.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; but the Senator is very interesting in what he is saying.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I apologize to the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator and I have discussed this matter before, and I agree with much that he has said.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Almost everyone agrees with the position which the Senator from North Carolina and a few other Senators hold upon this question, but we are continually giving this system greater power. These appointees have no direct responsibility to the public, and I assert that they do not do better work than will be done by employees of the Government who are selected with care by the heads of departments.

Mr. OVERMAN. Right along that line I desire to say that we passed a bill here called the narcotic-drugs bill, under the provisions of which certain experts were appointed, and they performed faithful service. There has since been a law passed requiring that appointments under that service shall be made by the Civil Service Commission. They now have a civil-service examination for such employees, and men who have now been performing faithful service for two years, because they can not answer some geographical question and work out certain problems in mathematics are all to go out, and in their stead are to be put some young boys from college, pharmacists, who are able to stand the examination and to work out problems in mathematics, or to state where some town is located in Egypt. They get the highest marks in the examination, while these experts will have to go out. That is the result of the civil-service examination. However, I am not going into that, Mr. President.

All I want to say is that I notice $150,000,000 is provided to be appropriated here in one section, and it seems to me that the figures ought to be transposed—that the appropriation of $2,500,000 ought to be in section 17, and the appropriation of $150,000,000 should be for the bureau expenses. If, however, Senators on the committee have thoroughly investigated the matter and have ascertained how this money is to be spent, and it is absolutely necessary, I shall have no more to say; but to appropriate $2,500,000 in a lump sum just simply for a bureau here in Washington, seems to be an enormous appropriation. If, however, the committee have examined the matter in detail, and say this department is to cost more than other departments in Washington, including the great Treasury Department and the War Department, I shall have nothing more to say. All I want to know is if the committee have investigated the matter, or if somebody has merely said that this will take $2,500,000.

It seems to me that there ought to be some amendment here providing that Congress should be informed of what will be done with this money. In all these great appropriations we always require the heads of departments to make to Congress a detailed statement of the moneys expended. I hope the Senator from Oregon will offer an amendment of that sort, in order that we may keep track of how this money is being spent, where it goes. Congress ought to keep in touch with the matter, and know how the money is expended. We require that of all other bureaus of this Government and why should we not do the same as to this one under this lump-sum appropriation, a form of appropriation which I have always fought. I see it is important in this case, for as a new bureau is created, it is necessary that they should have a lump-sum appropriation, but lump-sum appropriations are dangerous, since the heads of departments are inclined to fix extravagant salaries. Congress adopted the policy some five or six years ago that we would not appropriate lump sums. The practice of the Government formerly was to make lump-sum appropriations, and when a man was getting a thousand dollar or two thousand dollar salary, he would be transferred to some other department and given $4,000 or $5,000 out of a lump sum, for under that system the head of a department can expend any amount of money he desires for the salary of anybody he pleases.

However, I repeat, if the committee has examined into the matter and says that it will require $2,500,000, the responsibility is with them; but I think some detailed statement ought to be made as to how the money is expended.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the evil that follows a lump-sum appropriation has been well stated by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. It is less than a year since we found from the last lump-sum appropriation made for a certain bureau of this Government salaries sometimes as high as 300 per cent greater than the other bureaus or divisions of our Government were being paid for similar work where a direct appropriation was made to pay the same class of labor. I do not believe that we ought to make a lump-sum appropriation in this case without some kind of a statement as to what it is to be used for. There is here proposed an appropriation of $2,500,000, to be expended in any way that the head of the bureau may desire.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to propose it, I have an amendment to that section and the following section, which meets the suggestion he is now making.

Mr. SMOOT. I will withhold further remarks, Mr. President, until the amendments referred to by the Senator from Oregon may be offered.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Then, Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to agreeing to the amendment striking out the proviso?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. I do not want to agree to striking out the proviso at this particular time. I should like to know what are the amendments to be proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, which I think meets the suggestion of the Senator from Utah, and probably covers ground which has not been suggested at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 22, at the end of line 16, it is proposed to add the following:

The appropriations specified in this section and in section 16 of this act——

Mr. SMOOT. Is the Secretary reading from the old print of the bill or the new print?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary can never use anything save the original print.

Mr. SMOOT. I am aware of that, Mr. President.

The SECRETARY. On page 22, at the end of line 16, it is proposed to add the following:

The appropriations specified in this section and in section 16 of this act shall be immediately available, and shall be paid out on the order of the President or on the order of such officer or officers as may be designated by him for that purpose, which order of the President or of such officer shall be conclusive and binding upon all departments and the accounting officers of the Government as to the correctness of said accounts and disbursements.

In order to provide for necessary office accommodations and facilities for the use of any agency or agencies which may be created or used by the President in carrying into effect the provisions of this act, the President may, in his discretion, cause to be constructed a temporary office building or buildings upon any lands owned by the United States or within the District of Columbia, not required for other governmental uses, and which may be designated by him or he may lease ground from private owners and construct such temporary office building or buildings thereon. For these purposes the President may utilize and expend so much of said appropriation as may be necessary, not exceeding the sum of $200,000.

It is also proposed to amend section 17, page 22, by inserting after the word "section," in line 16——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the second amendment comes in after the one just read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the first amendment, it is proposed to add the following:

And provided further, That itemized statements covering all purchases and disbursements under this and the preceding section shall be filed with the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives on or before the 10th day of each month after the taking effect of this act, covering the business of the preceding month, and said statements shall be subject to public inspection.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to inquire——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Just a moment. Let me perfect that amendment by striking out the portion providing for leasing the property. The committee thought that the Government owned enough property in the District of Columbia upon which to erect these temporary office buildings without leasing.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah has the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I see the Senator has offered the amendment I suggested about requiring detailed statements, but I want to ask the Senator a question. The amendment seems to confer general authority to erect a building anywhere in Washington. I do not imagine the President would want to utilize any portion of the Capitol grounds, but I assume from the general language of the amendment that it would include the Capitol grounds.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I presume it covers any property that is owned by the Government, but I imagine the President would not permit buildings to be erected anywhere where they would mar the beauty of the city and its public grounds generally.

Mr. SMOOT. So far as the first part of the amendment is concerned, Mr. President, I sincerely hope the Senate of the United States will not adopt it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make an inquiry before he enters into an argument?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. Has the amendment that is now offered been before the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED. And passed by them?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It has been.

Mr. REED. Now let me make a further inquiry. Is not the Committee on Agriculture in session now considering changing this bill?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is considering a substitute which was offered for the bill by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] yesterday.

Mr. REED. If the Senator from Utah will pardon me, what is the use of Senators considering this bill when it is well known that the committee is considering a substitute for it? Now, we have a most peculiar situation about this whole bill. A bill was introduced into the Senate and we considered that bill a while, well knowing that the House was considering a similar bill and would send it over in a few days. Nevertheless, in hot haste we were required to proceed to the consideration of the Senate bill, and after having considered that bill for a while the House bill arrived in the Senate; and then the committee were assembled in hot haste, and, without any proper consideration whatever of that bill—and I make the charge broadly and flatly—they hurried it back to the Senate, and it was substituted for the Senate bill—a bill different from the Senate bill in many respects. So that the primary discussion of the bill was to some extent lost.

We have been treated to the spectacle ever since the House bill came in of the committee bringing in amendments day after day of the most radical character. Instead of bringing us a bill that was completed, or substantially completed, they brought us a bill that they are continually asking us to change, and now we are going on this morning to consider that bill and this patchwork which has been brought in by the committee, and at the time we are considering those questions the Agricultural Committee is considering a substitute for the entire bill. Information, which I do not undertake to say is accurate, but which comes to me, is that the committee are very likely to bring in a substitute. Now, where do we get with that sort of procedure? It is unusual. I think we ought to know what we are going to have brought in by the committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. REED. The Senator from Utah has the floor.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator from Utah will yield to me, I think it is well to discuss this matter in the Senate now while we are considering it. The reason I brought up this matter as to where this building should be erected was that, while I have no doubt the President would not allow a building to be erected in the Capitol grounds proper, I have heard that somebody has selected one of the squares in the vicinity of the Capitol the buildings on which have been torn down and which it is intended to beautify and make part of the Capitol grounds. Those squares are not now really a part of the Capitol grounds proper, but it is intended that they shall be. I doubt whether we ought to mar these squares around the Capitol, for example, the one next to the Senate Office Building, or any of the others, with a temporary building. I think it would be unwise to do so.

I merely wanted to make these remarks. Probably the Senator knows of other ground that may be selected, but the rumor I have heard is that they propose to erect a building near the Capitol, the building to cost something in the neighborhood of $150,000, which, of course, will be no more than a temporary structure. I should dislike to see the Capitol grounds—perhaps I should not say the Capitol grounds, for the President would not allow that, of course, but what is intended to become a part of the Capitol grounds—marred by the erection of a temporary structure. It was the intention originally, when the additional squares were acquired, to beautify them and make them a part, as I have said, of the Capitol grounds. In view of these facts I thought it advisable to call the attention of the Senate to the matter, so that it may be examined. I am not going to offer an amendment, but it seems to me that we ought not to have any such temporary structure erected in the immediate vicinity of the Capitol.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. KNOX. I was very much interested, Mr. President, in the information developed by the question of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] that another bill is in the course of preparation, to be substituted for the bill which is now before the Senate. It seems to me this puts us in the rather ridiculous position of discussing a bill here which is probably to be abandoned and another bill substituted in its place. My judgment would be that the Senate should proceed to the transaction of some business that is likely to stick, rather than to discuss a measure that is likely to be replaced in the next few hours by some other measure.

I do not know where the Senator from Missouri got his information. I read in the newspapers that such a program was pending, but had heard nothing from it otherwise. Now, I want to make my own personal protest against the Senate solemnly meeting here and discussing matters that will amount to nothing. We are not a moot court, and it seems to me that the wise Senators are the Senators who stay away under the circumstances.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, Mr. President, I will proceed.

The first part of the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon should not, in my opinion, be adopted by the Senate. The bill is temporary, and as soon as the war is over this whole bureau will go out of existence. Why, then, should we now appropriate $200,000 for the purpose of erecting a temporary building for this bureau when we know that it will not be used very long. It will be a waste of money.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator knows that we have $3,000,000 worth of buildings here in this city that are absolutely unoccupied, except, perhaps, Poli's Theater. That property can be turned over—that whole hotel building there, all those buildings on the square opposite the Willard Hotel. One of the buildings there was once a great wholesale grocery store, and in the case of both of those great squares that are now owned by the Government the buildings are absolutely unoccupied, except such as are rented temporarily. Then here is the Maltby Building, and there are other buildings that might be occupied.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Committee on Public Buildings that was appointed at the last session of Congress has not made a complete examination and report as to the buildings owned by the Government in the District of Columbia, but it has made a report sufficient to demonstrate that there is ample space in different buildings owned by the Government to-day for every person that will be employed under this bill to have ample office room without costing the Government one-tenth part of what is asked here for an appropriation to put up a temporary building.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will my colleague permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to my colleague.

Mr. KING. I was down at the new Interior Department Building a short time ago, and ascertained that Mr. Hoover was about to have quarters assigned to him there. I found a large number of persons employed there, and was advised—that was my observation, too—that there was ample room in that building for these quarters or for any offices that Mr. Hoover and his associates might require.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. The statement of the Senator from North Carolina is interesting, and it may be a solution of this problem; but the report was made to the Agricultural Committee that a search for rooms had been made all over this District, and that it was an impossibility to rent anything; that other departments of the Government, particularly the Army and the Navy, had had their agents out all over the District and in the adjoining towns and villages near here, and had rented every available space; that it was an impossibility to house this new bureau, or department, or whatever it may be called, in the District of Columbia.

I presume we are all aware that the Government owns the property mentioned by the Senator from North Carolina. There is certainly lots of room there. It is possible, however, that the Government leased the property several years ago, when they first got it. They have had it for five or six years. They may have leased it. I do not know what the facts are; but the report at least came to the committee that it was an impossibility to get any place to house these people.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the Senator, I wish to say that the lease upon the whole block of buildings opposite the Willard Hotel can be terminated any day.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, then, I think they ought to terminate it.

Mr. SMOOT. The complaints that have been made to the Committee on Appropriations when asking for new quarters are somewhat as follows: "We can not rent buildings like all of the other departments are now occupying"; or, in other words, they want a building like the State, War, and Navy Building. They want a new building with modern offices and the finest furniture.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, well, it is not contemplated to build such a building with this money. It will be just a frame, one-story building, likely.

Mr. SMOOT. But it will be a waste of money.

Mr. NORRIS. It is a waste of money if there is any place where they can get quarters; but if there is not any place, something has to be done.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator, that the Census Building, that our Census Bureau was in for years and years, and until we built a new building for the Department of Labor, is at present unoccupied.

Mr. NORRIS. It is vacant now, is it?

Mr. SMOOT. It is vacant now, and there are other vacant buildings all over the city. They are not as good as the other departments have, however, and that is why a new building is wanted.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, certainly that building is good enough—I concede that—if it could be had at any reasonable price.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, in addition to the buildings across from the Willard Hotel, I understand that the Maltby Building is only partially occupied.

Mr. LODGE. That is an unsafe building.

Mr. NORRIS. They investigated the Maltby Building, and I remember inquiry was made——

Mr. LODGE. That building has been unsafe for years. They had to take books out of it on account of the weight, when we occupied it.

Mr. NORRIS. The House of Representatives used it for offices prior to the completion of the House Office Building, after the last census, when the membership of the House was increased.

Mr. SMOOT. For instance, we have the buildings that the Bureau of Engraving and Printing moved out of. Those buildings could be fixed up for a tithe of the appropriation asked for.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to confirm the statement of the Senator from Nebraska. Mr. Hoover and those associated with him appeared before the committee and said that they had been all over this town to try to find buildings that would accommodate them, either buildings that the Government now owns or buildings that were subject to rent, but that they could not get along without a temporary building.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that the buildings that the Census Bureau was in is empty, and they certainly will not have any more employees in this bureau than they had in the Census Bureau. I have no doubt that that building could be rented, and save the greater part of this appropriation.

The bill itself provides, in section 16, for the payment of rent necessary for this bureau, and I think that is the wise thing to do—to rent quarters for a year, say, and perhaps it will not be needed longer than that—rather than to go to work and put up a temporary building and have that building destroyed as soon as the war ceases.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me right there, when the bill was originally drawn and reported to the Senate that was the theory of the committee. I think that is still their theory. But these people representing the administration presented to the committee the proposition that it was going to be an impossibility to rent anything. Of course, if that is true, some provision ought to be made to house these employees. There will be a large number of them and they will have to be housed here, unless we move the bureau to some other city than Washington. They represented to the committee that investigation had been made not only by them but by the War and Navy Departments as well, and that every vacant room in the District of Columbia that could be rented was rented.

It was on that information that the committee acted and reported this amendment. Now, if the committee were misinformed, nobody would be better pleased than the members of the committee themselves to have the mistake rectified. If these gentlemen misrepresented the facts to the committee, they certainly do not want to build a temporary building. They are anxious, if they can, to rent the needed offices for these temporary purposes, and not go to the extraordinary expense of building a building. They do not want to build except as a last resort.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator, as a member of the committee, if he does not think that if the buildings on the square opposite the Willard Hotel, beginning with the hotel proper upon that corner, are available for this bureau, it would be wise for the Government of the United States to set that property aside for that purpose?

Mr. NORRIS. Most assuredly. I have no hesitancy in saying that.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I want to say to the Senator now that that can be done.

Mr. NORRIS. Then it ought to be done. There is not any doubt about it.

Mr. SMOOT. And for that reason I am opposed to this amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. If that can be done, it ought to be done. I would suggest to the Senator from Oregon that he pass this amendment over, and not dispose of it now, so as to let the chairman investigate and see what the facts are.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the second part of the amendment, I think, is a wise one, and ought to be adopted. It simply asks for an itemized statement covering all purchases and disbursements under this and the preceding section; that is, sections 16 and 17. The language is:

And provided further, That itemized statements covering all purchases and disbursements under this and the preceding section shall be filed with the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives on or before the 10th day of each month after the taking effect of this act, covering the business of the preceding month, and said statements shall be subject to public inspection.

That is the ordinary provision that has been placed in all lump-sum appropriations.

Now, Mr. President, I hope that the amendment which the committee has recommended striking out—

Provided, That all persons, excepting persons serving without compensation, shall be appointed in accordance with the provisions of the civil-service act of January 16, 1883—will not be agreed to. I think that if we are going to have a civil-service law, as long as it remains upon the statute books, it ought to be adhered to. If the Congress of the United States decides that that is not the best way to secure employees for the Government, let us repeal the law.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Surely.

Mr. SMOOT. But as long as the law is as it is, whenever there is $150,000,000 to be expended and whenever there is $2,500,000 to be expended in the employment of people by the Government of the United States, that law should apply. It ought to apply particularly under the conditions existing today. If these employees are to be selected under the civil-service law, then we will know what they are going to be paid for the class of work they perform. If they are clerks of class 1, of class 2, of class 3, or of class 4, if they are laborers or mechanics or skilled laborers or watchmen or whatever positions they may take examinations for, we will know just exactly the wage they are to receive. Without this provision they can receive anything that the head of the department may determine to give them.

As I said before, in the case of the last bureau that we created and for which we appropriated a lump sum of $450,000 no provision at all was made for an itemized statement of the salaries; but when the Committee on Appropriations asked for a statement as to the wages that were being paid they found, in some cases, as I say, that the bureau was paying more than twice the amount that was paid for the same work in other departments of the Government. Not only that, but the Senator from North Carolina referred to the fact that the bureau referred to had taken employees from other departments of our Government, paying them not the wage they were receiving, but sometimes twice as much for similar work.

Therefore, Mr. President, we ought to have a provision here that all of these employees shall be under the civil service, or else we ought to abolish the civil-service law altogether.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, when this bill was before the House of Representatives it had in it the provision that all persons, except persons serving without compensation, should be appointed in accordance with the provisions of the civil-service act of January 16, 1883. The committee struck that out because it would lead to the employment of a large number of men who would be on the permanent civil-service roll. There are not enough men who have stood the examination and are now on the classified register to fill the requirements of this act; and the committee thought it ought to be stricken out because the employment was entirely temporary, and therefore there was no use in getting permanent employees on this roll, thereby increasing the expenditures of the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me there, on this one point?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. When they go on the civil-service roll, that does not mean that the Government of the United States has got to continue their employment when not needed. It means that they are employed under this appropriation, and as soon as the work is over they still remain on the rolls under the law for a year; and I think they are entitled to that. I think that as long as they have passed the civil-service examination they ought to have the right to be employed by the Government of the United States, where they are needed, before anyone else who later takes the civil-service examination.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. But when these persons once go into the employ of the Government, whether men or women, the Senator knows what their insistence is when their term of employment has expired. The committee did not want that condition to exist, and therefore we struck out the civil-service part of it.

I am greatly in sympathy, Mr. President, with the views of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] on this question, and feel that it would not do very much harm to repeal the whole civil-service act, because it does not work with justice and equity among those who are in the employ of the Government.

One other thing, Mr. President: The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is disposed to criticize the action of the committee in keeping this bill before the Senate because the committee has been from time to time making suggestions of amendments, and because the committee is now in session in the hope that some of these conflicting provisions may be reconciled. As the Senator in charge of this bill, permit me to say that there is only one bill pending before the Senate. It is true that this committee, like other committees, has been engaged in undertaking to amend the bill from time to time, to meet objections made from time to time on the floor of the Senate. The opponents of this bill seem to be hard to satisfy. They have insisted upon amendments being offered here from time to time, and then, when those amendments are suggested, they object to the amendments that are made.

Efforts have been made from time to time to have this bill referred to the committee. I have never approved entirely of that. I think this bill ought to be put in shape by the Senate itself, rather than having efforts made to refer it back to the committee, because the committee is divided upon the fundamentals of this bill just exactly as the individual Members of the Senate are divided upon it.

When the proposition was made yesterday to have the committee meet and confer about this bill again, it was communicated to me. I had no objection to their meeting, but I objected to referring the bill back. I have not any idea that the committee will agree now upon the fundamentals of this bill. They may be able to do it, and in the hope that they may be able to do it they are discussing this morning the substitute bill proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. Whether or not they will agree on that, I do not know; but I want to say to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] that there is only one bill before the Senate. There may not be any other. The arguments that are being had now are on provisions which would be in any bill which might be presented to the Senate, and the very matter which is being discussed now I think is in the proposed substitute of the Senater from Oklahoma; so that the discussions are not wasted.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is on the Appropriations Committee. Does he not believe it would be wise to form a subcommittee to examine into all those buildings in the blocks opposite the Willard Hotel, together with the Maltby Building over here, and see whether, by the appropriation of a certain amount of money, those buildings could not be put in the necessary condition for this bureau, and save this Government, if possible, this amount of money? Of course $200,000 does not amount to much nowadays, but still I think it might be a good plan, if we could, to save it. It would be that much saved, anyway.

Here are these buildings unoccupied on the most important corner in Washington. With a little expenditure of money they could be made useful for any department of this Government. They are not built of Indiana sandstone; they are not built of marble; but that great hotel and the great Cornwell Building are well built. If a subcommittee could be appointed to investigate the matter, then, if the conditions are such that they can not be occupied, of course everybody would be in favor of giving these people new buildings. We can utilize those buildings. The question comes up here at every session, and I must say without the Senate giving it consideration. It seems to me we should save this money. Those buildings could be put in a condition by a small expenditure of money, and it would save this outlay of $200,000.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator from North Carolina is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and he has heard the question of the lack of accommodations for the Government offices discussed time and time again before that committee. We are paying now, if I recollect aright, something like $400,000 a year for rent.

Mr. OVERMAN. Eight hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. We are paying $800,000 in rent. The gentlemen who appeared before the committee stated it would be cheaper to expend $200,000 in temporary buildings than to have to rent buildings that would accommodate this bureau.

I wish to say again that there is no assurance that in the discussion of any bill before the committee any agreement would be reached, so that in the last analysis the bill which is now pending before the Senate is a bill which will have to be gotten into shape. I have been opposed all the time to referring the bill back to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Let me ask the Senator from Oregon what this appropriation of $150,000,000 is to be used for?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is to be used under either this bill or any substitute that has been proposed for the purchase of grain and other commodities.

Mr. OVERMAN. The item we are considering in section 16 appropriates $2,500,000.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator from Michigan asked me about the appropriation of $150,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I asked particularly about the appropriation of $150,000,000. It seems to me that that vests very great discretionary power. The only limitation on it is that it shall not be expended for the purposes described in the preceding section. If that is the only limitation on the use of the $150,000,000 by some head of a department not already created, it seems to me it is a very loose way of doing public business.

I think there should be an amendment made to section 16 that none of the moneys hereby appropriated shall be used in the construction or equipment of any building, temporary or permanent, in the District of Columbia, and I think that the use of the appropriation of $150,000,000 provided for in the other section ought to be restricted. It is perfectly absurd to pass that amount of money here.

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I ask the able Senator from Michigan if there is any restriction upon the appropriation or anything else in the provisions of this bill? It seems to me that it is too great a discretion to be left to the administration. Really it is so far-reaching in its consequences that I doubt the wisdom of vesting such discretion in any one man. I should like to have information as to the basis of the calculation for the $2,500,000 to be used for office expenses. I should like also the basis or the facts upon which the President bases the recommendation for an appropriation of $150,000,000 to be used by the food dictator. Does the Senator know whether there is such a basis or statement of facts?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There is none.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The fact is we are spending public money like a drunken pirate. Any department can ask for an appropriation for any amount and it is voted without a word of protest. We are spending so lavishly funds wrung from the toilers of this country by taxation and the sale of bonds that this sum is merely a lagniappe—a tip to the waiter.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The truth is that there is no estimate. The appropriation of $150,000,000 here and $150,000,000 there prompts me to say——

Mr. SMOOT rose.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator from Utah will pause for a moment, I have read this bill through from one end to the other, and I do not think the bill now under consideration is comparable to the bill which the Senate has already passed and which is now in conference. I can not understand for the life of me why that conference committee does not proceed with the bill, making it a crime to corner food products at a time like this, fixing certain limitations and restrictions upon the right of storage and otherwise protecting the public from gambling in foodstuffs, which that bill so successfully does. I refer to House bill 4188. It is the bill with which the public is concerned. I think the public have gotten the wrong impression about the bill now pending before the Senate. The bill they are interested in most is the bill which will prevent gambling in foodstuffs and cornering them for the purpose of raising the price.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I understand that the Senate passed that bill more than a month ago.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It was passed more than a month ago, as the Senator from Mississippi says, and was passed without a roll call and with practical unanimity, and yet it never went to conference until a week ago, and only two conferences have been held. I do not understand why a bill so wholesome as that, calculated to restrain the rapacity and the greed of people who have made a business of speculating in foodstuffs, can not be brought forward from the conference committee. It is a most wholesome bill. If that bill were now pending and we were drifting along as we are drifting with the present bill, if the Senate were drifting along with that bill unacted upon and the unfinished business before this body, the Senate would be properly the subject of severe criticism. It is a bill which will save the people from the difficulties under which we now labor. It will prevent gambling in foodstuffs. It will prevent their undue storage. It will prevent an attempt to inflate values by securing the product by a deliberate plan. The bill has been passed, and it only awaits the action of the conferees. I can not understand why this bill is not brought back here.

Mr. REED. Does not the Senator know why it has not been acted on?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; I do not know. I know the Senator from Missouri has been very much interested in that bill, as I have been and as other Senators have been, and we have in one way and another exchanged views about it here in an indefinite sort of way, but I do not understand why it has not been passed.

Mr. REED. I think I can tell the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to know.

Mr. REED. It was stated here on the floor three or four times. Perhaps the Senator was not present.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; I have been present every minute. I have heard everything going on.

Mr. REED. It has been held up by friends of this bill, because it was thought if that bill, the one the Senator has referred to, were allowed to become a law, it might be soundly urged that it was unnecessary to pass this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think the Senator is entirely correct. I was suspicious that that was true.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let me interrupt the Senator a moment. I am not on the conference committee, but I think the Senator from Missouri ought to modify the statement he makes as to friends of the bill. I understand now that some of the friends of the pending bill who are on the conference committee have been trying their best to get it out of conference.

Mr. REED. I did not say all the friends of this bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator said the friends, without qualification.

Mr. REED. I should have said by friends of this bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is all right.

Mr. REED. And some of them are pretty high up.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is true.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The bill which passed the Senate makes it a criminal offense to do the very things about which the country is so much disturbed. The bill says, on page 12:

> If at any time during the pendency of the existing war between the United States and the German Empire the President of the United States shall find that such dealings in futures, in or about any grain exchange, unduly, or unreasonably, raise or enhance the price of wheat or other food cereals, to the injury of the people of the United States, he may at once request the traders in such exchange to discontinue for a time specified by him all dealings in futures.

This is such a pertinent and wholesome and helpful and necessary piece of legislation that some pressure ought to be brought to bear upon the Senate conferees to see if we can not get action upon the bill. If the word "fuel" was stricken out of the pending bill and added to the bill that has already passed the Senate, the bill now lying upon our tables as the unfinished business would not be necessary at all. It would reach the very difficulties which we complain of. If that bill is being deliberately held up for the purpose of whipping Senators into line for the creation of a new department over which any individual may be asked to preside, I think it is time the Senate displayed its independence and its patriotism by stopping such a proceeding as that.

I want to see the bill now in conference reported back, and if our conferees are unable to make any headway I would be in favor of discharging them and appointing other conferees in their places.

Mr. REED. I do not think the trouble is with our conferees. The trouble, I think, is with the House conferees. I think they are acting under instructions, but not instructions from the House.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, it is a very unfortunate situation that a bill as necessary, which passed the Senate unanimously and without a roll call, can not be brought back here for final action.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I have not taken up five minutes on the floor of the Senate to discuss the bill under consideration, but I believe the causes which are holding the bill up, referred to by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], are identical to those which are delaying this bill, which has now been before this body since the middle of June. I see by this morning's paper that the President is very much dissatisfied with the action of this body yesterday in putting off a final vote upon this bill until the 21st.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARDWICK in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I do.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator indicate the dispatch or article in the newspaper which describes the displeasure of the President with the Senate?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It was the letter I referred to published this morning.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I understood that was Mr. Hoover's displeasure.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, the bill before the Senate is an administration bill, as I understand, and I believe the Senator from New York knows as well as everyone knows that it has the approval of the President of the United States. This measure was introduced in the Senate on the 15th of June and reported out from the committee on the 16th of June. A bill similar to the Senate measure passed the House nearly three weeks ago, and every Member of the Senate has had ample opportunity to become thoroughly familiar with its provisions.

I am not able myself to understand why a body of men like the United States Senate can not determine in a month whether they desire to vote for a bill or whether they desire to vote against it.

We have been told that this bill was not in the proper form, and from that day those opposing it began to beat the tom-tom. They commenced to fight shadows and raise constitutional questions. I am not going to discuss that phase of it, because I am not a lawyer. I will say, however, that the greatest surprise of my life was when the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] defined the difference between the Federal Constitution and State constitutions. If I remember his explanation, it was to the effect that each State has all the powers of government not prohibited in its constitution or surrender to the Federal Government, but that the Federal Government has only the powers that are expressly granted to it in its Constitution.

If I am mistaken in this in a general way, I should like to be corrected.

The only comment I desire to make is that, as I view it as an ordinary layman, both State and Federal constitutions come from the people, and it is a peculiar thing, to my mind, without any knowledge on the subject, that State constitutions lead in one direction and the Federal Constitution leads directly opposite. But I am not going to discuss that, because I am not capable of doing so intelligently.

The claim has been set up that the bill before the Senate would demoralize business. I ask the question: What business?

If it demoralizes the business of the food speculators, many of whom ought at this time to be in the penitentiary and should have been there long ago, then I say let us demoralize it.

I myself do a good deal of farming. I am a producer. Perhaps no one in this body produces more than I do.

I believe that this bill will be a benefit to every producer in the United States. I believe that it will be a benefit to every citizen of the United States. I look at it, Mr. President, as the most important bill for the people generally that has been before Congress at this special session. I think this body is doing the people of the United a very great wrong by allowing this measure to drag along as has been done. Every man has his right to oppose a measure, but the great trouble has been that there are many opposing this measure who have not had the courage—and I mean the word I use—to come out in the open and state their reasons why they are against it.

I believe that the packers of the United States, the owners of the great terminal elevators of the United States, and the great storage concerns of the United States are lending all the assistance they can to those who are opposing this bill.

There has been a good deal of talk among Senators claiming to be favorable to this bill about desiring to help the President in this great fight on monopoly and about voting vast sums of money for that purpose. That is all right, Mr. President, so far as it goes. It is an easy thing for us to vote away vast sums of money, and we ought to do it in a case of this kind; but there are greater things than that. Many Members of this body, sitting in their senatorial dignity, seem to be afraid to give the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief of the Army, the real power necessary to carry this great war to a successful termination.

Mr. President, there is no power that I would not give to the man who is held responsible for the successful prosecution and termination of the war that he might ask for, and in withholding that power we are only withholding that which is of vital importance not only to our sailors and soldiers and their families, but also to the families of the citizens of this land generally. Can it be possible that we can justify our position in refusing to grant him the power necessary to regulate the living expenses of our people in time of war? That is the power which is needed now, and it is much greater to my mind than the power of appropriating money.

All of the basic products of the United States, such as lumber, coal, foodstuffs, and everything of that kind, should be regulated during the period of this war at least; and instead of endeavoring to fix prices upon these articles let the Government say to those who handle them: "You may make a reasonable per cent of profit, and only a reasonable per cent." If they are patriotic citizens, if they are good citizens, they would be satisfied and would not continue along the path of what is worse than highway robbery, as they have been doing.

Mr. President, when the conscription measure was under consideration, in the few remarks which I then made I said that I was opposed to any age limit put on those conscripted. I pointed out then, and I am more firmly convinced now than ever, that it was the right solution, that all could then serve in some capacity in the hour of their country's need if they were called into service. Then if the manager of one of these big food depots of the country should refuse to run his business for the benefit of the country in war times at a reasonable profit, he could have been conscripted by the Government and been compelled to run his business for the real benefit of the people. If that had been done, Mr. President, I believe this food problem and all other matters pertaining to the living of the people of the United States would have been solved in a correct and truly democratic manner.

I do not care to take up more time in my few remarks; but I desire to say, in conclusion, that the people of the United States—those who are suffering under existing conditions, and will continue to suffer in a greater degree as time goes on—are watching the action of this Congress. We will have hard work to convince them that it took us a month to make up our minds whether we wanted to vote on this bill or whether we did not—a bill of the greatest importance to all of the people.

Let me further say to you, in conclusion, that the Senate of the United States is discrediting itself in the eyes of the people with its dilatory and do-nothing tactics in connection with this bill and its failure to act promptly. Every Senator knows this as well as I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). The question is upon agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask that the amendment be now read. I understand there have been some changes made in it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that there were no changes made in respect to the amendment under consideration. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. On page 22, embracing lines 7, 8, 9, and 10, the committee proposes to strike out the following words:

Provided, That all persons, excepting persons serving without compensation, shall be appointed in accordance with the provisions of the civil-service act of January 16, 1883.

Mr. SMOOT. Is that on page 22, beginning in line 7?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is on page 22 of the old print of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as expressed before, I hope the Senate will not agree to that amendment. The House provided that these employees should be under civil service, and so long as this is a lump-sum appropriation the appointments ought to be under the civil service. Otherwise it is going to cost the Government of the United States nearly twice the amount of money that it otherwise would. I sincerely hope that the Senate will not adopt the amendment.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I very much hope the amendment of the committee will be adopted. I made substantially the same argument at the time the farm-loan bill was before the Senate that I wish now to make, and I do not know that I can add much to that, except to say that the present emergency is deeper and greater and more serious in its consequences.

When a bureau is to be newly established, it is almost impossible within a reasonable time to create an entirely new set of officials.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that if this provision were adopted it would be impossible to get the employees. If there were an appropriation for the holding of an examination by the Civil Service Commission it would take three or four months to get the employees on the eligible list as the result of the examination. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] will remember that in the last appropriation bill we had to insert an appropriation of $20,000 additional in order to hold civil-service examinations, because the civil-service funds were practically exhausted. All these great departments have demanded during these war times many additional employees, but they can not get them, and if we do not adopt some such provision as this it will be impossible to administer the law. How low would it take to hold such examinations? At least three or four months, if the money was available for that purpose; but we should have to make an additional appropriation in order to enable the Civil Service Commission to hold examinations.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I should like to continue my remarks. I was going to say precisely what the Senator from North Carolina has said.

Mr. OVERMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire declines further to yield.

Mr. HOLLIS. The reason I interrupted was because the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] rose, and I thought he wanted to reply to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN].

Mr. OVERMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. I agree with him.

Mr. HOLLIS. I am very glad to have the Senator from North Carolina give me that information, because it comes from an authoritative source.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator——

Mr. HOLLIS. I want to finish what I have to say now, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. SMOOT. I merely wanted to correct a statement made by the Senator. The Senator from Utah did not rise to ask to interrupt the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HOLLIS. The Senator from Utah, as I understood, was rising to reply to the Senator from North Carolina; but that is immaterial.

I do know, as a matter of fact, that the Civil Service Commission is crippled at this time for lack of funds to do its ordinary work. It is my impression that the Senate Appropriations Committee reported an appropriation that was asked for by the Civil Service Commission, and it was agreed to by the Senate, but that the House conferees insisted on cutting it out; at least, it went out because the House insisted that it should. I do know that the Civil Service Commission is now called upon to supply hundreds and thousands of employees for the War Department, something that has not before been done; but to undertake to start out a new bureau of this sort under civil-service rules would be a very foolish proceeding. I say this as a friend of civil service. I am on the Civil Service Committee; I believe in civil service absolutely. After the Farm Loan Board had gotten started and the Appropriations Committee thought they should submit schedules of the employees they wanted I had no particular objection. I did, however, object, as some Senators will remember, to cutting the salaries of the members of the Farm Loan Board, but I do feel that if this measure is worth passing, if we are to go at it with vigor, we can not afford to cripple the administrators by the civil-service rules. I therefore hope the committee amendment will be adopted.

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he will not accept an amendment to the amendment which he has proposed? It has been stated here—and I think accurately—that where appropriations have been made in lump sums salaries have been paid sometimes 300 per cent higher than salaries for like services in other departments which are under the civil service. Now, it seems to me that there ought to be some protection or some shield against the payment of exorbitant salaries or wages. I therefore ask the Senator if he would have any objection to adding at the end of the amendment the following words:

All salaries and wages paid under the provisions of this act shall be the equivalent of salaries and wages paid in other departments of the Government for like services.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to that, Mr. President.

Mr. McCUMBER. I offer that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair is advised, the pending amendment relates to striking out lines 7, 8, and 9, and the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota would not be appropriate to the amendment under consideration.

Mr. McCUMBER. I appreciate that fact, Mr. President, and will offer my amendment to the other amendment, when the one pending is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not remember that any particular reason was given why this language should be stricken out, at least at any meeting of the committee when I was present. Personally I do not see why the civil service should not be applicable at the starting of a bureau of this kind as well as to have it applicable later on. Certainly the temptation to make it partisan and to make a political machine out of it would be taken away. I am not charging, nor do I believe, that that would be done if the amendment were agreed to, for, so far as I know, there has been no reason given of a partisan nature why the provision as to civil service should be excluded from the bill; but I believe, Mr. President, that these employees could be selected by the Civil Service Commission better than by any other bureau or set of men. They must be selected by somebody. They will be selected under certain rules and regulations, if they are to be efficient employees, if the right men and women are selected. The Civil Service Commission do nothing else except that kind of business; they are better equipped to do it than is anybody else, and I do not see any reason why they should not do it. Therefore I do not think that the language proposed to be stricken out should go out of this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, if the bureau is established, how will it get employees from the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. NORRIS. They would have, in the first place, I presume, an investigation made as to the nature of the work to be done and the kind of men and women who ought to do it, determine when examinations should be held, and then hold the examinations, to take which everyone who desired could apply.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator does not understand my question. These prospective employees will have to stand an examination if they are to be appointed under civil service. How are the examinations going to be held? The Civil Service Commission came before the Appropriations Committee and said that they needed to provide a list of eligibles for the War Department, and asked us for an appropriation of $20,000 to hold examinations. We put that amount in a bill then pending in the Senate, but I understand now they have no appropriation available to hold examinations.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know anything about the appropriations.

Mr. OVERMAN. It takes at least three or four months to hold these examinations and to establish an eligible list. The War Department, the Navy Department, and other departments have not been able to get the stenographers they need, although they have brought, as the Senator probably knows, in the neighborhood of 6,000 people to Washington. The list has now been about exhausted, and it will take three or four months to get another list from which eligibles can be appointed.

Mr NORRIS. The Civil Service Commission could get employees just as quickly as the heads of the bureau could get them——

Mr. OVERMAN. Not at all.

Mr. NORRIS. Unless they select them at random and make a political machine out of it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think anybody is going to make a political machine out of it. I do not have any idea that that will be done.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope not. I do not think any of us want that to be done.

Mr. OVERMAN. I sincerely hope not.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. OVERMAN. What I meant to say was that it would be necessary for the Civil Service Commission to give notice and to send officers to conduct the examinations.

Mr. NORRIS. Will not that have to be done in any event, unless the employees are picked at random? If the Senator himself were appointed by the President at the head of this bureau, and he wanted to get a number of stenographers, a number of clerks, and a number of other assistants, he would have to adopt some method of selecting them.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. He could not pick them at random on the street corners.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what I am talking about——

Mr. NORRIS. The Civil Service Commission is better equipped to do that than the Senator would be, because the machinery, to a certain extent, or at least the nucleus of the machinery, is all there. They know how to do it; they have had experience along that line; and they could get at it more quickly. They have their assistants and secretaries in every State and important city in the Union, and they could cover the whole country almost overnight.

Mr. OVERMAN. Suppose they wanted to appoint some good farmers in Nebraska, does the Senator suppose the farmers would stand a civil-service examination?

Mr. NORRIS. I should think so.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I have no idea that they would. It is mighty difficult in my section of the country to get anybody to stand a civil-service examination for anything, I am told.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose the Senator wanted a stenographer and went out into the country and found a man plowing corn, and said, "Here, I want you to be a stenographer," would he get employees in that way?

Mr. OVERMAN. I could go and get a stenographer in some office who had not taken the examination and who would not stand an examination. I might want an expert in farming, and I could go to some good farmer somewhere, or I could correspond with some farmers' association, or with the governor of the State, and in that way get a better man than one who could stand an examination, but who might not be competent.

Mr. NORRIS. That may be true; but, if a farmer was wanted, the Civil Service Commission would have a method of examination for a farmer, which would, of course, be entirely different from a stenographer's examination. In this case, however, the bureau will not be desirous of securing farmers; they will want to get clerks and stenographers. A great many assistants of that character will be required.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Of course, when it comes to the selection of stenographers and typewriters and, perhaps, bookkeepers, I assume that there is some one connected with the Civil Service Commission who is capable of conducting examinations of that kind; but the question comes up here with regard to food distribution, the production of food, and so forth Can the Senator name anybody connected with the commission who is competent to conduct an examination on those subjects?

Mr. NORRIS. I can not even name a stenographer there; I can not even name offhand the heads of that commission; but I will say to the Senator that most of those employed in the proposed new bureau will be bookkeepers and people of that kind. A great many stenographers, a great many clerks, a great many bookkeepers will have to be appointed and there is hardly any class of employees for whom the Civil Service Commission could not hold examinations and establish a list of eligibles. They can hold examinations for lawyers, for bookkeepers, for farmers, for clerks, for stenographers, or for any class of employees. Selecting employees is part of their business, and they are equipped for it. The Civil Service Commission is the organization of the Government which we have organized and equipped to do that kind of work. Somebody must do it, and we had better have some one who is an expert secure these employees than to have them selected offhand without any reference to their qualifications.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this applies to section 16 only, and provides for the employment of stenographers and clerks mostly here in the District of Columbia. Now, let me tell you what is going to happen if this provision is stricken from the bill.

The officials of the bureau will go to work, and they in many cases will select from the other departments of our Government the very best stenographers and clerks they can get. They will raise their salaries 25 to 50 per cent; and then the other departments of the Government will have to go to the Civil Service Commission to get clerks to replace those that will be taken away from them.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMOOT. Just as soon as I finish this statement I will yield. When the next appropriation bill comes before our committee, the heads of all of these other departments will appear before the committee and say: "We could not keep our clerks of the first and second and third and fourth classes; we could not keep our best stenographers. They were taken by the new bureau, just the same as has happened in the past."

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] just a minute ago offered an amendment which would prevent the very thing which the Senator is criticizing.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, that amendment has not been adopted. Then this is what the result of that will be: They will take an employee from one class of work in one department and advance him to another class, and claim it is not for similar work. I speak from actual experience, because I have served on the Appropriations Committee for years; and I know what the heads of the other departments that have to operate under the civil service say, every time an appropriation bill comes before us, in relation to giving them extra help or increasing the salaries of employees of those departments.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, is it quite fair to say that that evil, if it exists—and I have no doubt it does exist—would be accentuated by this provision of this bill? Is it not rather due to the fact that there has been a feeling in all of these departments that the wages of the employees, and particularly of those in the lower classes, ought to be increased?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I am not charging this up to the head of this bureau nor the men who do the work under the head of the bureau. It comes about in this way, and is just as natural as life itself: Every employee of our Government is looking for an advance. They want to be advanced; and when one of them gets to be a clerk of class 4 he has got to secure a promotion or his wages can not be advanced under the law, because the law fixes the salary of a clerk of class 4. Now, when a new bureau is created, if that bureau does not come under the rules of the civil service, there is not a clerk in any department of this Government but what knows at once that he has a chance of an advancement in salary. I am simply speaking of our experience in the past.

Mr. POMERENE. Does not the Senator overlook the fact that this is purely a temporary department?

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. POMERENE. These clerks would be likely to lose their positions if they got over in this temporary department.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. President, I have seen too many chances taken by them in the past; and I do not blame them, as far as that is concerned, for getting all that they possibly can. I do not want it understood that I object to their trying to secure an increase. I am only telling the Senate what the result will be.

If the Senate wants to take that responsibility, well and good. However, if it is adopted and this money is to be expended outside of the civil service, I say now, without fear of successful contradiction, that it will cost our Government 25 per cent more than it would if the civil-service rules applied.

It is for that reason, and that only, that I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, we have had some rather startling suggestions and statements made here today. It has been stated that a bill which passed the House of Representatives some time ago and came over to the Senate, and was amended here, and then passed the Senate, is being delayed in conference under pressure outside of Congress, and for the very purpose of forcing the passage of this bill before that that bill have been very earnestly in favor of early action upon it. I know that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], who is a member of the conference on the part of the Senate, for some time called attention to the fact that this bill had not gone to conference, and that he was especially insistent that the bill should be sent to conference, so that an agreement of some kind might be reached and brought back to the two Houses. So I feel safe in asserting that the Senate conferees are not to blame for the delay in acting upon that bill.

I know, Mr. President, that some of the Senate conferees on legislation is enacted.

It is a peculiar situation, to say the least of it, that a measure of the importance of House bill 4188 should be held up in conference with a view to forcing action by one of the coordinate branches of the Government upon another bill. House bill 4188 was supposed to be an administration measure. It was a measure considered of very great importance in the present crisis, and it was urged and presented as the first bill, and was passed by the House, and came over here. We were criticized very severely because we did not pass it promptly. I think the Senate did act pretty promptly upon that measure.

When the bill came upon the floor of the Senate, after careful consideration, two very important amendments were put upon it—two amendments which, in my judgment, would very largely meet the demands of the public sentiment of this country. As I see it, what the people of this country really would like to have is legislation that would prevent the storing and hoarding of food supplies for the purpose of exacting exorbitant prices from the people for those food supplies; and they would like to have gambling in farm products stopped. If those two things were done, and the people left to their normal activities, in my judgment the food problem would be largely solved, and the public sentiment of this country would be met and the interests of the producers and consumers largely served.

The Senate put two amendments upon this bill. One of them is section 10, which provides very stringent penalties against the hoarding of foodstuffs for the purpose of exacting exorbitant rates from the consuming public; and section 33 was a section which, in my judgment, would go a long way to stop and prevent gambling in food products. The bill was passed with those two very important propositions in it. I think it was so important that the people of the country have a right to criticize anybody or any part of the Government that delays early action upon those two amendments.

As was said a while ago, the bill passed the Senate a month ago. It was not sent to conference until about a week ago, and apparently nothing has been done in the conference. It was stated broadly a few minutes ago on this floor that the delay was caused by pressure outside of either House of Congress, and that the delay is being caused in order to force the passage of this measure. Mr. President, if that is so the people of the country ought to know it, and they ought to have an opportunity to express themselves with reference to such action as that.

Now, Mr. President, another suggestion was made.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether he has personal and direct information that pressure has been brought to bear to delay that conference?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I did not make that assertion on the floor of the Senate. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] made that assertion on the floor of the Senate a while ago. I am satisfied that he had good reasons for making it and that he can answer the Senator from Ohio.

It was also suggested that the bill that we are now considering should be sent back to the committee. It was stated that the committee is considering the matter of submitting to the Senate a substitute.

I do not think a suggestion of that sort ought to be entertained for one moment. I do not believe that the Senate ought to abdicate its functions in behalf of any committee. If anybody should abdicate them, it should be the committee. The committee is simply the servant of the Senate.

What has been the course of this bill? A bill similar to the House bill was introduced in the Senate on the 15th of June by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Foresty. On the 16th of June it was reported from the committee to the Senate without any amendment. We have a right to assume that the committee gave some consideration to the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. But I think it was stated on the floor of the Senate—I am not sure, but my recollection is that it was stated on the floor of the Senate by the chairman—that it was reported without amendment because the committee seemed to be so divided that they were not able to reach a committee decision with reference to it; and so it was brought to the Senate for its consideration without any recommendation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was going to suggest to the Senator that not only was it reported without amendment but also without recommendation; and I doubt if the committee intended to make any recommendation upon that bill until it had been discussed for some time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Well, there was no recommendation made. The Senate bill was considered for a few days, and then the House bill passed the House and came over here, and was referred to the committee. It came over here on the calendar day of June 25, and was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. That committee, as I understand, gave special consideration to that bill, spending a great deal of the time of two days on it, and on the 27th of June it was reported to the Senate with a great many amendments, which, I understand, had the approval of the committee; and we have the bill here with these various amendments recommended by the committee.

The Senate has been at work on this bill now for a good many days. We have amended it in various particulars. We have amended the committee amendments. We have gone through the bill for the consideration of the committee amendments, and we have reached page 22 in the consideration of committee amendments. There are only 24 pages in the bill, and, aside from the amendment we are now considering, there are only three other committee amendments.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Four. Section 3 was passed over.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was going to say that some amendments recommended have been passed over. We will go back to them.

In this state of affairs, after we have considered nearly all the committee amendments and after we have left one or two, possibly, for further consideration by the Senate, it is now suggested that because the Agricultural Committee has seen fit to have a meeting for the purpose of considering whether or not it will propose a substitute, the Senate should stop the consideration of this bill and wait upon its committee. I think not, Mr. President. I think the Senate should go on, consider these committee amendments, and make this bill. The Senate will make the bill in any event. The Senate has more jurisdiction and more power over the bill than the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. As a matter of fact, it has no jurisdiction over the bill now, as it is before the Senate. If that committee sees fit to consider the proposition of submitting a substitute, very well. I am glad it is trying to get matters in good shape. It is to be commended for that. It can report its substitute or bring it out and propose it as an amendment to this bill; but this bill ought not to be recommitted. Furthermore, after we have been considering it all this time, the Senate on yesterday reached a unanimous-consent agreement upon this bill and set it for a final vote on the 21st of this month.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I want to say to the Senator that I am glad he takes that position. This bill is now before the Senate, and of course it can be perfected just as completely in the Senate as it could be in the committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I certainly think so. I do not believe the Senate has any right, under the unanimous-consent agreement, to refer this bill back to the committee except by unanimous consent, and I do not believe that by a majority vote we could practically set aside a unanimous-consent agreement and refer this bill back to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. At any rate, I do not think we ought to do it.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do.

Mr. PAGE. I want to say to the Senator that the committee will not change section 12 in the slightest respect in any recommendation it may make. It has simply taken for that section the unanimous-consent-agreement provision and made that section absolutely identical with the section that we have passed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As the Senator has just come in, I will state that I have not referred to section 12 at all in my remarks, but I was coming to it. I was going to do it, but I had not done it.

Mr. PAGE. Is there any unanimous-consent agreement that would in any way prevent the committee from passing upon or considering an elimination of the many articles we had in the original bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Not at all.

Mr. PAGE. For instance, in the original bill there have been included cotton, hides, and leather, the manufactures of iron, and so forth. In the bill that the committee have been trying to perfect and improve we have eliminated everything except wheat, meal, coal, potatoes, and beans. We have tried to improve the bill. We thought it was entirely proper to make improvement if we could except as to section 12, which we have in no way changed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I do not want to criticize the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry; but it seems to me, from the statement of the Senator from Vermont, that it is assuming to know more about what ought to be in this bill than the Senate itself. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, when it reported this bill, did not recommend that cotton and wool and hides and skins be put in it; but the Senate itself, by a vote of the Senate, did put those things in, and the Senate amended the bill that it had under consideration by inserting those articles. In other words, it has been the expressed judgment of the Senate that those articles should be in the bill. Now the Senator says that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry have come to the conclusion that the Senate was wrong, and they are going to take out those things or recommend that they be taken out. That may be wise upon their part; but I do want to remind the Senator that the Senate itself put those articles in; that the Senate itself expressed its judgment that those articles should be covered by this bill, and only the Senate can undo that action.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator from Washington is reminded that the Committee on Agriculture does not propose to do more than to ask its chairman at his convenience to make a motion to amend the bill when it is properly up for consideration. I see no impropriety in the committee suggesting to the chairman that he express the views of the committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have already said that the Committee on Agriculture had a perfect right to make a recommendation to the Senate and offer the amendments which have been offered.

Mr. PAGE. That is what the committee propose to do.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know, but I am calling attention to the situation. I was referring more particularly to the suggestion made on the floor that because the Committee on Agriculture was considering the matter of a substitute we should stop the consideration of the bill here and send it back to the committee. That was the thought I was really referring to when the Senator interrupted me.

Mr. PAGE. Has anyone proposed to send the bill back to the committee?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It has been suggested two or three times by Senators that we should do that.

Mr. PAGE. That is without my knowledge.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator has been engaged with the committee. He was not here.

Mr. PAGE. Perhaps I ought not to bring up the matter at this time, because I suppose the chairman of our committee will, at the proper time, speak for the committee. It has left the matter in his hands to make such motions as will accord with the views of the committee as they have been expressed after a very careful reconsideration of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have said about all I care to say with reference to it, and I am going to take only a moment or two more. I was just coming to section 12 to which the Senator referred. As I understand it, section 12 has been disposed of by the Senate. I have understood that it has been, in effect, actually passed by the Senate, because we have gone further than we usually do with these unanimous-consent agreements. In the first place, it is very unusual for the Senate in the consideration of a bill to sit down or dispose of a particular amendment by unanimous consent, but that was done with reference to section 12. We further provided in that unanimous-consent agreement that after the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, had acted upon section 12 that section should not be reserved in the Senate for further consideration or further amendment. In other words, by the unanimous consent of the Senate section 12 has, in effect, been passed by the Senate.

I noticed in the papers this morning that it was claimed that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry had reframed a bill, and that they had reframed section 12, and that they were putting in the substitute another provision for section 12. I am glad to have the assurance of the Senator from Vermont that the committee, in whatever substitute it shall submit to the Senate, will incorporate in it section 12 as it has actually been agreed to by the Senate, thereby keeping full faith with the unanimous-consent agreement made by the Senate.

Mr. PAGE. And that is exactly what the committee has done.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not believe this statement made in the papers was even the voice of any member of the committee. I think the wish was father to the thought and the father to the expression in that paper, and that it was the expression of some one who hoped that section 12 would be changed in some way. As I said, I am glad to hear the Senators say they are going to report whatever substitute they have with that provision as the Senate adopted it, because it seems to me, Mr. President, that to take any other course would be violative of the good faith and honor of the Senate itself, and that we can not afford to do that.

Mr. President, I am not going to take any further time except——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator again? The Senator would not think it was a violation of the unanimous-consent agreement on section 12 of the bill if a proposed amendment were reported out of the committee leaving section 12 just as the Senate passed it the first time?

Mr. JONES of Washington. As the Senate finally passed it?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; as the section was finally passed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; that is what I said. I do not think that would be, but any attempt to change section 12 as it was finally agreed to by the substitute or in any other way would be violative of good faith. I do not think any substitute would even be subject to amendment, so far as section 12 is concerned, under the agreement under which it has been acted upon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I asked whether I understood the Senator to mean that it would be a violation of faith to report anything out of the committee by way of a substitute or otherwise but the Senator only feels that it would be a violation of faith to report out an amendment of the liquor provision.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, no; the other was not covered by the unanimous-consent agreement at all. I refer to section 12; that is all.

Mr. President, I have here a comment upon the food amendment as contained in section 12 showing the actual cost of distilled liquors and showing it to be very much less than that contended for by some on the outside. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance. I think that is where it should properly go.

There being no objection, the paper was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SMOOT AMENDMENT.

The Smoot amendmen. to the House food bill directs the President to purchase the distilled spirits in bond at cost and not more than 10 per cent profit.

MISREPRESENTATION BY OPPONENTS OF BILL TO CONSERVE FOODS WASTED IN MAKING LIQUOR.

The enemies of the bill to prohibit the use of foodstuffs for making liquor now say that the Senate amendment will cost the Government $1,000,000,000. In the same article they inconsistently argue that it will not aid prohibition, as the liquor interests will withdraw the liquor in bond before the new revenue law and the food bill go into effect.

WHAT ARE THE FACTS?

The cost of making a gallon of whisky is grossly misrepresented by the opponents of this legislation. The following facts were given by M. Marcel, manager of the Anti-Trust Distilleries Co., of Kansas City, Mo.:

Cost to produce a gallon of whisky.

	Cost of 50-gallon barrel.	Cost of single gallon.
9 bushels of No. 2 or No. 3 corn, at 50 cents	$4.50	.....
1 bushel rye and barley malt	1.00	.....
Yeast for fermenting	.10	.....
Cost of distillation	.40	.....
Cost of producing	6.00	$0.12
Cooperage for barrel of 50 gallons	2.75	.05½
Freight and hauling from district to original warehouse	1.50	.03
Total cost in warehouse per gallon	.....	.20½

This represents the cost of practically all the whisky now in bond. The recent additional price is caused by the war price of corn and other food material. Seven years of whisky supply is in bond on the above cost basis. Whisky was recently advertised for sale in Washington at $1.40 a gallon, which included the $1.10 Government tax. The same whisky has now been boosted to $2 a gallon without the addition of any cost of value to it in the meantime

The original cost, on the above basis, of 4-year-old whisky which is ready to take out of bond for beverage purposes is about 21 cents per gallon. Add 10 per cent profit and it would make a little over 23 cents a gallon. It will cost about 2 cents a gallon to redistill, according to Mr. Marcel, distiller. This would make it about 25 cents per gallon if the President gave the full 10 per cent profit, which is discretionary with him.

Senator PENROSE, who is in a position to know, says that there are 208,000,000 gallons of whisky in bond subject to this purchase, less what may be withdrawn before the President can purchase it under the law. On the above basis the cost to the Government would be only about $50,000,000. Its value to the Government will be as much or more than this when we consider that by the time the Government would purchase these distilled spirits for munition purposes the liquor dealers will demand the advanced prices of the material, labor, and revenue which will be in effect at that time. From the standpoint, therefore, of economy, this purchase is a wise one. The actual cost of the liquor now in bond is not a matter of guesswork. The Internal Revenue Department has access to every book of the distillers and can determine accurately the cost of each season's crop during the eight years covered by the whisky now in bond.

LIQUOR REVENUE A BURDEN TO THE GOVERNMENT.

Every dollar the Government gets in revenue from the liquor traffic is paid not by the liquor dealer but ultimately by the consumer. It costs the Government many dollars in return to care for the wreckage which liquor causes. The liquor dealer never has and never will ultimately pay this tax. By advancing a few million dollars he gets the privilege to rob the people of two and a half billion dollars every year.

The liquor dealers complained when the Senate passed the Cummins amendment preventing the withdrawal of whisky for beverage purposes. Banks holding whisky securities wired the Senate that they would be ruined. Now, when the Government offers to purchase the whisky this same crowd yells disaster! The reason for their present cry is that the proposed plan prevents the liquor dealer from selling the whisky at retail at about $6 per gallon profit instead of a possible 10 per cent profit, as proposed in the Senate amendment.

SENATE AMENDMENT A BENEFIT TO THE GOVERNMENT AND PEOPLE.

It takes a barrel of distilled spirits to produce the powder or explosive to fire one of the great guns in this war. When the water is taken out of the alcohol there will only be something like a hundred million gallons. If it takes a barrel to fire one gun this would only leave enough alcohol to fire 2,000,000 shots. All the alcohol in America, it is calculated, would not make the powder or the explosives for the cannonading for three days in a battle like that of Verdun. The Government can use this liquor to make liquor to kill the enemy instead of killing its own subjects and allowing these selfish interests to make abnormal profits out of it.

This Government never can grow strong by encouraging a traffic and getting revenue from a business which weakens and destroys the two essentials to victory, "Food supply and man power." When the liquor business has been entirely prohibited and the last distillery and brewery closed we will then realize the wisdom of Justice Grier's decision years ago, when he answered this whole revenue bugaboo from the Supreme Court bench in these words: "If there should be a loss of revenue from use of this power, she (meaning the Government) would be the gainer a thousandfold in the health, wealth, and happiness of her people."

JAMES CANNON, Jr.,
A. J. BARTON,
WAYNE B. WHEELER,
E. H. CHERRINGTON,
Legislative Committee of Anti-Saloon League of America.
E. C. DINWIDDIE,
Legislative Superintendent.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have here a proposition by many of the great church organizations of the country submitting a proposal to take care of the question of revenues that the Government may lose by way of the stoppage of the manufacture of liquors. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BOARD OF TEMPERANCE, PROHIBITION, AND PUBLIC MORALS OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,
Washington, D. C., June 28, 1917.

LET THE CHURCHES BUY A BONE-DRY BOND ISSUE TO REPLACE LIQUOR REVENUE.

In event of national prohibition, we pledge that the churches of the United States will buy $500,000,000 of liberty bonds annually during the period of the war, which will more than replace the revenue that might be derived from the liquor traffic.

Board of Temperance, Prohibition, and Public Morals of the Methodist Episcopal Church, by Clarence True Wilson, D. D., secretary; Board of Temperance of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, by Charles Scanlon, LL. D., secretary; Church Temperance Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church, by Rev. Jas. Empringham, D. D., secretary; the Northern Baptists, by Rev. Samuel Zane Batten, D. D., secretary; Committee on Temperance and Social Service of the Southern Baptist Convention, by A. J. Barton, D. D., chairman; American Temperance Board of Disciples Church, by Rev. L. E. Sellers, D. D., secretary.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have also a copy of a letter sent by Dr. S. P. Kramer, a very prominent physician of Cincinnati, to Representative LONGWORTH, of Ohio, answering a statement based upon a memorandum prepared by the Fleischman Co. and put in the RECORD a few days ago. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD also.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CINCINNATI.

Hon. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LONGWORTH: The Cincinnati Enquirer of July 7, 1917, publishes an extract from a memorandum submitted by you for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, wherein it appears that the abolition of brewing would seriously affect the production of bread by interfering with the manufacture of yeast

The basis of this memorandum is given as a statement by the Fleischman Co., which is said to produce 90 per cent of the yeast used by the bakers of the United States.

Herein I beg to submit for your consideration a statement relative to this important subject. To begin with, let me say that the Fleischman Co. produce whisky and not beer. The compressed yeast marketed by this company is a by-product of the manufacture of whisky, and the yeast used by the bakers of this country is really an offal of whisky. As the result of a good deal of scientific investigation on my part, I have come to the conclusion that this is a very inferior yeast to that which would be produced as soon as the manufacture of this almost universal poison is prohibited.

Distillers' yeast necessarily is very grossly contaminated by other microorganisms, such as the lactic acid bacillus and various other bacilli. The presence of these bacilli in the yeast is really the cause of the disturbance of digestion which many persons acquire as the result of consuming fresh bread which, as is often the case in this country, has been insufficiently baked.

If, however, yeast were made independently of the manufacture of alcohol, as it will be as soon as our archaic revenue regulations are changed, then the public and the bakers would be supplied with a pure culture compressed yeast, one which does not contain these contaminating microorganisms, and our people would no longer be poisoned either by the narcotic drug whisky or by bread made from contaminated yeast, the offal of the distillery.

Permit me to add that some years ago one of the Cincinnati plants of the National Biscuit Co., Muth's Bakery, was producing and using such a pure-culture yeast. They were, however, threatened with closure of their yeast plant, and this was finally accomplished through the pressure of the Revenue Department by the enforcement of archaic internal-revenue regulations.

When the ancestors of the Fleischman Co. fled from Egypt they fled from the breweries; they had no yeast and were compelled to eat unleavened bread. This we may still eat without sin. The conclusion to be drawn from your statement is that if the people of America wish to eat bread other than matzos they must continue to permit the descendants of the aforesaid ancestors to sell poison to the people.

Very sincerely, yours,

S. P. KRAMER.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to call attention to a statement in a letter from Dr. Kramer to me, in which he says:

As the matter now stands, the whisky men are drawing the whisky from bond to the limit of their credit. All of the available money in this part of the country is going into whisky, which constitutes another grave accusation against the traffic.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I am very glad that Senators this morning have laid emphasis upon the failure of Congress to enact the first so-called Lever bill which was passed by the Senate more than a month ago and went to conference and has since failed to emerge. Senators have referred to those provisions of the bill which are intended to prevent the undue hoarding of food products and to make such offenses punishable by fine and imprisonment, and they have also referred to those provisions of that bill which give the President discretionary jurisdiction over the grain exchanges in the event that the practices or methods indulged in by the members of such exchanges are injurious to the public in the matter of undue enhancement of prices. The President is authorized, as you remember, to correct those practices and issue regulations governing the exchanges.

The Senators, however, have omitted mention of the appropriations carried in that bill which are held up by reason of its failure to be reported from the committee of conference. The appropriations do not seem to be very large as compared with some of the appropriations which we are making but they are directed at exceedingly important undertakings. It will be remembered that some of those appropriations were made for the purpose of enabling the Department of Agriculture in cooperation with the State departments of agriculture and State agricultural colleges or any other suitable agency to carry on a nation-wide thoroughly organized campaign of education in the matter of not only food production but food conservation.

The Department of Agriculture fully expected that the bill would have reasonably prompt consideration. So confident was it that it would have such consideration at the hands of Congress that it laid plans in advance and notified the State governments and the State commissioners of agriculture and the State colleges of agriculture of its plans and invited them to cooperate and perfect the organizations within the States.

The situation resulting from the failure of the bill to be reported from the conference and to receive any final action by the Congress has been very serious in this respect. I have here a letter from the dean of the New York State College of Agriculture at Cornell, one of the greatest institutions of its kind in the world, which I beg leave to read to the Senate in order to show the Senate the seriousness of this situation. It is addressed to me at Washington and says:

NEW YORK STATE COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE DEAN,
AT CORNELL UNIVERSITY,
Ithaca, N. Y., July 2, 1917.

(Albert R. Mann, acting dean.)

Senator JAMES W. WADSWORTH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am writing you concerning the Lever food-supply bill, H. R. 4188, Calendar No. 59, which carries appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for cooperative work between the Department of Agriculture and the States. Our immediate interest is in the paragraph carrying the appropriation of $4,348,400 "For increasing food production and eliminating waste and promoting conservation of food by educational and demonstrational methods through county, district, and urban agents and others."

He continues:

You undoubtedly know that in anticipation of the passage of this act officials of the Department of Agriculture—

That means here in Washington—

wrote to the various States indicating expected apportionments to each State for cooperative work in agricultural and home economics county agent work. For New York State the original apportionments were indicated, as follows: For county-agent work, $59,300; for women's county agents, $50,500; for home economics in cities, $53,400. This was based on the original request of five and one-half millions for the above item. When Congress reduced this amount to $4,348,400, on which we understand both Houses agreed and the item seemed, therefore, to be assured, we were informed that according to the redistribution of funds the following items would very probably be available for work in this State. For county-agent work, $47,000; for women's county agents, $44,700; for home economics in cities, $20,000. In order that these funds might be of any use whatever this season it was necessary for us to make our plans immediately, as the growing and preserving season is now under way.

This letter was dated July 2. Of course, the season is even more under way since it was written—

Because of the seeming certainty that these funds would be available, we have drawn up a State program in cooperation with the New York State Food Supply Commission for the placing of food conservation agents and of additional agricultural agents in counties throughout the State. Our State council of defense, of which the governor is chairman, has approved our budget showing the joint State and Federal funds. Furthermore, we have taken steps in nearly all of the counties of the State and in the larger cities, to perfect organizations so as to place the agents immediately upon the receipt of the funds. Other State organizations throughout the State have adapted their plans to our program and it will mean a disastrous disturbance of the entire food conservation program in this State if these funds are not forthcoming and if they are not received soon. The situation is extremely acute in view of the fact that communities throughout the State are insisting on having service. The time is ripe to do a far-reaching piece of work. It would seem impossible that we should have to inform people throughout the State that this work can now not be done because of failure of Congress to make the appropriations available.

Furthermore, in view of the assurances that the funds would be forthcoming, we have held a special training school of two weeks—in length to give the final preparation to the first lot of food conservation agents who are to go out; and we have announced a second training conference of similar length for the remaining number.

That was at the Cornell College of Agriculture—

It means a very great deal for the State of New York that this bill shall be passed. The same is true of all of the other States, as I am given to understand that practically every State in the Union has taken steps much like our own in confident expectation that these funds will be forthcoming. I respectfully request that you do all that you can to secure the passage of this important measure; and I can not urge upon you too strongly the importance of haste in order that any effective work may be done this year.

Yours, sincerely,

A. R. MANN.

Mr. President, it is rather difficult for the Senate and perhaps for the general public to understand the seriousness of the situation confronting the people, and particularly the producers of food at this very moment. This letter from the dean of the New York State College of Agriculture refers to the New York State Food Commission, which was established to investigate very important work throughout that State, which, contrary to the impressions that exist perhaps in the far West, is one of the greatest agricultural States in the country.

It is well known that the acreage in nearly all crops planted this year is very much larger than that of last year all over the country. Two reasons stand back of that increase in acreage—first, the patriotic desire of the agricultural population to respond to the demands of the time; and, second, the comparatively high prices that have prevailed for agricultural products during the last winter and spring. Farmers in large numbers have increased their acreage in order, if possible, to make more money, a tendency in human nature that can not be overlooked. The most powerful element in this situation is the desire of every man to be prosperous.

The increase in the acreage in the State of New York on some of these products is truly remarkable, and at the risk of tiring Senators and largely for the purpose of putting it in the RECORD in the hope that some of the public at least, particularly the public which lives in the great cities and constitutes the great mass of the consumers, will have a clearer understanding of the situation, I am going to read the percentages of increases in acreage in the State of New York on certain products, comparing this year's acreage with last year's acreage. I take these figures from the bulletin issued by the New York State Food Supply Commission under date May 22, 1917.

We find, for instance, that the acreage in corn to be used for grain, as distinguished from corn which is to be used as ensilage, has increased over last year by 47.2 per cent. Corn for the silo has increased 16.7 per cent. Oats show 13.5 per cent increase in acreage; barley, 20.8 per cent increase; buckwheat, 16.3 per cent; winter wheat, 12.6 per cent; spring wheat, 162.1 per cent. I may remark in passing, Mr. President, that the spring wheat increased acreage in New York, while exceedingly large in percentage, does not indicate a tremendous total acreage, because spring wheat is not ordinarily raised in the State of New York upon a large scale, and it would require a comparatively small number of additional acres to bring about an increase of 162 per cent of the total. So that is not quite as impressive as the figures would indicate. However, it shows the tendency.

The increase in rye is 4.8 per cent. In beans—and the State of New York, I think, next to the State of Michigan, is the greatest bean-producing State in the Union—the increased acreage in beans is 43.1 per cent; alfalfa, 13 per cent.

The only decrease shown is in hay—a decrease of 2.7 per cent, accounted for by the fact that meadows have been plowed up in order to plant cultivated crops.

The acreage in cabbage has increased 77.1 per cent; potatoes, 25 per cent.

Mr. President, when the State of New York increases its acreage in potatoes 25 per cent—and, mind you, the State leads all the other States in the production of potatoes—it means 77,000 additional acres of potatoes, and at 100 bushels to the acre, which is an average yield, a fairly decent yield, that single increase in that State makes 7,700,000 additional bushels of potatoes.

The canning-factory crops have increased in acreage 36.4 per cent and the other vegetable and garden crops have increased 23.1 per cent, and miscellaneous crops 16.7 per cent.

Mr. President, these increases do not include the so-called home gardens which have been so encouraged throughout all the villages and towns and cities. These increases in acreage that I have read are on the actual farms of the State operated by professional farmers who know their business, and who have gone into this increased production confident, I may say, that they shall have a chance to sell this increased production for what it is worth on the market.

The State authorities report that, so far as home gardens are concerned, the increase in that State amounts to 151 per cent, which means a vast production of perishable products by a very large number of small holders.

The bill which is pending in the conference is the one by which it is contemplated to show the people of this country, if they need any showing—to teach the people of the country, if they need any teaching—how to conserve this enormous increase in the production of food. Here it is the middle of July. It is pretty late to teach anybody to preserve the crops that are ripening to-day. The bill that is now reposing in conference, through the exercise of some mysterious influences which have succeeded in keeping it buried there, is of infinitely more importance in the months of July and August, 1917, than the bill which is now the unfinished business of the Senate.

I undertake to prophesy—I am emboldened to do it because I am in the farming business myself—I undertake to prophesy that the production of crops in the United States this year, with the single exception, perhaps, of wheat, will exceed even the figures indicated by the most recent Government reports. In other words, I believe there can be no question whatsoever that we are to have the largest production in the history of the country, and I believe that it will reach such figures as even to startle the most confirmed optimist. Not even the Department of Agriculture may really estimate what is going on in this country in the production of food.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator, in making the statement which he has just concluded, has touched upon a subject to which we are not giving quite sufficient apprehension. While our legislation has been going on here somewhat slowly, the producers of the country have gone out and really solved this question so far as the production of foodstuffs is concerned, and the great question now is, How are we going to get the foodstuffs to the point where they ought to be for consumption?

Let me call attention to the fact that in my State we will have from 12,000 to 15,000 carloads of potatoes within the next 60 days, and the State of Utah will have, perhaps, from 6,000 to 8,000, the State of Washington from 10,000 to 12,000, and there will be found within the next 60 days in those three or four States some 30,000 or 40,000 carloads of potatoes.

Now, there will be no market for them, as we are informed, by reason of the fact that the means of transportation will not be sufficient and adequate to take care of them and get them to market. The food is there in abundant quantities and the production has been had—that is to say, those agriculturists and those in the business have gone forward and done the work—and the serious question now is, What are you going to do with those potatoes after you have raised them?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was going to discuss that very point. I think an infinite harm has been done to the food-supply problem in this country so far as it affects the conservation of these crops by the wild and reckless conversation that has been indulged in by certain people in the newspapers. It would be a good thing, Mr. President, if some of the gentlemen who are constantly advising farmers how to do their business would take the elevator from the top floor of the office building and go down to the street and walk far out into the country and learn something.

The Senator from Idaho has brought out an exceedingly important phase of this situation, what to do with this tremendous crop that is coming, mind you, a crop that did not come as a result of any legislation whatsoever. Entirely natural economic causes brought it out, assisted, of course, by a patriotic impulse. The farmer can not sell his product, and, in my judgment, will seldom if ever be able to sell his product direct to the consumer across great distances. We will take the State of Idaho and its potatoes. The farmers of Idaho have no effective method of selling to the consumers in Boston. They must sell to some one who will collect, transport, and distribute them. They sell to the local produce dealers. There are produce dealers by the thousands in the United States. There is one in every little village hamlet of 300 or 400 people to whom the farmer may go and get cash for what he has to sell. Those produce dealers or a good many of them have storage facilities. They take up the slack or the surplus, as it were, in the supply and put it in storage and feed it out to the larger produce dealers in the great cities, or, if it is grain, it goes to the millers, or for whatever purpose the article is used it proceeds through the channels of commerce.

Now, we have frightened every produce dealer in the United States. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] described day before yesterday what has happened in the wheat market. The dealer whose business it was to purchase wheat from the farmer and give him cash for it does not dare buy it to-day. Wheat is the first article affected by this lack of confidence on the part of the dealers, because it is the first staple article that comes to market in any large quantity. The next one will be oats. The bulk of the oats crop will ripen in August, and if the conditions in August are as they are to-day the farmers will not be able to sell their oats. Along with that will come the rye and the barley, and the same kind of dealers buy oats, rye, and barley, and the farmers will not be able to sell their rye or their barley. Next will come corn, and the same situation will result. All of these are staple products, which are listed upon the grain exchanges. Through no act of Congress, but through the utterances, public and otherwise, of gentlemen who are supposed to have tremendous influence with the administration here in Washington, every one of the dealers has reached the conclusion that he can not afford to take any chances in buying wheat. His business is to be regulated. How dare he enter into a contract involving the purchase and sale of wheat—particularly the sale of it some months hence—when there hangs over his head the suggestion that the Government may in the meantime step in and regulate the entire business? That is what is going to block the distribution of food. I believe the railroads, if they strain themselves, can carry it, but you have got to have somebody willing to buy it, and the danger at present, Mr. President, is that nobody is going to be willing to purchase.

Several days ago I ran across a dispatch which was published in the Evening Star of this city, dated from Chicago, on June 28. It says:

Government plans for food control, according to a statement given out here to-day by President Griffin, of the board of trade, include absolute control of the wheat trade in all its commercial aspects. There can be no speculation in it. Buying and selling of other grains for present or future delivery will be unrestricted.

Then Mr. Griffin's statement follows; and, mind you, Mr. Griffin, when he speaks, speaks with a good deal of authority from the nature of the position which he holds, and I venture to say that hundreds and hundreds of produce dealers read this statement. I am going to read it.

Mr. Griffin said: "Tuesday and Wednesday of this week representatives of the grain exchanges of the United States held a conference at Washington with Mr. Herbert C. Hoover, food administrator; Julius H. Barnes, his chief assistant; and others connected with the food administration. The exchanges, through their representatives, have given their whole-hearted support to the administration plans for food control."

Of course they have. They are perfectly safe when they do that. They take no chances.

Mr. Hoover and his associates have unfolded to us their plans in great detail. Naturally they are withholding the announcement of their plans and intentions until such time as the food-control bill is enacted into law. Consequently the detailed plans were submitted to us in confidence.

Imagine what the farmer who raises wheat thinks when he reads that this thing is being arranged "in confidence." What is going to happen to his wheat?

I am therefore not privileged at this time to make any complete statement. Nevertheless, there are in circulation many unfounded and unauthorized rumors affecting the situation. Therefore I have decided to announce the plan decided upon in general, but must refrain from discussing the matter in detail, as an announcement must necessarily come from Mr. Hoover. The plans decided upon will permit restricted competitive buying and selling of all commodities for present and future delivery with the exception of wheat.

Leaving out of consideration for the moment, Mr. President, the wheat problem, what is meant by "restricted competitive buying and selling of all commodities"? Dare any produce dealer buy a car of oats in the month of August when it is announced, apparently from a source that is reasonably authoritative, that some kind of "restricted competitive"—whatever that may mean—"buying and selling" will be permitted?

Mr. BORAH. Mr, President, what does "restricted competitive buying" mean?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I wish the Senator from Idaho would tell me. That is what every produce dealer in the United States wants to know; and until he does know, he will not buy Idaho potatoes nor New York beans in any great quantity. He can not do so. He does not know what is going to happen. I will continue reading this article, although I think I have just read what is perhaps the most important sentence in this rather remarkable announcement:

The United States Government, through its food administration, will completely dominate the distribution of wheat for domestic and export purposes. Not only will they purchase the wheat for this Government, but for the allies and the neutrals as well. Millers, likewise, will come under control of the food administration, and their wheat will be purchased and flour distributed under the same control.

That is why the millers are not buying wheat to-day; that is why flour is not being ground to anywhere near the full capacity of the mills in Minneapolis or anywhere else. The price of flour to the consumer remains high because there is very little of it being ground while the wheat is in the hands of the farmer and can not be sold. It is a strange thing to see wheat with a downward tendency, and flour quoted at a very high price. The reason is that the channel of trade has been interrupted with an obstacle which the wheat can not get over; it can not be sold. I continue quoting:

As must be apparent the operation of this plan will preclude the possibility of trading in wheat for future delivery. However, commission merchants, receivers, and others acting as agents in the purchase and sale of sample grain, will be permitted to handle sample wheat on the same basis as all other commodities.

Of course, that last sentence is not so important.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from New York is discussing now the effect of this suspense, uncertainty, and lack of information as to what would happen, what will happen, and so forth; but is the Senator going to discuss this question: Suppose the food bills to have passed and are in operation, and this food control is going on, and the farmers know what the price and what the regulation will be, what effect, does the Senator think, it will have upon the business of the country?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Idaho had not added that last phrase in his sentence, I think I could answer it with fair accuracy; but after this bill is passed the farmers will not know what the regulations are going to be from time to time. Let us take this bill and look at the first section. There is recited a list of articles which would come pretty near filling the Sears-Roebuck catalogue, which are classed as necessaries, practically everything that is produced in the United States; everything of importance, with the exception, as I think I said on a former occasion, of Portland cement. That is the only thing that I could think of that could be added to that list as an important product.

Then in the fifth section, which is the licensing section, we find that the Government or its agents are authorized to establish a licensing system controlling every person and concern engaged in the production, manufacture, distribution, or marketing of all of the necessaries mentioned in section 1. Undoubtedly it is the purpose of the people who are to have the administration of this proposed law under their charge, to make their first effort to regulate the wheat market; but under the bill, as now drafted, there is not the slightest obstacle to their making efforts to regulate every other market, and just so long as that possibility exists, contained in the statutes of the United States enacted by the Congress, men will not dare to go out and do business with that freedom and initiative and enterprise that they do in ordinary times.

As I have said before, the effect of this bill will not stop at wheat, though the actual regulations affect wheat only. It will affect every product of the farm or factory.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator's discussion, in connection with the theme which he is now on, but if he has concluded as to that particular subject I should like to ask him to give us his views on the language of the article which he has just read:

The plans decided upon will permit restricted competitive buying and selling of all commodities for present and future delivery, with the exception of wheat. The United States Government, through its food administration, will completely dominate the distribution of wheat for domestic and export purposes.

I want to ask the Senator what he really thinks of the bald proposition that the destiny and fortune of every farmer in the United States who raises wheat in any considerable amount shall be put into the hands of a man who boldly announces that the entire wheat market is to be taken away from the farmers and to be absolutely "controlled"?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, Mr. President, of course, there is only one remedy for the situation that will be created by such a practice, and that is for the Government itself to appropriate millions and millions of dollars to be used in the maintenance of the price of wheat to the farmer at a level high enough to guarantee him against loss—I was about to say almost regardless of climatic conditions, but I shall not add that. It is the only solution. It is State socialism run wild. If you take his market away, or if you stagnate his market, you have got to guarantee him a living profit in some other way, and the only way to do it is to appropriate millions and millions of money and pay him. Otherwise we will not have any wheat in 1918.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if we do appropriate millions and millions of money and guarantee the farmer a price high enough to insure him against loss of every kind, and, as the Senator stated he was about to say, even climatic conditions, does it not then follow under those conditions that he would plunge into the raising of wheat and stop raising other things, so that we may find a corn shortage, a cattle shortage, or a potato shortage, and has not that been the experience of countries which have allowed themselves to be Hooverized?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, Mr. President, undoubtedly if we start upon this policy of absolute control of any article of commerce, we will have to go clear back to the point of origin and control every little thing that enters into it; and if it should turn out, as the Senator from Missouri has suggested, that by relieving the farmer through governmental appropriations of all risk in the raising of wheat and assuring him a profitable price for that product, to be paid him by the Government if necessary—if it shall turn out, as the Senator from Missouri has suggested, that that will lead the farmer to plant nothing but wheat—why, then, of course we will have to regulate the acreage of wheat; we will have to regulate the amount of seed sown per acre; we will have to go clear back to the beginning of things and start to build up, and our people will all become automatons, Mr. President, when that system is established in the United States.

Mr. President, the phase of this situation which leads me to think very seriously about this legislation and about the conditions confronting the country is the fact that a good many people confuse our conditions here in the United States with the conditions existing in other countries. People who have lived in the atmosphere of a besieged city and who month after month have seen poor people standing in line, in fact, have seen the whole population standing in line, each with a bread card, and have seen carefully measured and weighed rations handed out to each and every one of the population—people who have lived in that atmosphere or who have read about it and have read of the measures taken by the Governments of Europe seem to think that we must meet something of the same conditions in this country in order to enable us to help the allies win this war. There could not be a worse or more serious confusion of ideas.

England and France and Belgium and Italy are tremendous importers of food supplies. They have been such for generations, and will be such for all time to come, unless their populations are greatly reduced. It is quite easy, comparatively, for the British Government or the French Government or the Belgium food administration or the Italian Government to regulate the distribution of food supplies, because each of those governments can control the importations. Those supplies are not produced in those countries, and they are not so much concerned in encouraging the production of food. All they are concerned with is that they shall be able to buy it somewhere else, bring it in, and distribute it. But with us our concern is the production of the food. No man can frighten me into the belief that we are going to have meatless days or bread cards in the United States. It is inconceivable. No man can frighten me into the belief that the food supply of the United States is decreasing. I regret exceedingly that Mr. Hoover made the announcement, in the address he made at Providence, R. I., that the food supply of the United States was decreasing, when the facts show that it is increasing by leaps and bounds.

What is the result of an announcement of that sort? What is the result of editorials penned by gentlemen who know nothing about the production of food, warning people that the days of starvation are coming? The housewives in the great cities immediately become nervous, become frightened, and they go and clean off the shelves of the grocers. I know of one woman who bought 16 barrels of flour when she read one of those announcements, and used a good part of her savings in doing so. She consoled herself with the thought that she was not going to be without bread for some years to come.

Now, when you multiply that one person by hundreds of thousands—and that is what happened in the month of May in the United States—who are rushing to the stores, to groceries, to supply houses, and buying beyond their immediate needs, you run up the price, you disorganize business, and you create the condition of hysteria that has been so prominent in all the discussions in the press and before the public on the matter of food control.

I am not at all disturbed about the production of food in this country in the year 1917; I am disturbed about the production of food in the year 1918, for, if a situation exists in 1918, or at the end of 1917, which would lead the food producer to believe that it has not paid him to increase his acreage, that, as a matter of fact, he has been a loser by it, that he has not been able to sell or conserve his increased production, then the acreage of 1918 will be reduced.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. How long is it now until the work of plowing and preparing the ground for the wheat crop of 1918 begins, particularly in the Middle States?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The fall plowing for winter wheat is done largely in the months of September and October, and the wheat is generally planted in the part of the country in which I live about the middle of October; and, of course, thousands of acres of land are plowed in the fall of the year in which crops are to be planted in the following spring. Every farmer who operates his farm with any intelligence—and I was about to say with any success—has to plan all those things in advance; he has to make provision for all his requirements, for the seed, to finance himself, and perhaps to purchase new machinery; and if there is a state of uncertainty in the autumn of 1917, and these obstacles which now obstruct the wheat market are then existing against oats and corn and rye and barley and potatoes and beans and a dozen other articles, the farmer will not and can not duplicate in 1918 the acreage of 1917. Then we will have a food shortage in so far as our ability to supply our allies is concerned in the year 1918; and that is the important consideration which every American legislator should think about when we start in discussing how we are going to control the food supply of the United States.

Mr. President, we can sit here and legislate and legislate, but we can not force production. There is no way under heaven by which we can force men to plant seed; but it is the easiest thing in the world to prevent production, and my only dread in this whole situation is that we shall so legislate and by our legislation so hamper and restrain and restrict and so stagnate the domestic markets of the United States that we will not have the production we need in 1918. That is why, Mr. President, I have deemed it my duty upon more than one occasion to express some doubts, some very grave doubts, as to some of the provisions of this bill—not all of them, but some of them. I regard the licensing section, so called, as the one which constitutes the gravest danger along the line I have just indicated, for it must be its purpose—else it would not be in the bill—to establish a restrained, restricted, and therefore inevitably stagnant market; and when you do that, you have reduced the food production of the United States.

This bill is to be before the Senate for some time to come—until Saturday, July 21. It is true, as has been intimated upon the floor this morning, that the members of the Committee on Agriculture are endeavoring to work out a substitute not to be presented by the committee as a committee substitute, because the committee no longer has jurisdiction over this bill, but the effort is being made in a perfectly proper and, I think, highly commendable way, to straighten out this situation and legislate upon those things which the majority—a clear majority—of the Senate concede to be absolutely necessary and to avoid in our legislation, if possible, incurring even the slightest risk of decreasing the production of food in this country in the year 1918. I can not prophesy that the efforts of the committee will receive my unqualified approval in every detail, and I do not suppose they will receive the unqualified approval in every detail of any Senator upon this floor; but it is perfectly apparent today that the bill now before the Senate holds more of evil for this country than of good. When the committee amendments to the first section were adopted and the Senate amendments added to it, I opposed the section as amended, because a great addition had been made in the list of articles which would fall under absolute Government control pursuant to the provisions of section 5, the licensing section.

At that time I ventured the opinion that there never has been, there is not to-day, and there never will be a government upon the face of the earth that can exercise such powers effectively. It is beyond the abilities of any group of human beings. The alternative to effective operation, which I hold is humanly impossible, is disaster; and I do not want disaster to overtake the industries of the United States nor the farmers of the United States, and thereby bring about what might amount to disaster to our allies in this war.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before the Senator sits down, in the exceedingly interesting remarks of the Senator there has been no mention of one feature which I should have liked to hear him discuss, and concerning which it seems to me he may yet add something.

If you take one or two or three of these articles in section 1 and undertake to regulate and control and fix the prices of those articles, how is it possible to do that in justice to the people who are dealing in those articles without fixing the price and controlling the articles which they must purchase and which they must utilize in producing the articles which you do regulate and control?

I think there is tremendous force in what the Senator says as to the impossibility of the human mind organizing a system or a scheme of government by which all these things can be regulated and controlled; but there is this other question: If you enter upon the subject at all and undertake to regulate and control one or two of the staple articles or important articles of the country, then must you not necessarily, in order to protect the man who is producing those articles, control all the articles he purchases and utilizes in the production of those things?

Mr. WADSWORTH. What the Senator from Idaho says would be entirely true. Of course, the instrument which the Government may use in order to protect the producer of the article thus controlled is the "minimum price." For instance, if it is decided to be absolutely necessary for the proper waging of the war and the proper assistance to our allies—who seem to be so entirely dependent upon white bread—to regulate wheat, in my humble judgment, in order to obviate the very difficulty mentioned by the Senator from Idaho, it will be necessary to fix a minimum price to the farmer for his wheat. That would relieve him from any hardship due to the restrained and regulated control of his product or arising from the high cost of clothes or farm machinery.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; but you indirectly do, then, what you have declined to do directly. You indirectly fix the price of all these other articles in a measure, because you must make that minimum price such as will enable him to purchase these articles at these increased prices. For instance, if you fix a minimum price for wheat, you have got to fix it at such a figure that the man will know that he is justified in paying the increased prices which will be asked for the other products, and you are really putting upon the taxpayers of the country the increased price of all these products.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The last suggestion of the Senator from Idaho is a very interesting one, and so are his others. This is going to be a taxpayer's burden.

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No food legislation is going to make something out of nothing. There is an impression around that simply by passing a food-control bill we are going to make food. There is an impression that the Congress of the United States can produce something out of nothing, somewhat after the fashion of a sleight-of-hand artist upon the vaudeville stage, who takes a pair of rabbits out of a silk hat. Now, we are not going to do anything like that. If we pay a minimum price to farmers to protect them against the conditions which the Senator from Idaho suggests may arise, and that minimum price amounts to more than the wheat is actually worth with the law of supply and demand operating, the taxpayers of the United States are going to pay the difference. We may be putting money in the right-hand pocket of some people, but we are taking it out of the left-hand pocket of those same people.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, Mr. Hoover has referred to the fact that by regulation, by control in France they have kept down the price of bread, and so forth; but they have performed that service to their people by the very method suggested by the Senator from New York. They have simply appropriated from the treasury a sufficient amount to meet the situation. That is to say, they go into the market and buy the wheat and then they sell it to their people at a loss, and they pay it through the treasury of France.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And the burden incident to that selling at a loss is distributed among the French people in the way of taxes.

The SECRETARY. On page 22, lines 7, 8, 9, and 10, the committee proposes to strike out the following proviso found in the House text:

Provided, That all persons, excepting persons serving without compensation, shall be appointed in accordance with the provisions of the civil-service act of January 16, 1883.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] wanted to be here when that amendment was voted on, so I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of California in the chair). The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Calder	Dillingham	Gronna
Bankhead	Chamberlain	Fernald	Hale
Borah	Culberson	France	Hollis
Broussard	Curtis	Frelinghuysen	Husting

James	McNary	Shields	Underwood
Johnson, Cal.	New	Smith, Ariz.	Vardaman
Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Smith, S. C.	Wadsworth
Jones, Wash.	Overman	Smoot	Warren
Kendrick	Page	Sterling	Watson
Kenyon	Penrose	Sutherland	Weeks
King	Pomerene	Thomas	Williams
Lodge	Ransdell	Thompson	Wolcott
McCumber	Reed	Tillman
McKellar	Shafroth	Townsend
McLean	Sheppard	Trammell

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I again announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. HUGHES] on account of illness.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, do I understand that this is the proviso at the top of page 22?

Mr. SMOOT. Lines 7 to 10 on page 22 of the original bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, of course the purpose of striking that out is to make all these appointments political. It seems to me that in time of war that is a great mistake. Putting entirely aside for the moment the preservation of the classified service, I think to draw the political line on persons serving the country is a very great error; and I think to do it, besides striking down the civil service, and filling this service with persons to whom a political reward is being paid, is introducing politics into these war measures in the most offensive manner.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that that was not the purpose of this proposed amendment; and I do not remember that there was a dissenting voice in the committee in regard to it, although there were both Republicans and Democrats there. It was stricken out simply for the reason that a very large force would be required, and it was thought that it would be impossible to get the necessary force by resorting to the civil-service classified list. The question of politics was not considered for a moment.

Mr. LODGE. Of course I understand that that explanation is the one always given. The civil-service registers are crowded with names. There is not the slightest difficulty in getting clerks. These are routine offices. Whatever the intention was, the object and purpose is perfectly plain.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, another very wonderful opportunity that will be afforded by the adoption of this amendment, in addition to giving sinecures to deserving Democrats to show farmers where they are to sell their potatoes or in what back yard they are to raise wheat, will be to permit escape from conscription, so that our armies will be filled with Republicans from Pennsylvania and other Northern States, while deserving Democrats will be serving their country in the agricultural districts instructing the farmer, thoroughly outside of the danger zone. I can see many ramifications that would make the committee unanimous on this point, so far as the Democratic end of the committee was concerned.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I understand there is an order in all of the departments that no man between the ages of 21 and 31 shall be appointed to any office. I know that is the policy in many of them.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, I can picture a vision, Mr. President, of this food-control department gradually assuming a military cast. The food controller doubtless will be a brigadier general. I am told that some of the gentlemen mentioned in connection with this appointment contemplate donning a uniform and wearing spurs—and they are putting them on now—and drawing a sword should a farmer be recalcitrant, and threatening to commandeer his farm.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator spoke of the matter of exemption. The committee have taken care of that on the next page. The House put in a provision that the employment of any person under the provisions of this act shall not exempt him from military service, and our committee struck that out.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me for just one moment?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In answer to the Senator from Massachusetts, I simply wish to say that we struck that out, because it is already provided for in the selective draft.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, it would not do any harm to have it in again.

Mr. LODGE. It would do no harm to cover these particular people who are going in on political appointments without any regard to the civil service, overthrowing the civil service to do it. It would not do any harm to say that they are not to be exempted; but care is taken in that respect.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I have, as other Senators have, hundreds of callers during the week, afflicted fathers and anxious mothers, desirous of securing some kind of exemption for their young men, and one of the frequent suggestions made is this: "Is there not some department of the Government where he could be safely stowed away and still avoid the reputation of being a slacker?"

I can see great possibilities that the food controller will have, over and beyond the control of foods and the designation of what back yards wheat shall be planted in, in this respect. So strongly impressed am I with the suggestion that these officials are contemplating assuming a military garb and becoming a military adjunct of the Government that I have been intending to offer an amendment, and I think I will offer it now, to add at the end of line 9, page 20, the following paragraph:

All persons appointed or employed under this act whether remunerated by salary or any other form of compensation or acting as volunteers shall be considered and treated as civilian employees and shall not be commissioned or enlisted in the military or naval service of the United States.

I ask that that amendment lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. President, we are making majors and colonels overnight. Civilian employees by the scores and hundreds performing only civilian duty are being sworn in and given military commissions in my opinion to the demoralization and detriment of the real soldiers of the country and in an entirely unnecessary way.

The Senate, when the Army appropriation bill was up, very foolishly provided that these appointments to military office should not be sent to the Senate when they were below the rank of colonel. I thought at the time that that was an unnecessary giving up of the prerogatives of the Senate and might lead to unfortunate consequences. I am now convinced that I ought to have done at that time what I had thought of doing and that I should have asked to have that paragraph stricken out of the bill, because I openly charge here that the grossest abuses are being perpetrated in the commissioning to military offices of civilians who are performing only civilian dutes. I intend to offer a resolution as soon as I can prepare it calling on the Secretary of War to send to the Senate a list of persons appointed from civil life to military office below the rank of colonel while performing civilian duties. I want the whole list in order to examine it. I have a number of names in my mind now which, when investigated, will appear to the country so grotesque and ridiculous as almost to bring scandal on this whole transaction.

My attention was called yesterday to two gentlemen whom I happen to know personally—Francois de St. Phalle, a young gentleman of French origin, but either a naturalized American citizen or taking out his papers, and Mr. W. H. Garrett, from Delaware County, Pa. These two gentlemen were connected with the Parsons committee, which I believe is a civilian committee sent over to France to investigate the condition of the railroads in France back of the western front, and report thereon to the Council of National Defense and the advisory commission. They have made very instructive and very elaborate reports on the conditions there. They were over there entirely in civil employment examining the railroads and could have performed their duty attired in blouses much more effectively than in military costume, yet both of these men, when they were appointed, were instructed to get into a major's uniform, and they were actually appointed majors in the military service of the United States to engage in doing railroad work back of the lines in France.

I want to say for Mr. Garrett that, being a noncombatant and a sterling Pennsylvania Quaker, he bought his uniform, but has never had it on, and has threatened to resign if compelled to wear a major's uniform; and I am told that Mr. St. Phalle, the Frenchman, did appear in his uniform "somewhere in France," as the censorship bureau would describe it, and happened to meet his mother, and she burst into tears and fainted. She had two sons at the front and thought that Francois was safely hidden away in America, away from the firing line; and she was so grieved at seeing this young gentleman in a major's uniform while he was inspecting coal cars and locomotives that she fainted. [Laughter.] I am reliably informed that one of these gentlemen has never had on his uniform and the other only once, and both of their uniforms doubtless can be sold to some aspiring warrior at a considerable reduction of price. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMOOT. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if he believes that the fact of these men coming into the civil service will prevent them from wearing the uniform?

Mr. PENROSE. I did not quite catch the Senator's question.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to know from the Senator from Pennsylvania if the fact of taking under the civil service these men who are to be employed in the food bureau, as I may call it, would preclude them from wearing the uniform?

Mr. PENROSE. No; it would not. My amendment, which I have offered and which is lying on the table, aims to provide that they shall be treated as civilian employees, and that they shall not be appointed, commissioned, or enlisted in the military or naval service of the country.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator another question? We hope, of course, that this war will not last forever.

Mr. PENROSE. I hope not.

Mr. GRONNA. Some think it may last one or two or three years. Now, what are we to do with all these men after the war is over? Are we to keep them on the pay roll?

Mr. PENROSE. As long as the Democratic Party is in power I believe they will be kept on the pay roll. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that I was not asking this in a partisan spirit.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, I was trying to tell the Senator the truth, in an entirely nonpartisan spirit, myself.

Mr. GRONNA. But, as a matter of fact, when the war is over, there will be no work for a great number of them—for many hundreds and thousands of them.

Mr. PENROSE. There is no work for a large percentage of them now.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that we are short of labor out in my country.

Mr. PENROSE. I refer to the gentlemen who hold these places. There is no work for them now.

Mr. GRONNA. While we are on that point, if the Senator will pardon me, I find no fault with the Senator from Pennsylvania because he is anxious to get some of his constituents into the service of farming. I am a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs and I know something about some of the Senator's constituents. I know we had one of them on a certain reservation in my State; he was sent out to buy macaroni wheat, but after the grain came up and after it was harvested it turned out to be barley. It seems that the gentleman did not know the difference between macaroni wheat and barley when he bought the seed.

It may be a favor to some people in the Eastern States to be enrolled under the civil service. To my mind, Mr. President, I think it is a disadvantage to them. I think, instead of taking these men and guaranteeing them positions as long as they behave themselves under the civil-service rules, it is the worst thing that can happen to young men if, instead of letting young men go out into the world to try to get positions upon their own merits, they are enrolled under any such law. Thousands of young men would be without a home in my part of the country to-day if they had not had the opportunity to go out for themselves and work out their own salvation.

I do not think that it is any favor to the laborers to say that they shall have the first opportunity to get these positions. I think instead of being a blessing to labor it is a curse to it. We all know that these positions are only temporary positions.

I wish to say, as one of the members of the committee, that there was no partisan politics injected into this proposition. There was not a Republican member of the committee who was in favor of putting these men under the civil service, so far as I know. It was discussed, and I think it was understood, and I believe I am safe in saying it was the unanimous opinion that these men should not be appointed under the civil service, but that the President should have the authority and the right to appoint his own men and that those appointees should have the right to appoint their own subordinates.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator permit me? Of course, there would be a special examination for these particular duties that would provide a special list of eligibles. There would be taken into the service men who were graduates of State colleges, who had taken farming courses, and knew something about farming. I think there would be a special examination to ascertain the qualifications of a man in connection with his knowledge of farming, and I have no doubt it would bring about better results than to permit every Tom, Dick, and Harry to be appointed without any official test of his qualifications.

Mr. GRONNA. I admit that there are many positions where men could be appointed as stenographers and clerks, and I take it that perhaps they will be appointed, in the way the Senator suggests.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not mean that men who have passed an examination for clerks should be appointed under this food-control measure, but I do claim that they should be examined to ascertain their qualifications and knowledge of farming, and then an eligible list should be formed, and they should not be appointed simply on their looks or their appearance.

Mr. GRONNA. I hardly think the section applies to that. It makes very little difference to me whether the amendment of the committee is rejected or not. I simply want to say that, so far as the committee is concerned, there was no partisan politics injected into it in committee.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, humorously made——

Mr. PENROSE. They were not humorously intended, Mr. President.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Evidently they impressed the Senate and the gallery as humorous, because there was a smile, an audible smile, both in the Chamber and in the galleries; and because that does not appear of record I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the references which the Senator made to the appointment of civilian officers in order that they might go to France dressed in uniform and create an impression there as possessing military genius and skill that they really did not possess.

It is true that the President has commissioned a few civilians, and they can wear uniforms if they want to, and probably under regulations they will be compelled to wear uniforms, but it is done under a provision of the act to increase the Army temporarily and during the war. The proviso to section 2 of that act is as follows:

> That the President is authorized to raise and maintain by voluntary enlistment or draft, as herein provided, special and technical troops as he may deem necessary, and to embody them into organizations and to officer them as provided in the third paragraph of section 1 and section 9 of this act.

Paragraph 3 of section 1 of the act provides how officers shall be appointed not only to the Regular Army but to all the forces, and under that subdivision of the section the President can select officers from the country at large. In other words, the technical troops can be officered by their own class, which is very essential.

I think the two gentlemen the Senator refers to were railroad men. It has been insisted here all the time that one of the defects in the Russian campaign was the total lack of railroad facilities. Among other distinguished gentlemen who have gone into this technical troop is Mr. Parsons, of New York City, one of the greatest engineers of this country. I presume if the Senator knows those Pennsylvania gentlemen they must be railroad men. It is the same case with France where their transportation facilities have fallen down and they have appealed to America to send technical men who are commanded as provided in this bill, in order that the officers may assist in the proper handling of the particular class of men.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I am not objecting to these men being sent to France. I think they ought to be sent. But I do object to the practice which is rapidly growing up of giving men military titles and standing who are merely discharging temporary civilian duty. I do not want to mention any more names, but I could give the Senate the names of members of these advisory boards who have been invited to wear uniforms and receive a military commission.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator I will second his efforts to get before the Senate any case where the military authority has been abused by appointing men to military command who are doing civilian duty.

Mr. PENROSE. These men are not appointed to military commands. They are not of the line. They are of the staff or attached to some alleged corps. I do not mean that the two men I referred to had any military command because they had none. They would not have known how to lead a detachment of 10 men over a road of any intricacy without getting them mixed up. They were in the discharge of civilian duties. I do not know whether the Senator thinks the advisory board ought to be sitting around in uniforms as generals and colonels and majors.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; I do not think they ought to be; but I think when we send men over there to build railroads and construct bridges and arrange for pontons and such things we ought to have civilians from the United States who are skilled in that particular work. They may not be in the command of men at all, but they are doing just as much military duty as if they were commanding troops, because they command the laborers under them.

Mr. PENROSE. Does the Senator think a man in charge of a gang of a thousand men laying the extension of a railroad could have better influence over the men as a general with epaulettes and spurs and drawn sword than as a civilian superintendent?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think not, Mr. President.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the military authority would have more influence with the men. He could command them to do this particular thing. If he is going to ask as an employer for the purpose of building their railroads and bringing munitions to the front, he certainly ought to have control of the men under him.

Mr. PENROSE. These men are not enlisted men; they are per diem laborers. I do not know how it is in France, but I know in America a military officer standing over a gang of per diem laborers working along a railroad track would be mighty apt to find himself run out of camp at the end of the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, on which the yeas and nays have been requested.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. As I do not know how that Senator would vote on this question if present, I feel constrained to withhold my vote.

Mr. VARDAMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WATSON (after having voted in the negative). My pair, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], not having voted, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], which I transfer to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] to the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I have already voted, but I observe the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], with whom I have a pair, has not voted. I therefore transfer my pair to the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and let my vote stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS].

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 24, as follows:

YEAS—38.

Ashurst	Hollis	Owen	Thomas
Beckham	Husting	Pittman	Thompson
Broussard	James	Ransdell	Tillman
Calder	Johnson, S. Dak.	Shafroth	Trammell
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Sheppard	Underwood
Culberson	Kenyon	Simmons	Wadsworth
Fletcher	King	Smith, Ariz.	Warren
Gore	McKellar	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Gronna	Martin	Smith, S. C.
Hardwick	Overman	Swanson

NAYS—24.

Borah	Hale	McNary	Sherman
Curtis	Johnson, Cal.	New	Smoot
Dillingham	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Sterling
Fernald	La Follette	Page	Sutherland
France	Lodge	Penrose	Townsend
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Reed	Weeks

NOT VOTING—34.

Bankhead	Harding	Myers	Smith, Md.
Brady	Hitchcock	Nelson	Smith, Mich.
Brandegee	Hughes	Newlands	Stone
Colt	Kellogg	Phelan	Vardaman
Cummins	Kendrick	Poindexter	Walsh
Fall	Kirby	Pomerene	Watson
Gallinger	Knox	Robinson	Wolcott
Gerry	Lewis	Saulsbury
Goff	McLean	Shields

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, at this time I wish to offer the amendment which I sent to the desk a short time ago, and which I understand is agreeable to the Senator in charge of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 22, at the end of line 6, after the word "essential," insert the following proviso:

Provided, That all salaries and wages paid under the provisions of this act shall be the equivalent of salaries and wages paid in other departments of the Government for like services.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator permit me before he speaks on the amendment to say just a word?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the minority Members of the Senate have been sitting here for four or five years and have witnessed frequent repetitions of the performance which we have just observed on the roll call, taken on the committee amendment regarding civil service. I want to put into the RECORD the prediction that before the expiration of the present Congress the President by Executive order will cover all these places into the civil service that have been filled by Democrats.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if that was not done immediately after the close of the Spanish-American War by President McKinley.

Mr. PENROSE I do not remember. I supposed we were going to get a higher grade of employees after Democracy came into power.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, we have just eliminated the civil-service rule so far as it applies to this bill in the appointment of employees. I think all Senators agree with me that inasmuch as we are to vote a lump sum without any reference to salaries there ought to be some limitation. The only limitation that I propose is that the salaries and wages shall correspond with like salaries and wages paid in other departments of the Government for like services. I understand there is no objection to the amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to it so far as I am concerned.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am in full accord with the spirit of the amendment, but it seems to me to be so very vague and indefinite that a man possessing the ordinary ability to control prices would have no difficulty in fixing the salaries to suit himself under the amendment, because it will be found impossible to show that the individual belonged to any particular class. Hence you can not get a comparison.

Mr. OVERMAN. He would have to go into one of the regular classes. There is a class at $900; there is a class at $1,200; a class at $1,400; a class at $1,600; and a class at $1,800 a year. Those are fixed by law. Take stenographers, typewriters, or messengers, the pay of all those positions is absolutely fixed by law. Any one covered by this amendment would be paid a salary according to his class. All the appropriation bills fix salaries according to classes, and instead of making the appointment without respect to class the appointment would have to be made according to the class of the service to be performed.

Mr. REED. I do not agree with the Senator at all. I do not think, under the terms of the bill, they would be required to appoint by any strict class. I do not think any classes exist at present that would embrace many of the employees they will have to use here.

Mr. OVERMAN. It applies only to clerical positions. Other positions, of course, are not fixed.

Mr. REED. For instance, Mr. Hoover now tells us, according to the latest reports, that they propose entirely to take away the farmer's market for wheat, and that would seem to imply that the Government is going to put out agents to buy wheat. If that is done, how would you classify such an agent?

What I say about this matter is not in the way of criticizing the effort that is being made by the Senator from North Dakota, but to ask him if there is not some further limitation that should be embraced in his amendment, that no one should receive a salary above a certain amount, and those who perform a clerical service shall be classified in the manner indicated by the Senator from North Carolina indicates that they are classified. I do not agree with him on that. I think the bill as it is now drawn gives an absolutely wide-open authority to those who may execute it to pay any kind of salary they want. There is no limitation upon it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think it would be possible to make it more definite under the circumstances. I can not imagine any line of employees under the bill that would be particularly different from the lines of employees in the several other branches of the Government and especially in the Agricultural Department. We now have inspectors. We have crop inspectors, and we now provide for those who are skilled in the grading of grain. We have instructors along every line of agriculture in other departments, and the pay of all is fixed by law and by rule. It seems to me that that is the only way, and that the nearest we can approach a degree of fairness and definiteness is by the provision which I offer, which I will read again:

Provided, That all salaries and wages paid under the provisions of this act shall be the equivalent of salaries and wages paid in other departments of the Government for like services.

I do not think it could be made more definite or more equitable.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, it seems to me the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota is a wise precaution to take. It prevents favoritism. If the amendment is adopted then there will be no such thing as paying a large salary to somebody. Salaries of five or ten thousand dollars might be paid under this appropriation. If this amendment is passed it will be a curb upon those who fix the salaries. It seems to me it ought to pass.

Mr. REED. I move to amend the amendment by adding the following:

In no event shall any salary be paid in excess of $3,500.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am willing to have the amendment voted on. I would sooner leave it in the form it now is because there might be some instance in which an expert might be required, where the salary paid in any other department would be more than that amount.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I was just going to suggest that I doubt whether the salary should be fixed at $3,500. While as a general proposition $3,500 is more than the average salary paid in some instances where peculiar skill is required they receive more. So I think the limitation proposed by the Senator from North Dakota would be safe.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Oregon has stated himself out of court. His claim is that the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota puts a sufficient limitation and insures very moderate salaries, yet when I offer an amendment limiting a salary to $3,500, the Senator in charge of the bill says there may be those whom they will want to pay greater salaries, which is, in other words, an open confession that there is in fact no real limitation carried by the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota, that it can be easily gotten by, and that there can be jobs under it that will pay more than $3,500 a year. I predict there will be jobs made here that will pay better than $10,000 a year if we leave it as it is. I commend the Senator from North Dakota for having gone as far as he does, but I should like to have a maximum put on it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think for expert service in any line in the Agricultural Department, and perhaps in none of the others is there a salary of more than $3,500 paid, but I do think that there are probably in each of the departments experts in certain lines whose salary and compensation is more than $2,500. I think the Senator fixed the limit a little too low in placing it at $2,500.

Mr. REED. I did not fix it at $2,500. I said $3,500.

Mr. McCUMBER. I did not understand the Senator. I think there are few if any getting $3,500.

Mr. PAGE. Before the Senator from North Dakota sits down I should like to ask him a question. Does he not think that the rule which would obtain under the amendment of the Senator from Missouri would result in making pretty much every man who is appointed to a particular place classified as a $3,500 man?

Mr. McCUMBER. I am a little afraid there might be an excuse of that kind. I think, as I stated in the beginning, it is safer to leave it as I had drawn it so that the salaries would be the same as those paid in other departments for similar services.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER].

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

